BRO. GRANT:—The enclosed article was written for the Morning Star, and sent there for publication, with request that it might be returned if the editor did not see fit to publish it. The editor remarks concerning it:—"This article of yours impresses me as on the whole fair and temperate; but doubting the value of a protracted discussion, which would thus be opened, I returned the manuscript according to your wish."

Thus it seems that Mr. Root's statement that "the Morning Star is ready to publish any rejoinder which may be sent to it in candor, and the first affirmative article is already published," was unauthorized—a random remark, like many other things said in his articles published against us in the Star. I hope that the Star will now cease to publish such tirades against us, since they have refused a reply to them. However, I think the editor's note to me declining to publish was in no wise unworthy of his delicate position as editor of a religious journal.

I. K. LOMBARD.

WHEREIN ARE ADVENTISTS "INFIDELS?"

MR. EDITOR:—An article appeared in the Star for the 12th of Feb. last, signed "S. E. Root," in which he attempts to make it appear that Adventists are infidels. My attention was called to it some time in March by some of my brethren in Bangor,—where Mr. Root resides, and where I have preached frequently in the last year,—with a suggestion that I had better reply to it through the Star. I then thought it doubtful whether you would choose to publish a direct reply, and hence did not think it worth while to write. But the article soon gave rise to a correspondence between the author and Bro. Baker, to whom he wrote agreeing to discuss orally, and added, "The Morning Star is ready to publish any rejoinder which may be sent to it in candor, and the first affirmative article is already published." And further, he remarks, "I am ready to sustain the ground taken, and with the same readers who have read the first article. . . . I hold myself in readiness to reply, if my position is attacked in the Morning Star."

In view of these statements I thought it proper to notice his article with some care, trusting that my reply will not be rejected for lack of "candor." I will here remark by way of explanation that, though I prefer generally to address one filling the sacred office of a minister of Christ as "Bro." rather than "Mr.," I am in this case practically compelled to use the latter term. For if he is sincere in charging us with infidelity, he cannot desire our fellowship, and if not sincere in making such a serious charge, he does not deserve our fellowship.

If the charge of infidelity was made in this case only to those who know us, we might well afford to pass it by in silence, as unworthy of notice, assured that our lives, as well as our views, would be a sufficient refutation. And when we remember, too, that the better class of christians have borne the charge in every age, and that even Christ was called a "blasphemer," a "wine-bibber," a "gluttonous man, a friend of publicans and sinners"; was charged with being "beside himself," "mad," having a "devil," "deceiving the people," etc., we need not wonder if, in seeking to follow them, we share in some measure "the fellowship of his sufferings."

But the article from Mr. Root has been read by many, no doubt, who are not sufficiently acquainted with us to decide for themselves how far his charges are just; and who, in their attempt to do justice to the writer, are likely to do injustice to us. There seems in this consideration alone a sufficient reason for noticing the article.

It is a fact worthy of remark that throughout the article Mr. R. has not quoted a passage of Scripture! This seems peculiar indeed in an argument arraigning and condemning us as infidels, when he by such an act claims a superior love for the Bible, assuming to be a sort of guardian of the Scriptures, and defender of the faith! Such omission, however, has been a common fault with those who have assumed the position of "corrector of heretics" in former times, and is no less significant here. But I can assure him that he cannot find a religious article written by an Adventist, one half as long as his, without several passages of Scripture.

In harmony with this omission, it must be apparent to any one who will read his article with this idea in view, that he does not there labor to try and condemn us by the Bible, the only Christian standard, but by generally accepted opinion, assuming that the majority must be right as a matter of course!

But is the fact that we are in the minority in a religious issue a sufficient evidence that we are wrong? When the adherents of Christianity have ever been in the minority in comparison with the Pagans, the Protestants in comparison with the Catholics, and, since the days of Constantine, the true believers compares with mere professors, we should hardly do well to despise the minority in a religious issue as being necessarily wrong. And if we compare Noah and his family, comprising eight persons, with the probable millions of sixteen centuries progress; Lot, and his two daughters, with the inhabitants of the four cities of the plain; Joshua and Caleb with the mass of their kindred who fell in the wilderness; Elijah and his faithful "seven thousand" with the five millions of Jews then given to idolatry; the few faithful friends who could be found to stand by Christ in his adversity with the multitudes who followed him in his prosperity; and, in addition to all, if we consider the corruptions of Christianity in past ages, and the degeneracy of the present, we need not wonder that Christ calls his people a "little flock." Luke 12: 32. Or, as Adam Clarke renders it, "a double diminutive,—a little, little flock."

Nor will it bear with any more force against us to urge that we are a despised minority. For our Master also, whom we love, was "despised and rejected of men." And, in relation to the treatment we might expect, he assured us that "the disciple is not above his master, nor the servant above his lord"; and further declared, "Ye shall be hated of all men." Paul, too, belonged to "a sect every where spoken against," and declared that he was "accounted as the filth of this world and the offscouring of all things," and that "they who will live godly in Christ Jesus shall suffer persecution." And Stephen inquires, "Which of the prophets have not your fathers persecuted?" So, the godly have ever been a persecuted people,—the prophets before Christ, the early believers with Christ, and all the holy since Christ. We observe it in the purer and better days of the Puritans, Baptists, Methodists, Free-will Baptists, and others, as well as Adventists. It grew out of their separation and distinction from the world, and waned away as they became conformed to the world. Persecution for Christ's sake is the christian's glory; the want of it is the worldly professor's shame.

I suspect, however, that the principle hinge on which Mr. Root would have the issue turn against us is, that we are not reputed to be evangelical. His use of this term in his article seems to imply this. But the term has been so often granted to the evil, and refused to the good, and is in general so variously and capriciously applied, that it is a matter of little consequence who bears it, or who bestows it. In its general use, like "the harp of a thousand strings," subject to the fancy or prejudice of the operator, it has served both to approve and condemn most of the doctrines and churches now held as evangelical.

The Catholics reject the Protestants as not evangelical; and the Protestants in turn reject the Catholics for the same reason. The Episcopalians rejected the Puritans and dissenters generally because they dissented from certain corruptions in the established church, borrowed from the Papacy; and the Puritans in turn rejected them because they did not dissent. The Calvinist Baptists were for a long time held off for their ultra views on baptism, election, and close-communion; and they equally rejected others for want of these things; while now there is a practical admission that each other is evangelical, notwithstanding these differences. The Methodists were for a long time rejected with contempt, and called all sorts of hard names by other denominations, because of their doctrines; but now they are quite evangelical, because of the same doctrines. The Free-will Baptists were once despised and hated like the Methodists, and were no more evangelical in the estimation of the "standing order" than the Adventists are to-day, as viewed by other denominations; but time has wrought her usual changes with them, and now, with grave doubts, they inquire of younger denominations, "Are you evangelical?"

If the term has a definite signification, according to its general application, it must be about the same as the Quaker gave to "orthodox," which he said meant "uppermost." Nor is this an idle remark, for in the history of every denomination of true believers, their earlier days are their purest days, and present their noblest deeds of self-denial and piety, and their richest experiences of love and spirituality. And yet, while in the enjoyment of these rich favors and experiences from God, they did not enjoy the credit of being "evangelical" from older churches. Indeed, no church, now enjoying the title, received it till she had measurably departed from the fervor of her first love and become more or less conformed to the world, and especially to the standard of piety in those worldly churches which, like colleges, claim as their peculiar prerogative the right to bestow titles of dignity. This principle is so manifest that the most worldly churches are admitted to be evangelical with the least scruple. So, in view of the fearful price of spirituality and devotion to truth which we must pay in order to secure and retain the title, I dare not commend its possession, nor an ambition to secure it, as generally bestowed.

But if to be evangelical means to be a christian, in the Bible sense of the word; as implying a fervent love for God, his word, and his ways; in meekness, humility, and simplicity; in patience, self-denial, and deadness to the world; I claim that Adventists, though not all I wish they were, nor what they have been, are as truly evangelical as any other believers in our country. It is for these possessions that I love them as brethren, and when I can find a better people, God helping me, I'll love them more.

We will now proceed to notice some of the particular statements of Mr. Root. He lays down as a general principle that "differences of opinion, or of Scripture interpretation, do not constitute infidelity." But what does he mean by quoting this principle here, when he refuses to Adventists the benefit of it? By such a principle he would profess to allow the fullest liberty to differ in opinion, and the broadest license to interpret the Scripture as a man may choose, and still be a christian; but Adventists, however faithful to God, his word, and his ways, are only infidels! I can not account for this strange departure from his chosen principle, except on the ground of a common maxim, that "whom a man fears he hates, and whom he hates he fears." However, if Adventists did not encounter such treatment, they would lack an essential characteristic in a follower of Him who "was despised and rejected of men." So we can better afford to suffer it for Christ's sake, than to fail of this essential mark in his disciples.

"All christians," he says, "believe in the second advent of Christ." Then those professors who deny that he will come again,—and there are many such,—are not christians. He says that all christians "believe" in the second advent of Christ. Will he say that they truly love the same? There are but a few who delight to hear on the subject; and yet, all christians delight to hear what they truly believe. I think I may say safely, that a majority of professors of religion dread more than they love the thought of Christ's second coming. Hence their faith in his coming, unlike that which "works by love," partakes too much of that kind of faith which makes them "tremble."

He complains that "Adventists consider the churches as Babylon, in which none can be saved, and teach that all God's people must come out of the churches and join them, or else perish in the overthrow of Babylon." In this he is partly right. A considerable number of preachers and others among us apply the term Babylon to churches generally, Protestant as well as Catholic; but a far larger number apply the term exclusively to the Catholics, while others still are undecided. But it is a very small number, not three in a hundred, who would claim that none can be saved in the churches; though, like other churches, most of us believe that the spiritual advancement of believers would be more promising among ourselves than those opposed to us. And as to wishing others to come and join us, we are probably something like our neighbors about that; but what is of more consequence, honoring our convictions that we are on the right side of the issues between ourselves and others, we would have them unite with us in defense of the right.

His disposition to class us with that "Liberal Christianity, quoting the Scripture to rid itself of Christ and his salvation," may suit his spleen, but it cannot commend his candor. So when he charges us with "an open attempt to destroy confidence in evangelical Christianity," because we take exceptions to the worldliness so manifest among professors of religion every where; and with "a clear and undeniable effort to falsify some of the plainest and most important doctrines of the Bible, even at the sacrifice of the Bible itself," because of "the doctrine put forth by Adventists that man is not an immortal being," I think I have reason to feel gratified that it is not my side of the question that has to bear the burden of such service.

Such charges are not very modest, to say the least, but we will accept of them as the expression of his heart, since "out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh." But mere assertions are cheaper than arguments sometimes, though most men would prefer to use arguments when they have them. It is not a difficult thing for Mr. Root to say that "man is an immortal being," but should he seek for evidence to support the assertion, he would find it "the pursuit of knowledge under difficulties," though he claims it to be one of "the plainest . . . doctrines of the Bible." Immortal beings never die. But man does, as all Scripture and experience agree. Job says that "man dieth and wasteth away."—Job 14: 10. Paul says, "In Adam all die."—1 Cor. 15: 22. Again, "it is appointed unto men once to die, and after this the judgment."—Heb. 9: 27. Adventists believe this, and hence are called infidels by Mr. R.

He complains that Hudson "attempts to settle the question on purely rational grounds." But is it contrary to the practice of Christian writers generally to inquire whether the Christian system, or any doctrine of that system, is not agreeable to reason? Jehovah says, "Come and let us reason together." Of the same import is the passage from Mr. Root,—his conclusions are established before he reaches the Scripture." Rev. I. M. Post, of St. Louis, wrote a work against our views a few years ago in two parts; the first part took up, and professed to settle the subject in the light of nature; the second in the light of revelation. Prof. Hudson has pursued the same course on our side. Is it infidelity to adopt the orthodox style of reasoning on this question? Mr. Root seems to argue thus. He finds fault with Hudson because he doubts "if an exclusively scriptural argument will prove satisfactory to very many"; as though it is infidelity to talk in such a strain. But Mr. Hudson had evidently learned such "infidelity" from an old book, in which it is declared that "men love darkness rather than ligh,t" and "the natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit." Probably Mr. Root would do well to try Mr. Hudson's infidelity by this book instead of his own notions.

Another proof that we are infidels is, that "Adventism teaches what infidelity has always taught." If this would prove us infidels, I could as easily prove that those occupying Mr. Root's position on immortality are both heathen and infidels, for his view has been abundantly taught by both. Most of those occupying his side are glad to number the heathen on their side of the question, and they do it so greedily as to get more than belongs to them, often. The statement that "it is a common remark in Advent meetings that if our doctrine is not true we have no confidence in the Bible," is a mistake. I have attended thousands of Advent meetings, of various kinds, as campmeetings, conferences, ordinary preaching meetings, prayer-meetings, etc., I have met with them and preached to them in twelve different States, and I do not remember to have heard anything like it. I know it does not sound like Adventists.

He gives a singular proof that Adventists are infidels in the claim that on the passing of the "43" time "hundreds, if not thousands, threw away their Bibles and became open and avowed infidels," and that "occasional defections have followed since." I think it not improbable but he may find as many such who were once Adventists, and I have no doubt but he can find as many such who were once Freewill Baptists. I will leave with these facts the case of Judas, "one of the twelve." and the numerous apostasies from christianity, even under the superintendence of the apostles, for Mr. Root's consideration, with as much time to draw the moral conclusion as he chooses. But the singular feature in this objection is, that from a body of infidels he should observe in their history "occasional defections" toward infidelity! Does Mr. Root forget in this objection that he was trying to prove us infidels as a body? It would seem so. I think he would find our "infidelity" generally invisible to him if he would indulge more candor and less prejudice in his estimate of us.

His quotation from Thurman I pass by with his remarks upon it, since he never was an Adventist, and is never likely to be, judging from present indications. So also with his quotation from Bayne, who with his book is unknown to Adventists. His pretended quotation from Ellis and Read is evidently spurious. I have carefully observed every page in the book, and there is nothing there resembling it. It reads:—"Dr. B. [Bartlett] quotes Ellis and Read as asserting that death to the sinner is extinction of being, and that no amount of the clearest testimony could teach the opposite; that if the Bible should teach the opposite, its teachings would be contradictory; and teaching yea and nay of the same doctrine, we might be fully justified in rending our Bible to pieces, and scattering them to the four winds of heaven as unworthy of the slightest regard."

This quotation is professedly taken from the 341st page of Ellis and Read's book (Bible vs. Tradition), but there are but three hundred and eleven pages in the book, index and all. What comes nearest to it is found on page 241, and reads:—"If these exceedingly emphatic expressions do not teach the utter annihilation of the being of the wicked, we ask how can any language possibly teach it?" But no man, and least of all a christian man, can be excused in making this language read as given by Mr. Root. I repeat it, the quotation is spurious. It is evidently made up of Dr. Bartlett's conjectures, with Mr. Root's gloss added. When men resort to such measures as this to maintain their charges against others, they ought to remember that no good cause will accept of such service.

I see nothing else in the article worthy of notice, and hence will draw my reply to a close. I am not ambitious of controversy, and do not choose to invite or provoke a further consideration of the subject. Should Mr. Root continue his side by noticing this reply to him, I shall not feel that I am bound to continue the discussion as a matter of course, though I may add something further, if it seems due. Respectfully yours,

South Exeter, Me., June 10th, 1868.

For the World's Crisis.

A SHORT SERMON.—No. 4.

"Let your speech be alway with grace."—Col. 4: 6.

Words! how simple, and yet how wonderful. They are eternal and ceaseless in their roll. They speed their way amid the ocean of thought, written and rewritten and reiterated, finding their way into strange countries, and are transformed into other tongues. They live while the instrument that produced them ceases to exist. Like the ripple on the ocean they roll in unlimited depths. Their home is in heaven, and their record in the book of judgment. By them cometh justification, or by them we are condemned. They send us to prison, or burst the door of confinement. Through them cometh life, or by them we are sentenced to death.

They are the only heralds of knowledge with which the world is blessed. On their bright pinions is wafted the news of the day over land and under the sea. Winged by lightning, or hurled by steam they go to friend or foe. They bring the tidings of victories won, or tell the sad tale of a bloody defeat. They come with the sweet fragrance of friendship's wreath, or they come with the bitterness of long treasured enmity. Their sound may be like the harpings of seraph, or like the moaning of a winter's wind. But go they must, and go they will. The instrument of words is never still. On land or sea, in cold or heat, they constantly greet us with truth or deceit.

There is no excuse for unkind words. They only tend to harden the speaker, and demoralize the hearer. They are the honey of slander, the choice of the vulgar, the oil stone of the backbiter, and the language of fools. Their origin is from beneath, and their only tendency is downward. They are only fit to form chains of vice, by which the virtuous may be bound. They lodge beneath the folds of poverty and filth. They constitute the discordant sounds of the bacchanalian, and the bugle scream of the mob.

They abide nowhere, but as the pestilence seem to spoil the peace of all. He that will harbor them is to be pitied. They should be shunned as poison and treated with disgust. They are the bane of society, and the fruit of ignorance. When converted into slanderous weapons, they are susceptible of inflicting injuries deeper and more damning than all earth's death weapons combined. Better approach that man or woman in the stealthiness of a midnight assassin, and rob them of life so dear, in the suddenness of a pistol's flash, than to array them before a public gaze on a slanderous tongue. Ah! worse. Better innoculate them with disease that would eat them alive, and thus render them objects of sympathy, than to lift them in the arms of slander, so that they shall fall into the lowest depths of ruin, with nought but shame and disgrace to compose their winding sheet.

Were the hounds of hell all untied,
And each placed on some innocent's victim's track,
A wound to compare, might be defied,
With that inflicted by a slanderous clack.

For this reason does the sin of slander enjoy for its classmates murder, drunkenness, haters of God, inventors of evil things, idolaters, covenant breakers, implacable, unmerciful, who, knowing the jugdments of God, that they which commit such things are worthy of death, not only do the same, but have pleasure in them that do them.

If any man offend not in word, the same is a perfect man, and able also to bridle the whole body. Some have the faculty of so bridling the tongue as not to speak even to their fellows; and yet at will they can speak of them in the most bitter terms. Listen to he description the apostle James gives of the tongue: "The tongueis a fire, a world of iniquity; so is the tongue among our members, that it defileth the whole body, and setteth on fire the course of nature, and it is set on fire of hell." What an awful picture! and yet it is no exaggeration; it but faintly draws the dark shadows and blighting curses that an evil tongue is sure to inflict. It is not necessary that guilt should pave the way for the engine of slander to drive its thundering train from house to house; but prejudice, or envy, or jealousy, may constitute its only foundation; so that the innocent may suffer far more than the guilty. Let an innocent person once become the victim of slander, and it is easy to detect guilt where naught but purity dwells. Every act is made to indicate wrong, every look is full of suspicions, and every word is interpreted to mean only evil; and so the train of slander glides on, laden with fiendish store, fired and steamed by coals of hell; until, perhaps, the innocent sufferer shall be overcome, and in grief fall into ruin's yawning gulf.

No sin is more damning in its tendency than the sin of slander; hence there is no sin punishable with a darker threatening by divine retribution than is this. No christian should allow himself to harbor evil thoughts, much less give utterance to them against any, without the most positive proof of guilt; and then it were better to go to such an one wtth words of kindness, and see if restoration is not preferable to slander or ruin.

ANCIENT HEBREW CYPHER.

In the "Complete Analysis of the Bible," by Rev. N. West, is a brief sketch of each book, its authenticity, contents, scope, by whom written, etc. In speaking of the book of Jeremiah, the following interesting paragraph occurs:

"There are some peculiarities in his writings, of which the most curious are his use of a sort of secret writing, or cypher, called in Hebrew, 'Atbash,' which is a part of that secret learning of the Rabbins known as the Kabbala. This 'Atbash' consists in turning the Hebrew alphabet end for end, using the last letter instead of the first, the last but one instead of the second, and so on: as if in English we should put z, y, x, w, v, etc., instead of a, b, c, d, e, and should spell 'bad' by writing it yzw. Thus, in chap. 25: 26, the word 'Sheshach' is unintelligible; but if, according to the 'Atbash,' 'Babel' (i. e. Babylon) be substituted, a clear meaning appears. The same word, Sheshach, appears again, and can be treated in like manner, in chap. 51: 41; and the words translated 'in the midst of them that rise up against me,' in the first verse of that chapter, if treated in the above way, become 'Chasdim,' i. e. Chaldees."

The above, to say the least, is an interesting idea, and may possibly throw some light on the word Sheshach, in the 25th of Jeremiah, which heretofore has been a somewhat difficult term to explain.

— The best way for parents to train up children in the way they should go, is to travel that way occasionally themselves.

— I know one thing—if I stand by the principles of truth and duty, nothing can inflict upon me any permanent harm.

— When there is love in the heart, there are rainbows in the eyes, which cover every black cloud with gorgeous hues.

— If any one speaks evil of you, let your walk in life be such that none will believe him.

— Sorrows are like tempest clouds; when afar off they look black, but when above us scarcely gray.

— Don't cherish your sorrow; when God breaks our idols in pieces, it is not for us to put the broken bits together again.

— The road to ruin is always kept in good repair, and the traveler pays the expenses of it.

— Greatness consists in the facility and power of going down, and not in the facility of going up.

— Truth is one of the Almighty's attributes, and cannot be shamed. Intention constitutes the guilt of any action; execution only stamps its character.

— Let the day have a blessed baptism by giving your first waking thoughts into the bosom of God. The first hour of the morning is the rudder of the day.

— It is one of the worst effects of prosperity to make a man a vortex instead of a fountain; so that, instead of throwing out, he learns only to draw in.

Improve every moment to some valuable purpose. Cultivate an intimate acquaintance with the Scriptures. Reverence the name, the laws, and the worship of God.

— Life, like war, is a series of mistakes; and he is the best christian who wins the most splendid victories by the retrieval of mistakes.

— In the voyage of life we should imitate the ancient mariners, who without losing sight of the earth, trusted to the heavenly signs for their guidance.

— The power, wisdom and goodness of Divine Providence, must every day be believed by him who would live in peace and tranquility of soul.

— Passionate reproofs are like medicines given scalding hot; the patient cannot take them. If we wish to do good to those we rebuke, we should labor for meekness of wisdom, and use soft words for hard arguments.

— Never relax in adding to your stock of useful knowledge both by reading and meditation. If you read without meditation, you preach only the thoughts of others; if you meditate without reading, you will gain few ideas.

— A little Swedish girl was walking with her father one night under the starry sky, and intently meditating upon the glories of heaven. At last, looking up to the sky, she said, "Father, I have been thinking, if the wrong side of heaven is so beautiful, what will the right side be?"

It is deservedly accounted a piece of excellent knowledge to understand the laws of the land, how much more to know the statutes of heaven and the laws of eternity,—to know the will and pleasure of the Great Monarch and universal King. I have seen an end of all perfection, but the commandments of God are exceeding broad.—Sir Christopher Hatton.

— To see a father treating his sons like elder brothers, and to see sons coveting their father's company and conversation, because they think him the wisest and most agreeable man of their acquaintance, is the most amiable picture the eye can behold; it is a transplanted self-love, as sacred as friendship, as pleasurable as love, and as happy as religion can make it.

THE BOOK OF BOOKS.

It is no small triumph to the friends of Revelation to observe, that our religion has been admitted and defended by men of the most exalted understanding and of the strongest reasoning powers. The single testimony of David Rittenhouse in its favor, outweighs the declamations of the whole nations against it.—Dr. Rush.

I must confess to you, that the majesty of the Scriptures astonishes me, and the holiness of the Evangelists speaks to my heart, and has such strong and striking characters of truth, and is moreover so perfectly inimitable, that if it had been the invention of men, the inventors would be greater than the greatest heroes.—Rosseau.

Upon that sacred volume I rest my hope of eternal salvation, through the merits and blood of our blessed Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. This book is the bulwark of our republican institutions, the anchor of our present and future safety.—Andrew Jackson.

When I began my ministry I used to find many texts where I thought I could improve the reading, and so altered King James. Some fifteen years later, I found less occasion to alter, and now at the end of thirty years study I can only admire the excellence of our common version, and seldom attempt to improve a verse.—Prof. Stuart.

I have always found in my scientific studies, that when I could get the Bible to say anything upon the subject, it afforded me a firm platform to stand upon, another round in the ladder by which I could safely ascend.—Lieut. Maury.

As the beauty of the world is set off by a graceful variety, so it is with the Scriptures. There are sublime truths that the most aspiring reason of man cannot overstep. There are more plain and easy truths, on which the the weakest capacity may converse with delight and satisfaction. No man is offended with his garden for having a shady thicket in it; neither should we be offended with the word of God, that among so many fair and open walks we here and there meet with a thicket that the eye of human wisdom cannot look through.—Bishop Hopkins.

The Bible was written for the people—the common people—the mass—and if God had not meant the word of faith to be understood in a common sense way, he would have prepared the Bible with a dictionary.—Rev. James Caughey.

If you have ever tried it, you must have been struck with the few solid thoughts, the few suggestive ideas, which survive the perusal of the most brilliant of human books. Few of them can stand three readings, and of the memorabilia which you had marked in your first reading, on reverting to them you find that many of those were not so striking, or weighty, or original, as you thought. But the word of God is solid, it will stand a thousand readings, and the man who has gone over it the most frequently and carefully is the surest of finding new wonders there.—Rev. James Hamilton.

I have for many years made it a practice to read through the Bible once a year. My custom is to read four or five chapters every morning immediately after rising from my bed, it employs about an hour of my time, and seems to me the most suitable manner of beginning the day. In what light soever we regard the Bible, whether with reference to revelation, to history or morality, it is invaluable, an inexhaustible mine of knowledge and virtue.—John Quincy Adams.

ONLY A NEGATIVE.

"Let me look at your lesson, if it troubles you, Rose."

Rose started as she roused from her reverie, and saw that her father had been studying her face instead of his sermon.

"I did not mean to trouble you, Papa. It is not my lesson, although these fractions have troubled me a good deal to-day."

"Something worse than fractions, then?" asked Mr. Fairbanks, tenderly.

"Yes, father, something worse than broken numbers—broken purposes and almost broken courage. The more I try to do right, the more I am sure to do wrong. When I try to be patient, and really think I have been, something that I did not look for comes up, and I speak before I think; and then I am sorry and begin again; and then do the very same thing the next half hour. I am almost sorry—I mean I am almost afraid I never was a christian at all."

Poor Rose. She had come out from a large band of schoolmates alone, and taken her stand for Christ. At home there was so much of joy in the change, and such an atmosphere of tender love around her, that she was very happy in her new hope. At school it was very different. There she found many crosses heavy to bear. She felt keenly that her every act was closely criticised, and at times she felt tempted to resent remarks made by some companion when she failed in any respect to do just right. The words of the sweet hymn were often in her heart and upon her lips, as she struggled to be more like him in her daily walk before his friends and foes.

"Must Jesus bear the cross alone?"

A new trial came up during the Algebra recitation that afternoon; and Rose could not forget the wrong feelings she had indulged because some one older than she had been ordered to take the chalk from her and correct an unfinished example which she had been vainly trying to work upon the dreaded blackboard.

"Do you remember, Rose," asked her father presently, "any good man in the Bible who felt very much as you do to-night?"

"I do not know who you mean, father."

"Take your Bible and read the 15th verse of the 7th of Romans."

Rose found the place and read:

"For that which I do I allow not: for what I would that I do not; but what I hate, that do I."

Rose did not stop with one verse. Her eye ran along over the next and the next, her face growing brighter and brighter until at length a smile broke all over it like sunshine from a cloud.

"Ah! you have got to the 25th verse, Rose, and that shows you where to look for help. If Paul had not felt this struggle between right and wrong, he would not have rejoiced so heartily that through Christ he could have the victory."

No more was said, just then. The pencil soon began to fly over the slate, and the pen to glide along the wide-lined sermon paper.

The next Sabbath Rose listened with eagerness as her father spoke of a religious life;—the failures in duty, the envy, impatience, and other faults which weary the christian, and at times almost lead him into the den of the Giant Despair. Then he said, "When the Artist takes your photograph, you know the first impression is faint—the outline is there, and correctly traced, but looking at that alone, you would hardly recognize the original. When, however, it has been subjected to the chemical process which completes the picture, it stands out clearly and beautifully the exact likeness of yourself."

Rose was comforted. "Only a Negative! Only a Negative!" she repeated to herself, walking slowly homeward. "I do not suppose any one is perfect here, but if Christ is our pattern there will came a time when we shall be like him—'brought out' into a true and faithful picture. Only a Negative! but I hope I shall become more and more like the pattern, here; and not feel quite discouraged when I do fail, remembering that we are to be 'like him when we shall see him as he is.'"—"Advance."

BE KIND TO ONE ANOTHER.

"Be ye kindly affectioned one to another, with brotherly love."—Rom. 12. 10.

Whatever brawls disturbs the street,
There should be peace at home;
Where sisters dwell, and brothers meet,
Quarrels should never come.

Pardon, O Lord! our childish rage;
Our little brawls remove;
That as we grow to riper age,
Our hearts may all be love.

SOME GOOD COMPARISONS.

A little boy who had plenty of cents, dropped one into the missionary box, laughing as he did so. He had no thought in his heart about Jesus, the heathen, or the missionary. His was a tin penny. It was as light as a scrap of tin.

Another boy put a penny in, and as he did so, looked around with a self-applauding gaze, as if he had done some great thing. His was a brass penny. It was not the gift of a "lowly heart," but of a proud spirit.

A third gave a penny, saying to himself, "I suppose I must because all the others do." That was an iron penny. It was the gift of a cold, hard heart.

As a fourth boy dropped his penny in the box, he shed a tear, and in his heart said, "Poor heathens! I'm sorry they are so poor, so ignorant, and so miserable." That was a silver penny. It was the gift of a heart full of pity.

But there was one scholar who gave his cent with a throbbing heart, saying to himself, "For thy sake, O loving Jesus, I give this penny, hoping that the poor heathen whom thou lovest, will believe in thee, and become thy disciples." That was a golden penny, because it was the gift of love.

All our actions may be compared in this way. Children, did you ever stop to consider the motives for your conduct, and the spirit in which you act? It is not obedience to do in a pettish manner what you are told to do. "God knoweth the heart."—Advent Review.

I love the Lamb who died for me,
I love his little lamb to be;
I love the Bible, where I find
How good my Savior was, and kind;
I love beside his cross to stay;
I love the grave where Jesus lay;
I love his people and their ways,
I love with them to pray and praise;
I love the Father and the Son,
I love the Spirit he sent down;
I love to think the time will come
When I shall be with him at home.

THE PROMISE KEPT.

The following, from an exchange, is worth reading. A mother, on the green hills of Vermont, was holding by the right hand a son, sixteen years old, mad with a love of the sea. And as she stood by the garden gate one morning, she said: "Edward, they tell me, for I never saw the ocean, that the great temptation of a seaman's life is drink. Promise me, before you quit your mother's hand, that you will never drink." "And," said he (for he told me the story,) "I gave the promise, and I went the broad globe over, Calcutta and the Mediterranean, San Francisco, the Cape of Good Hope, the North Pole and the South. I saw them all in forty years, and I never saw a glass of liquor that my mother's form by the gate did not rise before me; and to-day I am innocent of the taste of liquor." Was not that sweet evidence of the power of a single word? Yet this was not half. "For," said he, "yesterday there came into my counting-room a man of forty years, and asked me, 'Do you know me?' 'No.' 'Well,' said he, 'I was once brought drunk into your presence on ship-board; you were a passenger; the captain kicked me aside; you took me to your berth and kept me there till I had slept off the intoxication; you then asked me if I had a mother. I said I had never known a word from her lips. You told me of yours at the garden gate, and to-day I am master of one of the finest packets in New York; and I came to ask you to come and see me.'"

HE HAS NO MOTHER.

Sitting one day in the schoolroom, I overheard a conversation between a sister and brother. The little boy complained of insults or wrongs received from another little boy. His little face was flushed with anger. The sister listened a while; and then, turning away she answered. "I don't want to hear another word. Willie has no mother." The brother's lips were silent; the rebuke came home to him; and, stealing away, he muttered, "I never thought of that." He thought of his own mother, and the loneliness of "Willie" compared with his own happy lot. "He has no mother." Do we think of it when want comes to the orphan, and rude words assail him? Has the little wanderer a mother to listen to his little sorrows? Speak gently to him, then.—S. S. Visitor.

THE NEW EARTH.

On Zion's heights, oh, let me stand,
With palm and timbrel in my hand;
And shouting victory o'er the past,
To sing redemption's song at last.

With all the chosen saints of God,
Through persecutions dark have trod;
But now exalted to the land,
Made pure and bright at God's command.

O, let my feet press lightly there,
The new-made earth surpassing fair,
And slake my thirst at life's fair stream,
While Christ is my immortal theme.

O, let me stand on Zion's height,
Where the day will ne'er be closed by night,
Nor pained to think 'twill pass away,
But one eternal round of day.

THOUGHTS ON A FEW THINGS.

ERROR IN A MIRROR: OR, AN OLD LIE SPIED.

Such is the dogma of the immortality of the soul. A mere dogma, a tradition, an hypothesis. A folly, a fable, an apostasy. Not merely dubitable, or debatable, but supposed, assumed, invented. Now how noticeably it happens, that not only from this false premise proceed directly false conclusions, but if we take one of the conclusions for a premise, the original fable is deduced from it. Thus from the root-fable grow the foul stocks of life in death, or life after death, and life eternal in misery, and fruitless wishing for death amid throes which thrive because of life which knows no death, or a so-called death which never dies. Now, assume for the moment the consciousness of the dead, or that death is only intensified life. Deny or pervert the word of God so as to make death mean life. Call dying living, call sleeping waking, call captivity freedom, make darkness light, make the worse best, understand words by contraries, believe God's word, only believe it exactly opposite in its meaning to its expression.

If a dead man is alive, then there is an immortal soul, then there is eternal misery. Or take death deathless, and wo endless, take misery in hell inextinct and inextinguishable, take torture and writhing and howling, take cursing and groaning and roaring for ever, make it a premise, and then you find this paganism of immortal soul issuing and proceeding from it. But if, on the contrary, a dead man is dead, and knows nothing, be assured he is not immortal. Thus, if any one of the deductions from the first premise is true, if any of the offspring of the parent-dogma be recognized, then you can reason backward and demonstrate the parent from the offspring, the root from the stock, or the immortality of the soul from its sequences. But if any of the sequences be false, then all is false, and the immortality of the soul is nowhere.

NEITHER SIN NOR MISERY ENDLESS.

Now let us take a look at a well-known verse in chapter first of James. "Then when lust hath conceived, it bringeth forth sin, and sin, when it is finished, bringeth forth death." It may be lawfully asked, Where is the sphere for the development of lust? Clearly on earth, and in this earthly and sinful state. For lust, as "unlawful desire," is a phenomenon and energy of a sinful mind, a carnal and fallen nature. It implies the existence of some object that excites and attracts its aim, whether in the working of covetousness, lasciviousness, or appetite. The "conception" of lust we understand to be its cherished exercise and allowed indulgences. It conceives, in the working and determinations of the will, as well as in acts following. The fruit is sin. The sphere, the theatre of sinful energies and acts, is on earth; it is in the probation of time, the limit of human life.

Have we the slightest intimation in God's word that hell is a theatre of lust? Are lost "immortal souls" devoured with this insatiable fire? That will do for the polytheistic heathenism to teach. That will do for the philosophy of the nation that invented the fable of Tantalus. But still it must be admitted that the theology of the nineteenth century teaches loudly and earnestly the endless activity of evil amid Gehennic flames, and on desolate, dreadful wastes. Does the Bible teach it? Is lust inflamed on those fiery wastes? Is it quenchless and inconsumable in the pit of wo? Does it rage in a bottomless abyss? Both the nutriment and victims of lust are earthly. Here are the inspirations of its baneful force. And so too of its sequent, sin, the ready sequent of incipient concupiscence. And where is sin found? On what soil does it flourish? Where are its incitements? Where are its products, various, dismal and dreadful? Who does not know that its diverse and awful fruit is seen and reaped here, in pain, sickness, desolation, and temporal death, while the Bible foretells its final and irreparable issue of eternal death?

Is it true, then, that sin is capable of being "finished"? Clearly so, by an implication, equal in force to an express affirmation. And why, then, shall we credit the doctrine of learned divinity which negates the word of God, and proclaims of sin an incapability of completion? Does not the "world of wo" by their showing teem with sin and sinners? Is not the immortal heart of the flaming victim forever eruptive with fruitless bitterness? Can the inexhaustible fountain of rage ever have its excesses suppressed or extinguished? Is not the popular theology fixed and immovable in contradicting such an absurdity as that sin can ever be finished? Is eternity long enough for the fury of the damned to exhaust itself, or for their wretched repinings ever to know oblivion?

According to the Bible, it is sin when it is finished that bringeth forth death. But if never finished, is it capable of this parturition? And so, then, let not this theology ever speak of death as the fate of the lost. It is certainly taking an unwarrantable liberty, in this view, to characterize the perdition of the lost as in any sense a death, if the sin that causes it is never finished; because, according to the Bible, it is sin finished that brings forth death.

Now it is better to believe the word of the Lord. Sin will be finished. Whether we take it as a completed act, or series of acts, the result is the same. Is it not singular that the phraseology should not be harmonious with the expository orthodoxy of our time? Why not have said, inspired James, that sin is the penalty of sin? Why not have said that sin shall be eternal? Why not have intimated eternal sin coupled with eternal misery? Why not have opened a glimpse of sin unfinished, forever vainly trying to bring forth death, but making a miserable abortion of torment forever? According to that theology, sin is never finished. Or if it is finished once, it is finished a thousand million times in eternity, and yet never finished after all. It brings forth death a thousand million times also, and that which is brought forth is never death after all. It is in fact openly represented to be an eternal dying; but oh, the amazing and monstrous spectacle of an eternal dying that never can die! Is that dying, that never can die? Is that going that never goes? Is that living that never lives?

To die is to stop living. To be dying is to be in the act and process of ceasing to live, or that which immediately precedes a cessation of life. But if death does not really occur, then the process preceding is not dying. It may be distressed living, but dying it is not. How much less is it death? And yet so perplexed and extraordinary is the tenor and tenet of theological opinion, that living in misery is death. Why, it is the opposite, is it not? If death is not death, then we should like to inquire whether sin is really sin? Is there not some mistake here? Does not the Bible in speaking of sin intend to represent something else, for example, weakness, accident, misfortune, or vagary? Why should the accepted and diplomatized theology stop at one act of mis-construction?

Now from James we learn that sin is finished or completed; that sin finished brings forth death, not dying. But if it brought forth dying, dying would end in death, or else it would not be dying. The dictum of a "dying that never dies," * therefore, is just fit to go along with the other falsehood of Satan, that Adam and Eve should never die if they sinned. No, I am not so sure that it is fit to go along with it. For the saying of the enemy was simply an insinuating and audacious lie. But this is a lie, absurd, perplexed, and inconsistent in its very expression; a lie not only in fact, but a puzzle and a falsehood in enunciation.

Thus it is meant to teach that the wicked shall never die. It actually represents their portion to be death. And yet it implies that this death is a wonderful life, whereas whatever is death never needs to die. In short, what incongruity and incomprehensibleness! Only think of a sleep that can never sleep. How much sleep is there in it, then? Only think of a resting that never rests; of a breath that never breathes; of a seeing that never sees; of a thinking that never thinks; of a knowing that never knows! What kind of seeing, thinking and knowing have we in the theories that are most earnestly advocated? Let us be sober and sensible and true.

Now it is something worth knowing, and worth the while to know, that death is an extinction, which will include not only the sinner, but his sin; not only the sin, but the soil where it grows, the fountain from which it emanates. If the sinner can not be reformed or saved, the best possible that can be done is annihilation. Modern theology proposes to preserve both sin and sinner; proposes to give the sinner a tremendous stimulus to sin to all eternity; proposes to give him a theatre for the exacerbation of his dreadful moral disease, the license of eternal duration for his crimes, in some fiery or dreadful enclosure, where sin and torment shall forever be running a race,—where sin is never finished, and death never comes,—where wo is ever rampant, and wrath never satisfied,—where wickedness and terrors are magnified on a scale of vehemence which no imagination can conceive, no wisdom modify, no ages exhaust, and no power abolish.

Where, to-day, may be a Bosphorus of bitterness, shall be, by and by, a Pacific Ocean of both guilt and wo. Where, to-day, is the dismal confusion of exasperated and desperate outcries of agony, shall one day be such a hurly-burly of unprecedented and awful howlings as would almost threaten to shake down the fire-proof prison walls of perdition. A perdition, alas! that is only a perpetuation eternally of ten thousand wretches in life, double locked with the griping fetters of guilt and pain. Well, we must leave the subject for to-day, and leave the "immortality of the soul" that bringeth forth "eternal torment"; leave the fervent champions of this heterodoxy to their deep contemplations of this great mystery. May the Lord lead some, aye, as many as he will, to know and confess the truth. CLINTON COLEGROVE.

Sardinia, N. Y.

* It is a violation of propriety to speak of a death that dies, or a death that never dies. There is no perspicuity or meaning in such an expression. It is true, symbolically, in revelation, death is cast into the lake of fire. By which we learn that death will never devastate earth again. If, however, we press the expressions above to the utmost, we might conclude that if death should die, the victims of death would come to life again, or that there never would be any additions to their number. If death can never die, then either those who are dead will remain eternally dead, or else there will be continually new victims of this dread destroyer to all eternity. When death is cast into the lake of fire, the work of death is forever arrested, but none of its victims, we know, are delivered, because whosoever was not found in the book of life was cast into the same lake, and destroyed in the same fire. That it is temporal death which is destroyed, we infer from hades being precipitated with it. And after the resurrected wicked are destroyed, there is not much probability of any further work for death forever.

For the World's Crisis.

"A LITTLE WHILE."

There is no subject of more thrilling interest to the faithful followers of Christ than the subject of his second coming. In him centre our deepest affections, and the brightest rays of hope cluster around the dawn of that glorious day. Then faith will be changed to joyful sight; tears and sorrow will be wiped away; long severed ties will be eternally united; and we shall behold him whom we have longed for, of whom we have loved to talk about, and for whom we have waited with prayerful and anxious hearts. The evidences of his soon coming are like the ruling orb of night, around which the lesser lights revolve in unison, the combined rays of which shed glorious light upon a world, struggling under the enormous load of iniquity, and groaning under the darkness of Satanic rule.

The thought that he is near is a joyful one. It cheers the lonely, weary heart, and bids the waiting flock look up, for the dawning of redemption's morning already illuminates their pathway. A glorious crown awaits the faithful. They shall be "kings and priests unto God, and shall reign upon the earth." The rapidly accumulating evidence which assures us that our King is soon to come forth in royal majesty, when we shall behold him in his beauty, and be made like him, makes the lonely, waiting bride weary of this world, and long and pray for the Bridegroom's return. Then will high heaven's gorgeous domes re-echo the declaration:

"'Tis done! the resurrection's past, the recompense is given,
The wicked sent to hopeless death, the righteous to life in heaven."

But once this majestic personage was the world-despised babe of Bethlehem; and in tracing the history of the "man of sorrows," we find much that has always been of interest to his followers, and especially to us as his professed people. Says John: "The word was made flesh and dwelt among us, and we beheld his glory, a glory as of the only begotten of the Father."—John 1. 14.

In following Christ through this vale of tears, we find that faithfulness was marked indelibly upon all his work. He did all his Father gave him to do. "I gave unto them the words which though gavest me; and they have received them, and have known surely that I came out from thee, and they have believed that thou didst send me." While he was with them, he was their counsellor and their joy. He gave them the words of eternal life, and led them like a heavenly shepherd, as he truly was. "While I was with them in the world, I kept them in thy name; those whom thou gavest I have kept, and none of them is lost." No wonder that his disciples loved him; he was a light to them in the darkness, and their joy in the hour of sorrow. He had watched over them with the tenderness of parental care, and they had come to look upon him as their long promised Prince and Deliverer.

In him they expected to realize their fondest hopes, and firmly believed he would restore to them the kingdom, and sit in imperial majesty upon David's throne. So firmly was this fixed upon their minds, that even after he had risen from the dead, they asked him the question, "Wilt thou at this time restore the kingdom to Israel?" His coronation was the glorious truth, that so enwrapped their very senses, that they entirely overlooked those prophesies relating to his incarnation, though he had diligently explained this point to them. They were looking forward, in strange contrast to the present Christian world, who seem to overlook the many promises which were the source of their joy, and are looking backward.

The love of his followers was so great for him, that it is no wonder that their hearts were made sad, and they were troubled when he attempted to explain to them that he was soon to leave them. Says he: "A little while and ye shall not see me, and again a little while and ye shall see me, because I go to the Father."—John 16. 16. They did not understand it; and the record says their hearts were troubled. It is not to be wondered at, as they had looked upon him with such bright anticipations. While he was with them their eyes had beheld his miracle-working power; they handled with their hands, and their ears had heard his words of cheer.

But now he tells them that it is but a little while that he can stay with them; and his majestic voice, as if to add to their sorrow, rings into their hearts: "Little children, yet a little while I am with you. Ye shall seek me, and whither I go ye cannot come." If he had told them that in a little while they would come to him, it would have been most joyful news to them. But he had no such message for them; and those who teach this theory had better examine their chart again, and see if they are not advocating human inventions without even the Divine sanction.

Christ would not leave his disciples comfortless. He knew their anguish; he knew the depths of sorrow that filled their hearts, and hence in sweet words of encouragement we hear him saying, "Nevertheless I tell you the truth; it is expedient for you that I go away, for if I go not away, the Comforter will not come unto you; but if I depart, I will send him unto you. Let not your hearts be troubled; ye believe in God, believe also in me. . . . I go to prepare a place for you; and if I go to prepare a place for you, I will come again and receive you unto myself, that where I am, there ye may be also."

Jesus after his resurrection continues to instruct them with much patience concerning the kingdom of God; and afterwards they saw more clearly why it was expedient for him to go away, as the Holy Spirit, which was to lead them into all truth, brought it out with renewed power to their minds. Through the illuminating rays of the Holy Spirit, they saw clearly that "our light afflictions which are but for a moment, work for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory. Concerning the time when they should receive this glory, they were steadfastly and continually looking forward to the glorious appearing of our Lord Jesus Christ, who is to give them a crown that "fadeth not away." This was the hope of the early church, this is my hope, and the hope set forth in the gospel.

One thing is quite plain from this declaration, that this "little while" covers the time that he will be absent from the church—his waiting bride. But he says, "A little while and ye shall see me," and as they are now dead, and in the land of forgetfulness, it plainly declares the necessity of their resurrection. Therefore when he comes, they will see him and all the saints of God; for the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with the voices of the archangels, and the trump of God, and the dead in Christ shall rise first, then we which are alive and remain, shall be caught up together with them to meet the Lord in the air. Then with the saints of all ages shall we meet—meet in holy communion, never to be separated,—always with Christ through the ceaseless ages of eternity.

I bless God that this "little while" is almost ended. Though Christ has been gone eighteen hundred years, yet compared with the eternity that his people will dwell with him, it is but a little while. The "bright and morning" star begins to rise! Morning dawns! O waiting bride, O chosen people, go forth to meet thy God. Sinner, prepare for the judgment. The day of mercy is rapidly fleeting; it will soon be gone, forever gone!

A SHORT SERMON.—No. 5.

"Let your speech be alway with grace."—Col. 4: 6.

Again we say, "Let your words be alway with love." Speak kindly to the wayward, and take heed lest you fall. Remember the crimson stream can make the foulest clean. Are you clothed and in your right mind? remember that it is Christ who has thus robed you, and that his righteousness alone can hide your shame. Are you blessed with hope? remember that it is Christ who gave it thee, and who bids all to come and receive the same. Shall I despise him for whom Christ died? Can I look with a Pharisaic spirit upon yonder publican, and say or feel to thank God that I am not as other men are? Should I not fear the same rebuke long since uttered by Christ? Can the spirit of a loving Jesus possess me, and not lead my heart in the same channel in which he walked? Must he love the sinner, and I hate him? If I have put on Christ, then I must walk in him, and bear something of the fruits which characterized him; otherwise, I may doubt whether I know him.

It is not the prerogative of a christian to look with indifference upon the interests of Christ, whom he is called to represent, in completing the work he began when here. I wonder not at the reckless indifference manifest on the part of sinners relative to their eternal interests, while they in so doing only reflect the shadows that professors of religion cast upon them.

The influence of a church is salutary only while the ruling principle with them is love. Let this predominate, and from it will radiate the light of heavenly grace, causing sunshine and peace to rest within its sacred fold; while all around is felt the healing beams of salvation's glow.

Buried beneath love's boundless deep,
Let Christ's church securely dwell,
While their sacred vows they keep,
Trusting the hand that doeth all things well.
Should storms and tempests threat'ning roar,
And darkness deep becloud the sky,
As was the church in days of yore,
So are we guarded from on high.
While we each other's sorrows feel,
And for each other strive to live,
We thus shall to the world reveal
The love for which Christ died to give;
And from death's dark and dreary way
Some sorrowing souls shall come,
And from their sinning turn away,
And find with us a home.
Let words of kindness be our theme,
While longer here we stay,
And then with heavenly love serene
We'll shine in endless day.

No christian or body of christians can ever develope a true christian character, bereft of that overwhelming and transcending principle which underlies the whole structure of Christianity. Without it we are powerless; with it we become invincible. We may have in our possession arguments that will confound the devil, and yet fail to win a single soul, without this principle of love. We may build fine houses and decorate them with unlimited wealth, dedicate them to God, and pass through all the forms of life, and yet be but a dead carcass in the eyes of heaven. That soul who dreams of future joys, while his heart does not pulsate with this principle predominating, is only painting the scenes of fancy, to be blotted out amid the folds of everlasting night.

Deceive not thyself, vain hoper; for while envy, hatred and jealousy reign in thy bosom, there can be no responsive chord that will chime with love's melodious song.

O that heaven's flood-gates would open and send down its torrents, burying us beneath its living waters; so that our words ever should be with love! WM. A. FENN.

WHAT CONSTITUTES CHRISTIANITY?

This is an important question, and one in which all should have an interest; not only as a people, but as individuals, each having an important part to perform in the work of obtaining the prize which is set before us at the end of the christian race. And as the prize, which is "the gift of God,—eternal life,"—is given only "to him that overcometh," it becomes necessary for us to endeavor to overcome, through the grace and mercy of God, all the obstacles which lie in our pathway, and by continually comparing our everyday life with the pattern given us by our heavenly Master in his word, seek to "lay aside every weight, and the sin which doth so easily beset us, and . . . run with patience the race that is set before us." (Heb. 12: 1.)

Doubtless, we all have something of an idea what real christianity is, but it is one thing to know the way, and another to walk in it; and in order to give us a better understanding of the term christianity, we will refer to the word of God, which is "profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction," and "for instruction in righteousness." By the term Christian, we do not understand that it means simply one who professes christianity, yet who could hardly be recognized as such by the gospel standard; but one who seeks to follow and obey Christ in all things. He is represented as our great pattern, and we know that with him for our guide, we need fear no evil so long as we sincerely trust in him. "For even hereunto were ye called; because Christ also suffered for us, leaving us an example, that ye should follow his steps." (1 Peter, 2: 21.) Here, then, is our example placed before us, which we as christians are called upon to follow; not by seeking to please ourselves, or the world, but seek to do the will of him who "did no sin, neither was guile found in his mouth; who, when he was reviled, reviled not again." And can it be that we are seeking to please him, that we are running "with patience the race set before us," when we are continually doing many things which we know are not consistent with the life of a true follower of Christ? Is it right that we should profess christianity, and profess to have faith in the Lord, when our very lives are not in accordance with that profession! Let us make an investigation of some of these things, and let Scripture testimony decide in part what real christianity is.

We may profess to have faith in our Lord Jesus Christ, and faith that he will save us; but unless we are willing to give up the world, and work out our own salvation with fear and trembling, we have no promise of eternal life, or a home in the kingdom; for "what doth it profit, my brethren, though a man say he hath faith, and have not works? can faith save him? . . . But wilt thou know, O vain man, that that faith without works is dead?' (Jas. 2: 14, 29.) Will the true followers of Christ profess to have faith in God, and when called upon to aid others who are much poorer than themselves, and suffering for the want of temporal things, turn a cold shoulder to the calls for the needy, and say that they are poor, and cannot afford to give at present, when the Lord hath promised that he will "withhold no good thing from them that walk uprightly?" We know that there is nothing in this world that we can call our own; but we must use what God has placed in our hands to his honor and glory, and give willingly, not grudgingly, for "the earth is the Lord's and the fulness thereof; the world, and they that dwell therein." (Ps. 24: 1.) Yet how unwilling we are many times to cast our entire confidence in the Lord, and trust him for the things which we need in this life, choosing to share in the blessings which God has given us, and seek to do others good by "giving as the Lord hath prospered us," and make the self-sacrifice which is many times needed to carry on the Lord's work in relieving the sick and distressed, and to help spread the gospel among the poor of this world, and to trust in the Lord, and do good," as we are commanded. "He that hath pity upon the poor, lendeth unto the Lord; and that which he hath given, will he pay him again." (Prov. 19: 17.) May the Lord help us all to believe this, and seek with greater diligence to overcome selfishness, and to "put on charity, which is the bond of perfectness."

Can we be followers of Christ, and speak unkindly to, or of those who have wronged us, or of those who may differ with us in points of doctrine? If we have that "humbleness of mind, meekness, and long-suffering," which we are exhorted to put on as the elect of God," and are forbearing one to another, and forgiving one to another," can we as sincere disciples lay up anything against our brother or sister, or neighbor, and still think that our conduct is approved of God?" "But I say unto you, love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them which despitefully use you and persecute you." Matt. 5: 44. How can those who are accustomed to the use of that filthy and poisonous weed,—tobacco,—expect to be one of God's people, and have a home in his kingdom, where all is to be pure, and all things that do offend shall be cast out, and still persist in the habit of using it, when it does them no good, and the money expended for it might do a great deal of good in the Lord's cause? "Wherefore lay apart all filthiness, . . . and receive with meekness the engrafted word, which is able to save your souls." (James 1: 21.)

Some may say they don't believe in being so strict, but so it is recorded, that "strait is the gate, and narrow is the way which leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it." (Matt. 7: 14.) May the Lord help us to be of that "few," and let us all seek to be "doers of the word, and not hearers only," that we may not at last find we have "deceived ourselves," and be cast from the kingdom with those who shall say "Lord, Lord, open unto us," but shall not be able to obtain an entrance. Let us not be of that class who seem to have the form of godliness, but deny the power thereof. Some may think christianity consists of great things, and think that they have become so righteous that nothing but "deep preaching," as they understand it, and papers that contain more or less of "argument," can do them much good. Yet let such remember that to please God does not consist all the performance of great deeds, for the excuse that we have "done many wonderful works," will avail nothing in the day of judgment; but it is the "meek," the humble and obedient, that are willing to give up all for Christ, that are to "inherit the earth;" and "let him that thinketh he standeth, take heed lest he fall." 1 Cor. 10: 12." THE DUTIES OF THE HOUR.

BRO. GRANT:—It appears to me that the duties imperative upon those who are looking for the speedy return of the Savior should be to get men prepared for this great event; and whatever exercises are held religiously, that do not result in the conversion of sinners and the quickening of believers, may be considered almost a failure; for the promises to the church are so broad and explicit, that we can hardly have an excuse if this result is not realized. But to have a revival spirit in the church, and power with God to get men converted, there must be union and concentration of effort. The promise that, if any two can agree as touching any thing they shall ask, it shall be done, should inspire us with hope and confidence; but are there not too many gatherings of christians where there is a lack of union in this work? We know that the Adventism of this nineteenth century has developed or brought to light many important truths which have been in a great measure obscured to the church for centuries past, and they have elicited much discussion and controversy, and too often have been almost idolized, and other important duties omitted in consequence. It is to be feared that too many are more zealous to have the head converted to some peculiar doctrine or theory, than the heart converted to God. We know it is important to understand the Scriptures, but more important to know that our names are written in the Lamb's book of life. We think Paul has set this subject in its true light, saying that he might understand all mysteries and all knowledge, and yet be as sounding brass or a tinkling cymbal.

So we must conclude that something more than doctrinal belief is necessary to insure an entrance into the heavenly city. We admit that Bible classes and public discussions are good in their place, and the truth has been made to shine more brilliantly by these means. But there is a more important mission for the church; and not until it has a just conception of Christ's mission, in his first advent, his labor, prayer, fasting, agony and death, that men may be saved, will it come up to the true standard of christian work.

So we conclude the most important matter in this work is to have the heart converted to God, and the head will then be turned to the true doctrines, and the feet into the paths that lead to eternal life. D. N. SMITH.

"REDEEMING THE TIME."

Eph. 5: 16.

On a review of the time misspent, and the opportunities for doing good, which have been misimproved, how intent should we be so to occupy the present as to redeem the past. It is within the experience of almost every believer in the word of God, to have misused more or less of the fleeting hours of probation. Now those hours, with all the privileges that pertained to them, are in the far-fled past; yet, in the above precept the apostle exhorts us to that ardor of purpose, that devotion of spirit, which shall enable us to awake from dead works, and thus measurably retrieve—buy back—the lost moments. Relevant to this Jesus said, "I must work the works of him that sent me while it is day; the night cometh when no man can work."—John 9: 4. So Paul to the Romans:—"Knowing the time, that now it is high time to awake out of sleep; for now is our salvation nearer than when we believed."—13: 11.

What report has the time past of our lives borne to heaven, to be recorded in the book of remembrance? Is it such as shall meet the approval of that eye which looks not upon sin with the least allowance? O, how important is self-examination! It was with this view that David prayed, "Search me, O God, and know my heart; try me, and know my thoughts; and see if there be any wicked way in me, and lead me in the way everlasting."—Ps. 129: 23.

But as a most cogent motive the apostle adds, "Because the days are evil." No sooner had man fallen from his exalted position, than it was said of him that "every imagination of his heart was only evil continually."—Gen. 6: 5. Actuated by the progressive power of this law, we need not marvel that the apostle should say, in his admonition to the church, "because the days are evil." More than eighteen hundred years are numbered with the past since these words were spoken by Paul, and evil has been aggressive and continual.

The powers of darkness have been arrayed against the church of Christ, driving her through seas of tribulation and blood to the wilderness. From the martyr's flame; from dungeons and chains; from the noxious catacombs; from the Alpine hills; from the varied tortures of the Inquisition, the voice of the dying saint ascends, saying, "How long, O Lord, holy and true, dost thou not judge and avenge our blood on them that dwell on the earth?" Evil, most artful in its culture, and gigantic in its development, abounds on every hand, telling with deep significance of events which lie beyond the redemption of time, beyond the calls of mercy, when the great controversy between God and man shall come to a final issue, and

"When fire, from God descending,
Shall sweep this wide earth o'er;
And nations, loud lamenting,
Shall sink to rise no more."

CHARITY.

Beloved of the Lord:—Charity, as used in the Bible, signifies love. Every charitable man, therefore, is a truly pious man; for "he that loveth is begotten of God." Love to Christ smooths the path to walk in all the ordinances of God's house, and wings the feet to travel it. It is the law which impels the crown of obedience. It is the main spring moving the wheel to duty. Love is the marrow of the bones of fidelity; yea, the life o sincere devotion. He that hath love can no more be motionless, than the aspen leaf in the gale. As well may the heart cease to beat as love to obey. "Ye are my friends, if you do whatsoever I command you." Love delights to do all his will. Love never asks what is essential to salvation, but what does Jesus command. We know we love him when we have respect unto all his commandments. And now little children abide in him, that when he shall appear, we may have confidence, and not be ashamed before him at his coming. Yes, blessed be God, he is coming soon. We believe it, we watch for it, we look for it, and we long for it, and we live for it. He is our hope. For him we live, for him we labor, for him we suffer, and for him we are separated from the world; and shall "count it all joy," because of our blessed hope. Though the saints are trodden in the dust, (they are like the jewels and diamonds of Bro. Miller's dream), they shine with ten times their former glory.

Charity is not blind. She does not believe that all will be saved; but she seeks to have them. She does not believe that every path will lead to life; but she points men to the strait and narrow way. She loves the Church too well, not to oppose the entrance of error. She too evidently desires the salvation of men not to try to convince them of the truth. Our Savior has said: "Ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall you free."

Charity reasons with and persuades, but never forces men to embrace a creed. She is a child of the light, and will not hold fellowship with the children of darkness. O, how blessed it is to think that we are so near home. Yes, love makes home sound sweet to all the wayworn children. O blessed prospect. Many more disappointments of time, would not quench genuine love. "We love him because he first loved us. "He that shall endure unto the end, the same sall be saved."

COME TO JESUS.

Reader, where are you? If you do not know that you are at the feet of Jesus, clothed in his righteousness, cleansed in his precious blood, then heed this invitation—"Come to Jesus."

No matter what you have been; that is not the question. You may have been on the mountain top, shouting and praising the Lord, and rejoicing in the assurance of his love and favor; but where are you to-day? Are you mourning the loss of your first love?

Do you say—

"Where is the blessedness I knew?"

Return to Him from whom you have strayed, and you will find your question answered. This is your only hope—the only way of escape from the impending wrath. If you stay away from Christ you will surely perish.

"I can but perish if I go;
I am resolved to try;
For if I stay away, I know
I must forever die."

You know how to go; you know the way. Delay not, for the time is short, and the Judge standeth at the door. Repent, for the King of heaven is at hand. Delay not, despair not, but come with an earnest purpose to seek with all your heart till you find Jesus, or perish in the attempt.

"Perhaps he will admit my plea,
Perhaps will hear my prayer;
But if I perish I will pray,
And perish only there."

O, what can hinder you from coming now to Christ, that you may find the fullness of the blessing of his gospel? Whoever you are that may read or hear these words, I entreat you to come to Jesus. However hopeless and dark your way may seem, make the effort, and do it now. Confess all, resign all, and you shall be forgiven, blest and saved with an everlasting salvation. For "this is the promise that he hath promised us, even eternal life."—1 John 2: 25.

PUNCTUALITY.

Punctuality in religious worship is a matter of great importance, yet it is sadly neglected by many congregations of Adventists.

In matters of business punctuality is so necessary that a person who fails to meet his friend at the hour of engagement is hardly considered honest. Ought we to be any less exact and punctual in meeting our engagements with God than with man? I think all will answer no.

We that are journeying about from place to place, frequently see brethren arise and appoint to meet the Lord in that house at seven o'clock, but they do not get there until half or three quarters of an hour after that time. Think you this is well pleasing in the sight of God? Nay, brethren, "these things ought not so to be." No church need ever hope to prosper spiritually while they fail to do as they agree with the Lord. May God help us one and all to be more punctual in the future.

CHICAGO TENT-MEETING.

We closed our tent-meeting in Chicago Friday evening, Oct. 30th, and occupied the meeting-house Saturday evening and over the Lord's day. The interest continued to increase up to Nov. 2nd, the time we left. We have never seen a better prospect in a city than there is now in Chicago. We were sorry to be obliged to leave, but have left the meetings in faithful hands—Brn. C. C. Ramsey and D. S. Clark—who will continue them for some tiime to come. We did not intend to take down the tent before Nov. 2nd; but on Friday evening, Oct. 3d, we had a very severe storm, which so damaged the tent that we were obliged to take it to the sail-maker for repairs. We hoped to have got it up again on Saturday, but could not get it repaired in season. Many are blessing the Lord that the "Shiloh Tent" ever came to Chicago. We have seen more accomplised than we expected when we began. The Lord has touched the hearts of the people in a special manner, and many are now happy in his love, who a few weeks ago were in the gall of bitterness, and on their way to destruction. Several active, intelligent members of other denominations are joyfully sustaining the blessed hope regardless of the speech of people, and the finger of scorn which they have to bear for Jesus' sake. They truly glory in the cross of Christ. They feel great freedom in the meetings, and we often hear the hearty shout and amen from hearts full of joy and peace. One intelligent man from the Baptist church remarked in one of the love-feasts, that there had never before been such good meetings in Chicago. "All others," he said, "have only been surface work." He felt and spoke like a young convert. He thought the preachers ought all to be present and aid in the work. He said the tent-meetings were testing the churches. Those who opposed would dry up, and be left in darkness. We think there was much truth in his remark.

Our last day in Chicago was a blessed one. This was the first Sabbath in our meeting-house, which is located on Green street, between Madison and Monroe. It will seat four hundred, but is not large enough to hold those who have become interested. Some noble-hearted, wealthy men, who love the truth as it has been presented, are seeking a lot in the heart of the city where they can erect a tabernacle that will seat about three thousand people. They are anxious to see a great work in the city, and we think they will not be disappointed. The time has come to do up our last work in this dispensation. Unless something special is done soon, we expect to see the mass of people confirmed infidels. They have lost their confidence in the religion exhibited in most of the popular churches. It is no slander to say that the standard of piety in them is very low. It is not only low, but continually sinking. This is a well-known fact by those who love the Lord, and are connected with the various denominations. We most firmly believe, as has been said by those who have for the first time attended the tent-meetings, that the truths for the believer of which, we are called infidels and shut out of the churches, are the very ones needed at this time to fit the bride of the Lamb for his coming. On this point we have no doubt.

A few more words about our last Sabbath in Chicago. At half-past nine o'clock we had another of our precious love-feasts. At the close of the morning, afternoon and evening sermons, we had some thrilling testimonies, which took strong hold of many hearts, and made the tears flow freely. Those present had to admit the Spirit of the Lord was there in power. One Methodist class-leader arose and expressed his full satisfaction that he had found the right way at last, and wished to cast in his lot among us. Others did the same. Another arose, and cried bitterly, saying he was a sinner and wished to be a christian. In a few minutes he got up again to tell how light and happy he felt. Another, who arose in the tent the Sabbath before, and said he was a sinner, and decided to give up the use of tobacco, requesting prayers, got up and said he had been a great sinner for forty years; had been a leader in political matters, a swearing beer-drinker, regardless of sacred things till he came to the tent, but was now decided to give up all for Jesus, and be a faithful christian. He is an earnest man, and we expect to hear glad tidings from him soon. He has now found something better than beer or politics. Others made hearty confessions and were blest.

In the evening, at half-past six o'clock, we met for a communion, and had a heavenly one. Over one hundred gathered around the table of the Lord. It was a precious season. At the close of the meeting, twelve came forward for prayers, and consented to become the humble followers of the meek and lowly Jesus. It was hard to break away from the dear friends in C., but we hope to see them again in a few weeks, if it be the Lord's will. Apparently the good work has but just begun. We hope our Brn. and Srs. will keep praying for Chicago, that the whole city may be stirred.

At fifteen minutes past five P. M. Monday, Nov. 2nd, we left Chicago en route for Boston. We passed through a fine section of country till we arrived at Niagara Falls. We were delighted with the cars, roads, speed and management on the Mich. Central and Great Western R. Roads. If one wishes speed and comfort between Chicago and Rochester, we should recommend them to take the Great Western and Mich. Central roads. When we arrived at Niagara Falls, we found we could get to Boston just as quick to stop five hours and wait for the 7.25 P. M. train, as we could if we went on direct to Albany, where we would have to wait from one o'clock A. M. till six A. M.; so we concluded to use up the waiting time at the Falls, and visit the majestic Niagara. It is a sublime sight. We shall not attempt a minute description as it would be nothing new to our readers. One might well inquire, Where does all that vast body of water come from that supplies the ceaseless flow that comes thundering along the rocks till it plunges down one hundred and fifty-eight feet, making such a boiling foam as can be seen no where else? One would think Lake Erie must be empty soon, but after centuries are passed, the mighty torrent still continues. After the water passes the cataract it assumes a peculiar color. It looks almost like the bluing water used at the laundry.

They are now building another suspension bridge across the frightful chasm, about a mile above the R. R. suspension bridge, designed for common teams and foot passengers. It is not yet ready for use. We walked out on it some distance, but as the wind was blowing strong, and the bridge, without any railing yet, was uneasy in the breeze, in connection with our tread; we concluded that it might be safer on the land, than to be on that unfinished bridge over two hundred feet above the surging stream below. There were only a few plank laid on the wires, so that the workmen could go across to their work. The superintendent permitted us to go on the bridge, with only one condition; "you must not fall off." After the visit we appreciated his caution. When done, it will afford a nice view of the falls, and a pleasant crossing from the United States to Canada.

We left the Falls at 7.25 P. M. and arrived at Albany about 6 A. M. Just before leaving the station, while reading the word of the Lord, a fine looking gentleman sitting forward of us, who was taking some food, turned around and said, "I see you are taking spiritual food." We replied, "Yes, we choose to take that first." He then inquired, "Are you an Adventist?" We answered in the affirmative. He then said, "What do you think caused me to ask the question?" We replied, "It is not common for any other class of people to be seen reading the Bible in the cars." He said that was the reason. He then introduced himself as Bro. James White, of Battle Creek, Mich. We had a very pleasant visit together on our way to Springfield, and when we parted, we felt glad that we had met; and hoped soon to meet again in the kingdom of God.

We arrived in Boston, Wednesday, 3.40 P. M., and found all well as usual, and things at the office in a prosperous condition, receiving the continued blessing of the Lord. We had a happy greeting with Brn. J. Couch, H. Munger, C. Goodrich, S. W. Thurber, Geo. T. Adams, A. P. Moore, S. Hale, the compositors, and others whom we met in the office. Thank the Lord for christian friends.

HYDE PARK.—Hyde Park is a very pleasant town, eight miles from Boston, on the Hartford and Erie R. R. We spent last Sabbath (8th) there, and had a profitable meeting. Bro. J. G. Hamblin and his son Howard have opened their new hall for the worship of the Lord, and the prospect is good for happy results. The people seemed anxious to hear. It is very evident the time has come when the great truths of the Bible can be presented with much success to the members of all evangelical denominations, provided it is done with a kind and christian spirit. The deaf ears are being opened to hear, as they have not been for many years.

SPIRIT TEACHING.

The spirits of devils teach all sorts of doctrines, but none of them are in harmony with the Bible. The whole system is anti-christian in the most absolute sense. In the Banner of Light for Sept. 12th, 1868, we find the following question put to a spirit, and his answer:

"Q.—I would like to ask if the controlling influence recognizes as a fact that the power controlling the universe is of itself conscious of human consciousness.

A.—I do not so believe. I believe that the great universal consciousness is expressed thro' forms, human consciousness, and perhaps no where else so perfectly. There is a kind of consciousness that belongs to certain lower spheres of animal existence, but when it rises into the human it becomes more perfect, more beautiful, more elaborate. I cannot conceive of a consciousness apart from form, from that which we perceive around us through our fellows. I do not believe in a God apart from his works. Such a God would be so far beyond my comprehension that I could not worship him. I believe that God acts through his works, and manifests consciousness wherever there are organs adapted to such an expression."

Here we find the spirit expressly declaring that the God they talk about is not "of itself conscious of human consciousness." Strange God! It does not know any thing about human consciousness, from the fact that it is nothing more than a principle in all matter, like attraction, or caloric or electricity. Such is the God of Spiritualism.

"EVERLASTING CONTEMPT."

In Dan. 12: 2, we read of some who "shall awake . . . to everlasting life," and of some who shall awake "to shame and everlasting contempt." Some think they find proof in this passage that wicked men will live eternally. But we fail to see any force in the position. Prof. Hudson remarked on this passage as follows:—

"In a verbal argument it is proper to remark that the 'shame' is not called eternal. If it were so, and if it were shown that the shame is the feeling of the lost, the argument would be as strong as the word everlasting. But there may be an 'everlasting contempt' of those who have no immortality. Men are often despised long after they are dead. The lasting contempt no more proves immortality than when we speak of 'eternal infamy.' And when the everlasting contempt is set over against 'everlasting life,' who will argue, from this passage, that the doom may not be everlasting literal death?"

On Matt. 25: 46, he says:—

"'Everlasting punishment.' (Matt. 25: 46.) This is the most important of all the phrases we are examining, and it is oftenest cited to prove the immortality of the lost. In reply, I need not repeat what I have said elsewhere. See 'Christ Our Life,' pp. 122–128; 148–153; and the text, 'Eternal Death in the Literal Sense is Eternal Punishment.' If this position is granted, the Orthodox argument from this passage is at an end. But some of the ablest Orthodox critics on this subject, among them Dr. Hamilton, concede this vital point. And the passage itself puts the everlasting punishment in contrast with everlasting life. If any one insists that the endless life implies eternal happiness, and asks what the opposite of that is, I need only reply by remarking that the phrase 'eternal life' directly expresses the idea of living forever. Shall we draw inferences of infinite moment from what is inferred rather than from what is uttered and declared?

"But some say the opposite of living forever is dying forever; to which many add, 'and never dying.' Let others reconcile as they may the idea of dying ever and dying never. I prefer the plainest statement of the contrast, to be forever living, or forever dead.

"But the critical argument brings us to the peculiar Greek word here rendered 'punishment.' Yet every one will say that if in a single instance, in the Greek with which the Jews, and especially the Evangelists, were familiar, literal death is called by this name 'punishment,' then this word punishment does not necessarily mean pain or torment. Now the Septuagint or Greek translation of the Old Testament, and the Apocrypha are such Greek books. And in these the word kolasis, rendered punishment, occurs about thirty times, and in more than half the instances the actual punishment is literal death. How, then, can eternal kolasis, set over against eternal life, prove or even suggest the immortality of those who perish?

"I know it is often urged that kolasis is rendered 'torment' in John 4: 18. But the fact that it is once so translated does not prove that it always means torment, since it does not prove that death is torment. Hence I need not inquire whether this translation in 1 John 4: 18 is correct or not."

"THE NEW CREATION."

The above heading is the title of a new monthly, which it is proposed to publish in Vineland, N. J. In the prospectus it is said, "The paper will be the organ of the new Divine Order, named The General-Assembly Church of the First Born and Kingdom of God." E. Hale, a Spiritualist, is to be the editor. The spirits are now extra active and earnest, knowing their time is short. They are devising all sorts of plans to lead people away from God and the Bible. They try to make each medium believe that some very important things are to be developed through his or her agency. The spirits are remarkable for their flattery of the mediums. They have persuaded each one among them to believe that he is Christ's special medium, leading them to believe that each one is a Christ; and that what makes one a Christ, is to adopt the principles taught by the spirits.

We find the following in the "prospectus":

"The cry was made to me at the midnight hour. Awake! thou that sleepeth! To thy work! For the Day Star has 'arisen—the millenial morn approaches with its golden light. Herald it to the world! The glad tidings of great joy to all nations, which kings and prophets waited for, but died without the sight.

It demands early rising, and calls the people to work, and such will be its organ. The New Creation, which name denotes nothing less than the reality to be brought out by actual works through human agents, of a new heaven and a new earth.

I therefore call to all God's little ones, scattered up and down the earth, who have been sighing and crying on account of the desolations of Zion, wherever they are found in the churches, (both Catholic and Protestant), and out of them; in every religious name and order, and out of them; to the wandering pilgrims seeking rest, listen to these glad tidings as they will be heralded through this paper, The New Creation, and come up rather help early in the morning of Triumphant Zion's experience, as the church—God's everlasting church—is just stepping out of the wilderness, the night of her sorrow being o'er, leaning on the arm of her Beloved." S.

In a letter to us, the Editor, dated Oct. 6th, 1868, says:—

"As you are looking for great events to transpire in these last days, here is one you will be compelled to gaze upon in the future, if not now. We know whereof we affirm, and the Spirit witnesses with ours that our testimony is true, and shall accomplish the end whereunto it is sent. He that readeth let him understand. The hour is at hand, and the angel of God's presence is swift to execute the everlasting decrees.

Now are coming forth God's elect, through great tribulation, having washed their robes white in the blood of the Lamb. Their testimonies are like the voice of thunder in our midst, and sudden fear takes hold of the people; and we are witnesses that Zion is now in pain to be delivered. Females are groaning in distress in the spirit to bring forth. Oh, could you have witnessed what I have witnessed in Vineland, with spiritual discernment, you would shout for joy, the promised train having come.

But remember, he first came unto his own, and they received him not; so now he comes unto his own, even the Adventists. Will you receive him? Time must tell.

But we, as God's messengers, must in all humility and lowliness of heart, warn you in God's stead, as the voice of his little ones come to you, through this prospectus, and as it will come through the paper. All, all, must now be tried by their own law; even you who have been so long and truthfully testifying of the second coming of Christ. You who have had great light by listening to the midnight cry, 'Behold the Bridegroom cometh, go ye out to meet him'; listen even now to the rumbling of his chariot wheels; for lo, he comes swift to execute justice and judgment, and who shall be able to stand when he appeareth; for the sound thereof shall go forth like the voice of many waters, and he shall be like a refiner's fire and like fuller's soap. Prepare to meet your God. Thus saith the spirit to God's professed people, the Adventists, whether you will hear or forbear. God's eternal purposes must be accomplished, and who shall stay his hand, or say what doest thou? Yours for the coming of Christ. E. HALE."

Satan is now getting out his very best counterfeits of Christianity and the word of the Lord; but they are easily detected by the saints of the Most High. We expect those who only have the form of godliness, will be led astray by these cunning devices of the devil. He knows Jesus is coming soon, and that the church of Christ is waking up to the subject; hence his policy is to make us believe that the second advent of our Savior is not literal, but spiritual in the spiritual manifestation now being witnessed in all parts of the world; and that when the governments of earth are remodeled so as to be in harmony with the teaching of the spirits, then the kingdom of God will be set up, and that will be the beginning of the millenium foretold in the scriptures. To those not well posted in the doctrine of the Bible, Satan's counterfeit is so like the genuine, they receive it as the word of the Lord.

The Scripture doctrine of the entire mortality of man becomes more and more important every day. Thank the Lord for a complete shield against Spiritualism, the last and worst form of infidelity that has ever come against the children of the Lord.

We fear that but few of our readers are aware of the magnitude of the work being accomplished by Spiritualism. Many appear to look upon it as a harmless affair, and think we over-estimate its importance. Did they know all we do, we think they would wonder why we do not sound the alarm with still more earnestness. The whole system is entirely anti-christian, and is rapidly gaining ground in all directions. Christian soldier, gird on your armor and prepare for the conflict.

A MODERN PRAYER-MEETING.

The prayer-meetings in popular churches are any thing but seasons of refreshing to a soul hungering after Jesus. It would be a poor place for a sinner crying for mercy. Such things are not in these meetings. All must go off in the most quiet manner, and in the most approved style, so that the most sensitive worldling would find nothing to disturb his conscience. When describing one of these fashionable prayer-meetings, the Chicago Advance says:—

"Bro. Jones, the pastor, enters, fresh from reading the spicy complaint of 'A Layman,' in a recent number of the Advance. Deacon Smith follows, and seats himself behind the great stove-pipe. Dea. Brown ditto, behind the west one. Sr. A. takes position in the northeast corner, and Sr. B. in the northwest. A few other friends scatter themselves over the house, being careful to select seats as far from each other as possible. Bro. Jones opens briefly and appropriately, still having in mind 'Layman's' strictures, and then invites remarks and prayers. A deathly silence ensues. Everybody looks solemnly toward the floor. Sr. A. at length sighs, and nibbles at a bit of caraway. Sr. B. moves slightly, and the creak of the seat is a decided relief. Dea. Smith finally rises, and says with mild despair, 'Let us pray.' He goes through with the memorable prayer-meeting prayer, including 'God's ancient covenant people, the Jews,' and succeeds in putting three sisters and two brethren to sleep. There is an awful pause, and then somebody gets up, and with a woe-begone gaze at his boots says he 'don't know as he has anything to say, but hates to see the time wasted.' So the hour wears away, and the benediction is pronounced. Once outside the door, those stolid faces wear a look of life, hand clasps hand, and finally chit-chat freely flows."

"DO NOT DECEIVE."

Some parents carelessly learn their children to be deceivers, in consequence of their own example. Parents should never do what they do not wish their children to imitate. The little folks are always on the watch, and may be expected to do and say what they observe in their parents. It is sad to see how careless many parents are in relation to their example before their children.

These thoughts have been suggested by the following:—

"Robert Hall's love of sincerity in words and actions was constantly apparent. Once while he was spending an evening at the house of a friend, a lady who was there on a visit retired, that her little girl of four years old might go to bed. She returned in about half an hour, and said to a lady near her, 'She has gone to sleep. I put on my night-cap, and lay down by her, and she soon dropped off.' Mr. Hall, who overheard this, said: 'Excuse me, madam; do you wish your child to grow up a liar?' 'O, dear, no, sir; I should be shocked at such a thing.' 'Then bear with me, when I say, you must never act a lie before her. Children are very quick observers, and soon learn that that which assumes to be what it is not is a lie, whether acted or spoken.' This was uttered with a kindness which precluded offense, yet with a seriousness that could not be forgotten."

BRO. HENRY GIBBS, 182 Fulton Avenue, Brooklyn, Long Island, wishes to say that meetings are held in New York, corner of Grand and Allen streets. Brethren passing through or stopping in New York, are invited to worship with them.

EXPENSIVE MEETING HOUSES.—Several hundred churches can profit by this hint from The Congregationalist:

It is sometimes a great mistake for a society, weak in numbers an finances, to attempt to build an expensive church, such as may be wanted after a few years. A much wiser course would be to do as did Dr. Lord's society, thirty years ago, in Buffalo. They built for temporary use, a plain edifice, twenty-five by seventy-five, open to the roof, with a single aisle and seats for four hundred, costing $3000. Externally it had a rough appearance, but it was nevertheless popular as a religious home. Such a building, made simply convenient and comfortable, is more attractive than a half finished church, and the difficult problem of meeting the cost of a more expensive house is thus postponed till the day of large numbers and means.

— Our best actions are often those of which we are unconscious; but this can never be unless we are always yearning to do good.

THE TRACT FUND.

At a meeting of the Advent Christian Publication Society, held at the National Campmeeting, Chapin's Grove, Springfield, Mass., Aug. 29th, 1868, the following resolutions were adopted:—

Resolved, That we raise TWO THOUSAND DOLLARS for the free distribution of Tracts the ensuing year.

Resolved, That our preaching brethren be, and hereby are, requested to act as Agents in this good work, to solicit contributions to the Tract Fund, as often at least as once in every quarter, and forward the same to the Treasurer, GEO. T. ADAMS, BOSTON, MASS.

OUR WINTER CAMPAIGN.

As the Lord has seemed to delay his coming, and many are disappointed, our system of operations is somewhat confused, and the enemies of our faith will take every advantage of us possible. While some have thrown away their armor, and are retreating, others think victory is ours. The battle is waxing hotter. Come, brethren, all that are loyal, rally again, and let each one take the field, and say to the Captain of our salvation, What wilt thou have me to do? The work is varied, and the workmen will have different stations and work to do. It is a warfare. While one is cool-headed, he may have an easy station; but the one which has a determined, ardent, resolute purpose, he is just the man to take charge of a bombarding battalion, pitch his tent in sight and shot of the enemy, and keep cool, while the cavalry scour the country and learn the state of things.

When General Grant commenced on island No. 10, the rebels laughed him to scorn; but a steady bombardment attracted the attention in that direction; our different armies kept off around, doing the work assigned to them; all striving together, yet in a separate work. After a steady, long pull, island No. 10 surrendered, and all rejoiced. Next, Richmond was attacked in the same cool, steady way. The enemy trembled when they laughed, knowing right well others were at work out in the country, cutting off their supplies. All worked together, but in different localities, until the time had fully come, and the warriors all saw it. A letter was sent from Sheridan to Grant. It was short and cool: "Gen. Grant, I think if the enemy was pushed now, he would surrender.—Sheridan."

Answer of Grant: "Push him, then." This act ended the war, and all rejoiced,—the Corporal as well as the General; the nurse in the hospital, as well as the President; all that had done what they could rejoiced together.

Now, brethren, if we are not calculated to take charge of a bombarding squadron, we may act as corporal; take our trip out in the country school-houses, and do what we can. If God has given others a bombarding position, to stay weeks in a place, don't find fault because you have to scout in the woods. Perhaps you can't fill any other position yet. The Captain knows best. So let us all keep to work, and when our victory is won, we all can rejoice together. There are many anxious hearers out back, and they must have light. We, as a people, can do more this winter than ever before, if we are all united, and willing to work wherever God, our Captain, has placed us. If you can't throw a bomb, throw a shot, if it is small. If you can't throw either, nurse the sick. These are all necessary to a victory. HIRAM MUNGER.

DIXFIELD TENT MEETING.

The Maine Mission Tent was pitched in Dixfield village, Oct. 15th, and meetings commenced, but the weather being cold, we held meetings in the tent only two days, and then occupied the Universalist meeting-house, which was kindly offered us. This town has been noted for many years as a hard place to propagate christianity. It was first settled by an infidel, some eighty years ago; since then, the only religious society which has taken root, is the Universalist. There are many who profess that dogma, but many more who seem entirely careless about any religion, and from all we learned of them, the mass seem to have no confidence in the reliability of the Bible. The people are very intellectual and enterprising; they claim to have raised up seven ministers, and many lawyers and doctors. All things considered, we got a fair hearing during eleven days. While some were indifferent, and others opposed, many came with ears to hear. The gospel seemed entirely new to them. They admitted they never heard such things preached before. Many did not know the Bible read so. When shown that it did, they thought we could not know anything by what the Bible said. The Universalist minister (who, by the way, does not preach to them) tried his skill in questioning, disputing and opposing what we preached during two evenings; showing, not only us, but the congregation, his ignorance of the Scriptures, and his unbelief of them. Some of his people were ashamed of him. They do not own him as their minister, he having been educated in the Unitarian school.

The word of the Lord never shone clearer than when brought in contrast with the fables of men. Some could not help seeing and confessing it. Some of the Universalists seemed deeply awakened. Several Methodist brethren and sisters, who attended our meetings, became much interested in the gospel of the kingdom, and the evidences of Jesu's soon coming. One of the lawyers gave us the use of his grounds and lumber for our tents; another lawyer, who is an unconverted man, showed us much kindness, and deeply sympathized with our efforts to publish the gospel of the kingdom. One Lord's day, he took six of us to the National House to dine. At the close of our meetings, he gave each of us a special invitation to return and preach more. We did what we could to sow good seed. May God bless it to the salvation of some perishing sinners, and the advancement of some christians in the knowledge of the truth. We had no houses in the place, and therefore made our lodging tent our home. Brethren and sisters came in from Carthage, Weld, Byron, Mexico,, Roxbury, Penn, Hartford, Livermore, and East Dixfield, bringing us an abundance of provisions, and aiding us much in our social meetings, which, by the blessing of the Lord, were made heavenly places in Christ. Our collections at this meeting met a little more than half our current expenses. The money, we think, was well expended. Cold weather, with two snow storms, admonished us to pack our tents, which we did Oct. 26th, to lay them by until another spring, or forever, if the Lord shall come before then. But until he does come, let us not slacken, but double our diligence.

In this second summer's experience in tenting, we are still more fully convinced that it is the most economical, important, useful mode of mission labor we have yet adopted. Shall it not be fully sustained by those who have the means? And shall it not be increased, if time continue, another year? It certainly should be. I. C. WELLCOME.

A REQUEST.

I have been sick since the Springfield meeting with chills and fever. I had made my calculation to go South or West this winter, and preach and scatter tracts. I desire the prayers of God's children that I may be restored to health, and go on my mission. I only ask the prayers of those who believe that Jesus will heal the sick now.

The article on "Baptism," in the Crisis of Nov. 4th, for "would," in first paragraph, twelfth line, read could. The third paragraph should be omitted, it being a mixed collection of matter contained in the paragraph which precedes and follows it. In last paragraph, for "proves water baptism to have been superseded," read, proves water baptism not to have been superseded. WM. HOBBS.

For the World's Crisis.

CORRECTION.

A wrong impression has been received by some concerning the Greek word rendered grave in John 5: 28. It is said by some who profess to be teachers, that the Greek word, rendered grave in this text, should never be rendered grave, but "a place of remembrance." What are the facts? Mnecmion is the Greek word, and is rendered tomb and tombs five times, sepulchre twenty-nine times; and in every instance it has reference to the place of the dead. In twenty-six of the twenty-nine times where it is rendered sepulchre, it refers to the tomb of Joseph. Twice out of the five times, where it is rendered tomb, it refers to the same place. The following are the places where mnecmion is rendered grave or graves:

First, in Matt. 27: 52: "And the graves were opened, and many bodies of the saints that slept arose, and came out of the graves after his resurrection." Here are two instances where mnecmion is rendered graves. Does this mean the literal grave, or a place of remembrance? Another is found in Luke 11: 44: "For ye are as graves which appear not." The next is found in John 5: 28: "All that are in the graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth; they that have done good unto the resurrection of life, and they that have done evil unto the resurrection of damnation." The next is concerning Lazarus. John 11: 17: "He found that he had lain in the grave four days already." 31st verse. "She goeth unto the grave to weep there." 38th verse. He "cometh to the grave." John 12: 17. "When he called Lazarus out of the grave." Do these texts refer to the literal grave? The Greek word mnecmion is properly rendered grave, and in every instance refers to the literal grave. What shall we do with it? I think the honest will say accept it. Amen, let us be honest. "Evil communications corrupt good manners. Awake to righteousness and sin not, for some have not the knowledge of God. I speak this (says Paul) to your shame."

BATH, ME.

Sunday, Nov. 1st, we visited the church in Bath, in company with Bro. R. R. York, and found them prospering in the Lord. They enjoy a continual work of reformation, and are always in working order. The Lord has done great things for them. We baptized three believing souls into the death of Christ, and received eleven into the church by the right hand of fellowship. Others are coming along. Blessed be God. Bro. York's health is somewhat improved; yet he is not able to endure much mental labor. May the Lord restore him to health to enter again into the field earnestly, to gather souls to Christ.

NEW FORM.

The Advance praises the pastor of the Pearl St. church at Hartford for saying, "We will now listen to the singing of hymn so and so," instead of the usual form, "Let us sing," etc., and calls that "a new outbreak of honesty in the pulpit." An outbreak of something besides honesty, we should say. The same honesty would require the pastor to say, "Now you will listen to my prayers," instead of "Let us pray." Participation in worship no more requires that all sing, than that all pray in the church.—Springfield Republican.

Correspondence.

From Bro. J. B. Wadsworth.

BRO. GRANT:—I am feeling very unwell to-day. I have symptoms of billious fever. I have had high fevers at night, but they have much abated. The colored people have offered me a hall if I will remain longer. A white man, who has a good many houses here, said I could have one of his that would seat about one hundred free of cost; and said I could stay at his house as long as I chose. How strange it is; until now, no one seemed to appreciate much I have said; they hardly noticed me. When I came here I was short of funds; did not have money enough to get me a room. Some nights I had to go to the country for shelter. Sometimes it would be in the woods. I could not get any work. So you see I had a trial of it. How wisely have all things worked for my good. My faith has been made stronger. When I was taken sick, friends would send me money, just as I needed it. I will give you the names of those who have sent me money and tracts: C. Green, M. D., Phila., $2.25, and pocket maps of about eight States, and tracts two or three times, pens, and one lead pencil with a foot rule. I have not received the last tracts he speaks of (leaflets), but did the court-plasters. Mrs. Stokes, through the same address, $1. Wm. P. Hathaway, through Dr. Leslie, $2, afterwards $3 more. T. Parker, through J. V. Himes, $2. C. Colegrove $1, and afterwards sent $1 more, and one hundred cards for swearers, the very thing to leave or place in some conspicuous place. One swearer told me the few words on the card did him more good than a sermon ever did. He once was a great swearer and drunkard, "but," said he, "since I first saw you, I have not used a half dozen bad words." To let the good brother know what a change there has been wrought in him, a few days ago he bade me farewell, never expecting to see me again, as he thought I would leave here the first of Oct. Said he, "Pray for me. I want to become a christian. If I never meet you any more on this earth, I want to live with you on the renewed earth." I have seen this man often for three months, and I have not heard him use a half dozen profane words. He is completely changed; so all say who know him. I have hope of meeting him in the kingdom. Mrs. G. P. Persons, Hockanum, Conn., $1.35. D. Cogswell, Dansville, N. Y., I do not remember how much; but it was either $1 or $5. When I was sick, I got his letter misplaced; but it did me much good, for it came about the time I was sick. S. R. Mattair, Jacksonville, Fla., $7. A. French, Jacksonville, $1. G. W. Place, Dement, Ill., $2. Frederick Corker, Locklain, N. Y., $5. H. F. Carpenter, $5. J. D. Rogers, Earlville, Lasall Co., Ill., $1, and about fifty children's Pilgrim papers. I would not care if I had one thousand to put in all the Sunday Schools in the city (I mean to all who would appreciate them). There is some excellent reading matter in them. I stepped into a shoe-shop and read a few pieces to some shoe-makers; and as I was about to leave, one of them raised up with a sigh, and said, "I wish you could come and read for us every day; I will give you my up-stair room. It will seat about sixty. You can have it to teach in at night." The children's paper is better for the colored people than the Crisis or the Voice, as so few are just beginning to read. God bless Bro. Rogers and his children for the papers. S. Harper, Coopertown, N. Y., $2. $2.50 with no name to the letter.

Being here remains of the Florida trip. It was my intention when at Savannah, Ga., to have gone to Thomasville for a situation, in order to get money to travel on again. When I was within a hundred miles of Jacksonville, Fla., I was deeply impressed to go there, although about eighty miles out of my way in going to Thomasville, Ga. When I arrived at Jacksonville, I met with Bro. Smith and Wilson. After narrating to them my travels, I said to Bro. Smith, My intention is to go to Tamperberg, and as soon as I raise some money, to go on again. Bro. Wilson, and others of like faith, would not allow me, but fitted me out with all I needed,—a suit of clothes, knapsack, satchel, tracts, and also money. One brother there invited me into his store, and said, "Any thing you want is yours." Bless the Lord. And here, just about the time I was to leave to raise some money, your letter came, stating you would send me some help. A day or two after, I received an order to draw on the postmaster for $50, signed Geo. T. Adams. After getting such things as I really needed, I have about $20 left. So you see what it has cost me while sick. I have not seen but a few well days since I came here, and I don't think I shall have much health till winter, or change of climate. I shall stop here a few days longer, as I have such fine offers.

One might say, Why did not all these good things come before now? I must say, I believe that God has ordered it all, and it has come to suit him. I shall work wherever I see the best opening. I did intend to go to New Orleans, the next place, but physicians and friends advise me to keep away until frost; then I think to spend the most of the winter in Louisiana and Texas, although the Presbyterian Index, of New Orleans, says there is no soft place for preachers; so the path before me is a rough one. I desire the prayers of all the brethren and sisters.

Some body sent me nine pamphlets on the Kingdom of God and the Signs of the Times, and others adapted to suit the times. I tied two to a string and put them at the post-office. Many read them. I also put a good many tracts of different kinds there, and they were soon taken away, one at a time. At churches and post-offices are good places to work, for there you meet with all classes. I have plenty of tracts for the present. Thank you and Bro. Himes and friends for the many favors I have received. I am responsible for the use to which I put the tracts and money that are entrusted to my care; I feel that they are the the Lord's, and that I am accountable for any misdemeanor on my part; therefore pray that the tracts I scatter may be distributed to the glory of God, and that I may be kept from the hands of wicked men. My road is before me. They tell me it is a rough one. Somebody must plough it. Why may it not be me? Brethren and sisters, help me, and you will share the reward. There is enough for us all. I will write again soon, and will tell you where to send me more tracts, and the children's old papers if you choose.

In conclusion, let me beg, do for mercy's sake, for Jesus' sake, send help to the South. The poor blacks and whites are starving for the want of spiritual help. Come. Don't be ashamed nor afraid to come. If you are too proud to come, then stay away. We have seed enough of that kind. Yours in love,

J. B. Wadsworth.

From Bro. D. D. Reed.

Bro. Grant:—The good work is prospering all through these regions. It is a great field in which to labor. God is with this truth in very deed. I think I shall labor here at present. I have my tent all put up in boxes, and the poles all cut up, and the irons all taken off and packed, ready to ship for California. About the time I was ready to go, they put up the fare and freight so high, I saw it would cost me from four to five hundred dollars to get them with myself and tent; so I think I shall labor with Bro. Fassett in these regions for awhile. Perhaps it is all for the best. The Lord's will be done. I think this is the highest state of perfection in this life, at all times and in all places to say in our hearts, Thy will be done, and not mine. I feel that to-day; for all of God's ways are just and right. Let us all seek to know our place and keep in it, that when Jesus comes he may say, "Well done." In hope,

D. D. Reed.

From Bro. N. B. McMurphy.

To the Brethren and Sisters scattered abroad:—Grace, mercy and peace be with you all; and the love of God, and joy in the Holy Spirit dwell in your hearts till Jesus comes to take his chosen ones home. The prospect of his coming never looked brighter than now. Let us hold on to the blessed hope set before us; keep ourelves unspotted from the world, put on the whole armor of God, fight valiantly the good fight of faith. Many are the storms of life, but we can bear them in the strength of Jesus. Many trials come in our own pathway, but they only make us stronger, if we bear them patiently.

There is happiness in doing good and keeping God's law, that is known only to them that have had the experience. It is good to be a follower of the meek and lowly Savior. Soon he will come in his glory, and give his faithful ones a crown of life. If we overcome the world, with its sins and follies, we shall reign with him forever. Glorious thought to live with Jesus forever? How it animates my poor heart to think of this, while buffeting the storms and trials of life, being tempted, often times bearing the scoffs and reproaches of a cold and heartless world. I do indeed rejoice that these things are soon to end. All glory to God for his goodness and mercy to me, and to the children of men. His loving kindness endureth forever. Let us strive on a little longer, keep our eye on the leading star, ready for every good word and work. Pray for me that I may keep the armor on, work a little longer, and meet you all on the other shore. Yours, looking for the blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, to redeem his people from every nation, kindred and tongue.

From Sr. S. E. Teeple.

Dear pilgrims of like precious faith:—May grace, mercy and peace abide with you, and keep you blameless till Jesus comes. But few of you that read these lines have I ever seen; but for a few years I have been thinking much of meeting and greeting you in the kingdom of God. It is good to meet here with those we love, but what must it be to be there, when earth's eventful story is all told; when disease and death will be no more; when no temptation nor trials will ever have admittance; when God's "Own soft hand shall wipe the tear

From every weeping eye;
And pains and groans, and griefs and fears,
And death itself shall die."

I am looking for that time to dawn. I am sighing and groaning with the groaning creation. I am waiting for the redemption of this vile body. I am sighing for rest. O when will Jesus come? When will deliverance be given? We are still waiting, but we shall not wait in vain, for he that is to come will come and will not tarry. I am trying to live by faith, and hope at last to come off conqueror and meet all the loved of earth in the paradise of God.

I enclose my mite for the continuance of the Crisis, for I prize its weekly visits. It affords me nearly all the preaching I have. God bless the Editor, the writer, and the reader; and though sundered far, by faith we meet around one common mercy-seat. I love the cause of God, the truth of God, the people of God; and I love to work for God. Your sister in hope,

Hotchkissville, Ct., Nov. 1st, 1868.

From Sister M. E. Streeter.

Bro. Grant:—I wish to write a few lines to the saints through our much loved paper, the World's Crisis. First let me say that, since campmeeting, I have been called to pass through trying scenes. Immediately after campmeeting, Sister Thera was taken a great deal worse with erysipelas, and never suffered worse in all her life, and is still suffering severely; and I wish to say to her correspondents that she has not been able to write one word for over four weeks. But she has recieved all their kind letters, which have been very cheering to her, and also their timely aid which has come in time of need, for which you have our earnest prayers, and many, very many thanks. God bless you one and all for the good you have done us.

To the sisters in Calmus, Clinton County, Iowa, she would say, God bless you from the the crown of your head to the sole of your feet for your generous present to her in her deep affliction. She wishes you all to keep writing, and she will answer as soon as she is able to write again. You can never know how much good your letters have done her in her trying situation, deprived as she is of meeting with the dear saints from time to time as they meet to worship God. O, if you could only know her awful suffering, you would deeply pity her and cheer her constantly by your good letters of love to her. And beside all this extra suffering of dear sister Thera, my eldest sister, and her husband, who live only a few steps from us, were taken very sick with typhoid fever, the week after campmeeting, and have been very sick ever since. I have been called in two or three times to see her die, but through the great mercy of God, in answer to our earnest prayers, we trust she is out of danger. Two weeks ago, my youngest sister, who boards with me, was taken very sick with the dysentery, and I have had the care of her, and her babe, only seven months old, which has nearly worn me down. She is not able to do any thing yet. Now I would ask all God's praying children to pray for me that I may have strength as my day may be.

O, how sweet it is to know in the midst of trials and cares, that Jesus loves us. It is blessed to know that we can nestle close to Jesus, and feel his loving arms around us, pressing us close to his loving bosom, and whispering words of peace to our weary, tired hearts. Bless the Lord that I ever gave up all for the Lord, and was willing to make a sacrifice to him of all, casting all my cares and burdens on the Lord, and trusting in him for all I have. Yes it is blessed to live where we can look up to God, and ask him to "Give us this day our daily bread." I love to live in this way, for he has said no good thing will he withhold from them that walk uprightly, and I do know that I try to walk uprightly, and to live so that I feel his approbation daily; and to-day I can say with the poet:—

"If ever I loved thee, dear Jesus, 'tis now."

O, I do feel blessed good in the Lord while worn down with overworking myself, and cares and anxieties. What could I do if it were not for this blssed hope that we are so near the port of endless rest. I do bless the Lord to-day for what I feel in my heart, and that we are so near the time for Jesus to come and end all these trying scenes, for in the kingdom there will be no more sickness, no more pain, no more distress no more parting with my dear husband, who is earnestly seeking a bride for his Master.

To those who have written me such heart-cheering letters I would say, God bless you, for your letters are worth more than gold and silver in my deep trials and sorrows. Do write again and often, and I will answer as soon as I am able and can get time. Do pray for me and us all, for we need your prayers in our afflictions. Your sister in Jesus,

Mary E. Streeter.

N. Dana, Mass. Oct. 4th 1868.

Bro. G. W. Turner, Augusta, Wis., Oct. 27th, writes:—"I find myself this evening away up in northern Wisconsin, in altogether a new field. I was invited up here some two months ago, and there was a good interest started. There seemed to be no one to follow it up. I was persuaded to leave my former field of labor, where I had been for eleven years, and remove here, where I hope to honor God and do good to my fellow men till the Master comes."

Heat in Nevada Silver Mines.—A curious fact, which corroborates the theory of some geologists that the interior of the earth is a mass of melted rock, has been lately brought to notice in regard to the Nevada silver mines. Heat is the chief enemy encountered after reaching a great depth, and, instead of pumping out water the miners have to pump in air. A Nevada paper says:

The increase in the heat of our mines is now beginning to give many of our mining companies more trouble, and is proving a great obstacle to mining operations in those levels lying below a depth of one thousand feet than any veins or pocket deposits of water yet encountered. A number of the leading companies on the Comstock are now engaged in putting in engines to be used expressly for driving fans for furnishing air to the lower levels, forcing it through large tubes of galvanized iron. With this great increase of heat in our mines comes a great decrease of water; in fact, in our deepest mine—the Bullion, which has attained the depth of twelve hundred feet—not a drop of water is to be seen; it is as dry as a lime-kiln and as hot as an oven. In the lower workings of the Chollar-Potosi mine, which are a perpendicular depth of eleven hundred feet below the surface, the thermometer now stands at one hundred degrees—a frightful heat to be endured by a human being engaged in a kind of labor calling for severe muscular exertion. Here, also, we find the water to have decreased till there is at the present time a very insignificant amount, it being necessary to run the pump but four hours out of the twenty-four.

A Lesson and a Warning for the Bonapartes.—A Paris paper in an article headed "The Spanish Revolution and its teachings," moralizes as follows upon the interview between the reigning family of France and the ex-reigning family of Spain on the day when Isabella II. fled from her kingdom:

"The Emperor, though doubtless impressed with the sad grandeur of the spectacle, maintained a calm and dignified attitude, befitting a prince who thinks and reflects. Not so, if we may believe report, the Empress. At the sight of this Queen, who had been her sovereign, coming with her son, fallen like herself to ask an asylum in France, the Empress burst into tears and sobbed violently. The Prince Imperial had been brought to the meeting, and it is allowable to suppose that his mother, when she saw the young Prince of Asturias flying from his country, could not avoid the thought that a like destiny may possibly await her own son.

The Empress is a Spaniard; she has breathed the same air, lived in the same circle, and been imbued with the same ideas as the exiled Spanish Queen. The fall of this throne is a check for those ideas to which it is impossible that those who share them should be insensible. If in a country where they were thought to be firmly established, these principles have broken down, it is impossible to deny the inference that they cannot be very solid in France. It was, we may respectfully suppose, in order that he might profit by the lesson, that the Prince Imperial was brought by his father to the painful interview. No tutor, no books, could impress on a youthful mind such valuable teaching as this acted page of contemporary history which paternal solicitude has placed under the eyes of the heir apparent to the French throne."

Good Humor.—Keep in good humor. It is not great calamities that embitter existence; it is the petty vexations, the small jealousies, the little disappointments, the minor miseries, that make the heart heavy and the temper sour. Don't let them. Anger is a pure waste of vitality; it is always foolish, and always disgraceful, except in some very rare cases, when it is kindled by seeing wrong done to another; and even that noble rage seldom mends the matter. Keep in good humor.

No man does his best except when he is cheerful. A light heart makes nimble hands, and keeps the mind free and alert. No misfortune is so great as one that sours the temper. Until cheerfulness is lost, nothing is lost. Keep in good humor.

— When I commenced my duties as Prof. of Theology, I feared that the frequency with which I should have to pass over the same portions of Scripture would abate the interest in my own mind in reading them. But after more than fifty years of study, it is my experience that with every class my interest increases.—President Woods.

— The soul of man sways hither and thither like the sea, tossed by restless yearnings, and passions, and fears; and there is no shore against which it can break and rest, but the bosom of its God.

Obituaries.

Tewksbury. Died in Concord, N. H., Oct. 8th, 1868, Bro. Henry Tewksbury, aged forty-six years.

Bro. T. had a limb badly crushed by the cars at Manchester, which required amputation, and he survived the shock but a short time, when he calmly fell asleep in Jesus. His last words were expressions of praise to God for his great mercy in saving him through the merits of Jesus' death. He had commenced to labor publicly in the Lord's vineyard to good acceptance and much profit, we trust. He left a wife and four children, who suffer a great bereavement, but are comforted with the blessed expectation of very soon meeting the kind husband and affectionate father, where the enemy death can come no more.

J. Couch.

Gage. Died in Dover, N. H., Oct. 17th, 1868 Sr. Jane L. Gage, aged twenty-six years and four months.

Her sickness was fever, terminating in consumption, and although she suffered much, she bore it with great patience. Sister Jane professed faith in Christ about six years ago. Her sickness found her in a low state of mind, but the Savior that had blessed her so many times during those years that she bore the cross, again appeared in his former loveliness, and then she felt that she had rather be laid away than ever sin against so kind a Savior again. Our sister leaves loved ones to mourn her loss. Words of comfort were spoken by the writer at her funeral, by request of the deceased.

J. G. Smith.

Pinkham. Died of diphtheria, at Haverhill, Mass., Oct. 20th, 1868, Emma Belle, daughter of Thomas F. and Caroline Pinkham, aged three years and nine months.

The funeral services were conducted by H. L. Hastings. The prayers of the people of God are desired that this affliction may be sanctified to the parents, and that God may give consolation to the broken-hearted and the sad.

"So fades the lovely blooming flower,
Cut down and withered in an hour."

H. L. H.

Holt. Died in Blackstone, Mass., after a brief illness, on Tuesday, Oct. 13th, 1868, Susan D., wife of Bro. Enoch Holt.

Severe is the affliction of our brother and his children, but her labors and suffering are over. She maintained her christian integrity unto the end. She peacefully sleeps, awaiting the quickening voice of the great Life-Giver.

M. R. Phetteplace.

Summary of News.

DOMESTIC.

The Rebellion in Cuba.—New York, Nov. 4. An Havana special says that the whole Island is in an excited state, and that business is prostrated on account of the distrust and alarm of the people. The Captain General is strangely reticent. A deputation of leading citizens, who called upon him, were insulted by an officer of his household, and the leaders were ordered to Spain.

A telegram from the American consul, asking that a few United States war vessels be sent there, was refused transmission over the wires. The insurgents are six thousand strong, numbering many Spaniards, and their cry is "Spain, Prim and Serrano, and down with Taxation." The troops number ten thousand, and are acknowledged to be insufficient to suppress the rebellion. Lersundi, it is said, has received ample instructions from the Provisional Government. The news by the Cadiz steamer is anxiously expected.

Remarkable Phenomena.—Some very strange occurrences were recently observed at the port of Talcahuano, in Chili. At two A. M. on the 14th of September, the waters of the sea were discovered to be hot, while the fish cast on shore were cooked. The sea was perfectly calm at the time, but later in the morning much agitation was noticed. No one cared to sleep, for fear of another inundation. On the night of the 15th, shortly after midnight, the wind suddenly fell calm, the tide rose to the breakwaters, and a strange noise, dull and prolonged, was heard, and though it appeared subterraneous and distant, it was perceivable in every direction; and though there was not air enough to stir a feather, the sea swelled and the tide ran with great violence. The ships swung round rapidly, and the anchor chains, shaken by a powerful force, produced a sharp metallic sound; the currents were frhm the Quiriquina Island to the River Andalien, and vice versa.

Persecution of Missionaries in China.—The Shanghai Recorder gives the particulars of a recent outrage committed on Rev. Mr. Taylor and his party of missionaries near Chinkeang. Their house was surrounded by a mob of eight or ten thousand people, who broke into it, destroyed all their property, and then set fire to it. The inmates were forced to throw the children from the upper windows, and the women were obliged to follow at the risk of their lives. The ladies belonging to the mission, have all more or less suffered from wounds and bruises, and the Rev. Mr. Reed had his eyes so severely injured, that there are very serious doubts of his ever recovering his sight. The outrage was caused by the literary class, who spread a report that the missionaries boiled up children to use them for medicine.

Earthquake in Ireland.—On Saturday, October 24th, severe shocks of earthquake, followed by a loud rumbling noise, were felt at two places near Mallow, in Cork county, Ireland. It is stated that houses were much shaken, furniture was broken, and the occupants of the houses were greatly terrified. At the time the shocks were felt it was blowing a hurricane.

Items.

☞ Ratazzi is in Paris, where he is trying to get the French government to remove the men it has in the Roman territory to keep the Pope from being upset by the Italian Catholics. Should he succeed, he will be restored to the Premiership of the Italian Ministry, which he lost a year ago, when Garibaldi's last run on Rome broke down. The College of Cardinals, under the Presidency of the Pope, are discussing the ways and means of increasing their army, should the French force be withdrawn. They'd better save their time and their money, for they'll be able to raise no force that could keep the Italian soldiery out of Rome.

☞ There is a church near Bergen, Prussia, made entirely of rags, and capable of holding nearly a thousand persons. It is circular within and octagonal without. The relieves outside, and the statues within, the roof, the ceiling the Corinthian capitals, are all of paper mache, rendered waterproof by saturation in vitriol, lime water, whey and white of eggs.

☞ The Pope has lately summoned to Rome Dr. Malagadi, of Fano, a physician in whom he has great confidence, and who has carefully examined his leg. The frequent suppuration is regarded by the doctor as a bad symptom, and he is understood to have spoken despondingly of the Pope's condition. The Holy Father, however, is very active and appears to be in good health.

☞ The Free Church of Scotland, since its separation from the Establishment in 1843, when nearly 500 clergymen voluntarily resigned their homes and livings, has built 900 churches, 650 manses, 3 theological colleges, 2 normal or training institutions, and 500 schools.

☞ The Emperor Francis Joseph has just sent to the Pope, as a mark of filial devotion, a magnificent Roman Missal, on which the best workmen of Vienna have been engaged for several years past. The cover is ornamented with precious stones set in gold.

☞ It is calculated that since the establishment of the decimal system in France, gold and silver money has been coined by the Paris mint to the amount of no less than twenty-eight hundred millions of dollars.

☞ A gentleman of this city, recently returned from California via Salt Lake City, is confident that the Pacific Railroad, from Omaha to San Francisco, will be completed by the first of August, 1869.

☞ The great cupola over the dome of the Holy Tomb has at last been completed, and the Governor of Palestine, as well as the general consuls of France and Russia, have signed the protocol.

☞ In almost all the cities and towns of Spain, the statues of saints and the crucifixes placed at the corners of the streets, and lighted during the night by a lamp, have been removed.

☞ A medallion carpet, from the Paris Exposition, is to be put down on the parlor of a lady residing on Fifth avenue, New York, who paid $11,000 for it.

☞ The Pope is said to be a Free Mason, despite his bull of excommunication against the fraternity.

☞ The smoke from the volcanic eruption in the Sandwich Islands was seen one thousand miles from the islands, and at half that distance was so dense that officers of ships were prevented from making their observations.

☞ The recent conspiracy against the Sultan of Turkey is said to have been instigated by foreigners and directed against the existence of Turkey as an independent State. It had extensive ramifications among all classes.

☞ It is now thought that if the Queen of Spain had made a sudden visit to Cuba, her subjects there would have hailed her presence with rapture and she might still have been "Queen of the Antilles."

☞ One of the effects of the revolution in Spain may be the cutting off of $1,000,000 in gold, ecclesiastical dues sent annually to Rome.

☞ It is said that all the foreign ministers at Washington—including the English and Turkish—are Catholics.

☞ The glaciers of the Chamounix are gradually diminishing, which fact is accounted for by French savans to the increasing moderation of the temperature, caused by the removal of woods, the clearing of uncultivated grounds, the opening out of roads and ways and also to the removal of hedges.

☞ All the vessels arriving at Valparaiso have encountered severe storms, and passed through large fields of ice, but met with comparatively little damage.

☞ The Chinese have contracted the habit of covering their umbrellas, rooms and houses, everything, in short, with old European stamps, which they buy by thousands and millions.

Mission Tent for Florida.

Shall the Maine Mission Tent go to Florida on a mission during the coming winter? Bro. Griffin, who is a good and faithful manager, proposes to go with the tent, provided the committee consent and the friends of missions will provide the means. Who that has abundance of means, can do better than to aid such a work? One thousand dollars would sustain such a mission during the winter. We have brethren in the State who could do it single handed, if they would. It remains for them to say what they will do at once.

Maine Annual Conference.

The Maine Annual Conference will hold its next session in Bath, commencing Wednesday evening, at 7 o'clock, Nov. 18th, and continue over the following Sunday. We hope all our preachers will make an effort to attend, and a good delegation of the brethren and sisters, who feel ready to labor for the salvation of sinners. The church and friends in Bath cordially invite us, and will do all they can to entertain those who come. But they have no places for horses. Those who come with teams must provide for them. Several brethren out of the city can take horses. Brethren will call on Brn. N. G. Reed and Samuel Leman, who will direct them to other places.

J. K. Partridge.
I. C. Wellcome.

Notice.

The Second Advent Chapel at Locustville, Hopfkinton, R. I., will be dedicated to the worship of God, on Thursday, Nov. 26th, 1868. The meetings are to be protracted over the following Sabbath, and longer if the interest demands. Brethren and preachers from abroad are invited to attend. Come, brethren and sisters, with a mind to work for God, and the salvation of dying men.

For the church, A. Durfee.

Notice.

The next session of the Maine Central Quarterly Conference will be held at the Town House, in Rome, commencing Nov. 26th, at 7 o'clock P. M., and holding over the following Sunday. Brethren and sisters are invited to attend and unite in the worship of the Lord and the work of saving souls.

William A. Knight, Sec.

Notice.

If the Lord will, we will commence a meeting in Casco, Me., Thursday evening, Nov. 12th, and continue as long as duty may demand. We hope to see a general gathering of the saints.

General Conference at Buchanan.

There will be a general social conference of believers in the speedy advent of our Lord Jesus Christ, at Buchanan, Mich., commencing Monday, Nov. 23d, and continuing over the following Lord's day. Elder John Couch, of New Hampshire, will be present to preach the word. Also, Elds. J. V. Himes, Wm. Sheldon, Frank Burr, and many others of our western ministers. We invite all our friends, north, south, east, and west, to be in attendance. Those purposing to make visits east or west this fall or winter, will do well to arrange to stop here during the whole or a portion of the conference. Provision will be made for all who attend. Our hearts are large enough, and our homes are open. Come, and bring a blessing from the Lord with you. Many have long wished for an opportunity to visit this place. Embrace this occasion, and it will do, not only us, but your own soul good.

The General Ministerial Conference will hold an adjourned session at the same time, which will add greatly to the interest of the occasion. Come to the feast. In behalf of the church at Buchanan,

D. R. Mansfield, Pastor.

Wm. L. Himes, Secretary.

General Ministerial Conference.

The Western General Ministerial Advent Christian Conference will meet at Buchanan, Mich., Thursday, Nov. 26th (in connection with the Social Conference), as decided by a vote of the General Conference at its last session. This meeting is not to be regarded as a special meeting, but as a continuation of our unfinished meeting at De Kalb; hence, all ministers having a good standing in any of the Western Advent Christian Conferences can take part in our deliberations, as specified in the primary call. Let the watchmen rally. We represent a noble cause. Let us honor it in earnest efforts for its promotion.

Wm. Sheldon, Secretary.

Notice.

The first quarterly meeting with the church at Woodhull, N. Y., will commence Friday evening, Nov. 27th, and continue over the Sunday following. All are invited to attend.

J. W. Taylor.

Notice.

Having removed to Westfield, Mass., I desire my mail addressed particularly to Lock Box 616, there being two other persons of my address residing there. By observing the above, much confusion may be avoided.

E. Owen.

Notice.

Sr. E. S. Jennings will commence a series of meetings in Towsley's Hall, in Waterloo, N. Y., commencing Nov. 15th. Brethren, come and aid us.

G. Dillabaugh.

Notice.

To the brethren and sisters scattered abroad, who are interested in the Star of Hope Mission: Sr. Anna E. Smith, Superintendent, can procure the full report of her labors and expenses for the past twelve months, which is got up in pamphlet form. Single copies 15 cents, by the dozen $1.25. The proceeds, after paying the printer's bills, etc., will go to defray the expenses of the mission. They can be had by sending to Anna E. Smith, 14 Laurens Street, New York, or to H. L. Hastings, Scriptural Tract Repository, Boston.

Notice.

There are many persons who are too feeble to work hard, others cannot obtain employment that affords much pay. We would say to such that if they would like to canvass for works that are excellent and very saleable, we will put them on the right track if they will write us with a stamp to pay for answer. Men and women both can be supplied. Receiving as we are new subscription books from various publishing houses, we know the merits of the works we are prepared to recommend.

M. D. Wellcome, Yarmouth, Me.

Notice.

Our meetings in South Boston, for the worship of God, will be held hereafter at "Fraternity Hall," No. 120 Broadway, every Sunday, the Lord willing. Come over and help us.

J. N. Berry, Secretary.

Notice.

Those at the west wishing books, tracts, or charts, can be supplied at Rochester, N. Y., by addressing Dr. J. Naramore, (Eagle Block) Rochester, N. Y.

Notice.

Having been released from all contracts and arrangements of public labor, I am now at liberty to go wherever the door may be opened. Application must be made soon. Address Eld. Peter S. W. Deyo, Strawberry Point, Clayton Co., Iowa.

Appointments.

☞ We would say to our preaching Brethren that it is necessary we should receive their appointments as early as Tuesday Morning, as our paper goes to press about noon; otherwise they will not be inserted till the week following.

"All the days of my appointed time will I wait till my change come."

So long, oh pitying Christ, upon this bed of anguish,
Tossing in pain, and rest delays to come,
Through weary years of woe compelled to languish,
Longing in vain for the far peaceful home.

Longing for rest, to be released forever
From restless nights, and morn without a sun;
Crying to thee, who only canst deliver;
And yet thy chariot wheels refuse to come.

So long debarred from all the outward glory,
From spring's sweet breath and summer's radiant bloom,
And autumn's gorgeous, ever-changing story,—
They pass unheeded, shadowed by the gloom.

That settles round me, shutting out the promise,—
"As thy day is thy strength shall also be";
Pressed to my lips for aye the bitter chalice
Which I must drain; grant, Lord, unmurmuringly.

Unmurmuringly, thy grace is all-sufficient,
My needs cannot outrun that blest supply;
Tempted and tossed, yet will I cling persistent
To this sure rock, as earthly comforts fly.

Till my change come, my appointed time I'm waiting;
Dear Father, is it long thy smitten child must stay,
Ere with the blood-bought, happy throng awaking,
I rise to be with thee? oh, joyful day!

Thou knowest how I long for its appearing;
Dear Savior, help me still the cross to bear,
To patient wait, as slowly I am nearing
The rest so longed for, I with thee shall share.

For the World's Crisis.

STAR OF HOPE MISSION.

Mr. Editor:—Some one tells us that "variety is the spice of life," and if this be true, perhaps some of your readers may be interested in a few lines from one who is an entire stranger, and has not heretofore had the pleasure to drop a line of any kind to your valuable paper.

This morning, a copy of the Crisis fell into my hands, and after glancing at some very precious little gems, my eye rested on a letter from Sr. A. E. Smith, of the "Star of Hope Mission," N. Y. Well, sir, I have had the pleasure to abide at that place since its anniversary meeting, Oct. 13th, 1868, and though I may suppose the manuscript came to you from this place, I had never seen it, and it therefore came to me through your columns with as much interest as to any of your readers.

Sr. Smith is not in New York, that I may ask her any questions about it, but I take it for granted that she has certainly had good cause to write such a letter, or she would not have stopped her work long enough to do it. Now, while the subject is fresh in the minds of your readers, and Sister Smith is not here to consult, I want to add just a word in regard to the mission.

I have recently come from the city of "Brotherly Love," and have, for one of my years, seen the inside of many institutions, but nothing just like this. There was still plenty there of mission labor, but the Lord distinctly directed my steps here, at least for a time; and I am taking notes by the way. Some voice here seemed to say very distinctly to me, "Come over to Macedonia and help us." Accordingly I was here at the appointed day to begin with this mission its second year, and, if possible, to help on this great and good work. I found the field white, and the laborers few. We held council after council, prayed time after time, to know how we should best reach all classes of people in this vicinity, and best glorify God. The result was, to hold more meetings, fill up the Sabbath School room, prepare a place for a day nursery, where poor women might leave little ones while they go out to work, etc. This we did at once. Then we must have the front converted into a store, in which we might wait on all who made application to the house for food, medicine, clothing, or anything else. We proposed to the Superintendent that, while we had an office of this kind, we might just as well have shelves and counter in it, and invite some of our friends to give us small wares to sell on commission. The great, big, generous heart said, Yes, yes; I am going shortly down east, and having several appointments, shall be gone some time; but if you will have this thing go on at home, you shall have these facilities to go on with. I suppose you want a carpenter and some lumber? Yes, to begin with, that will do.

The preacher woman vanished, donned her clerical robes, and in a few moments was there again with saw, plane and hammer in hand. Now, brother, I have come to the place where I cannot describe; but you and your readers may imagine how the missionary spirit went into that lumber and brought out the required furniture. Plane, hammer and saw,—saw, hammer and plane, were the music of the mission for the next three days, and there stood the store and dispensary, ready for the sick, hungry and needy. She works hard and fast, quiet, and subdued (I guess she studies her sermons to go East at the same time, for I never saw her sit down to do it), scarcely taking time to eat; but she hears the clock strike twelve (noonday). The saw half through the board, and there it stands, the door slams, and she is gone—where? why, her testimony in your paper is, that she met a few in covenant at that moment, all praying God to bless and prosper the "Star of Hope Mission." May the Lord bless and reward that little company, and will they allow me to report, as I stand watchword, that he is now hearing, and graciously doing what you ask.

Sister Smith has done what she could to set us all in working order; gave us our several orders, to take the responsibility of home duties, and free her mind, while she shall go out and remind the people once more that Jesus is coming again to establish his kingdom. We are on our beat at home, going our solemn rounds of duty among the dirty and degraded of New York. We are here to clinch every nail of truth she may drive anywhere, and have strong faith that united effort can not fail to produce mighty results. May the Lord attend his word wherever she preaches to-day, as you might suppose he would do could you only hear the earnest prayers of these devoted sable children she has gathered around her at home. They hold her right up on their faith before Father, and look anxiously to welcome her home again.

I notice in her letter that some Sanballat and their friends have been greatly exercised about the finery in the institution. I assure you, brother, that I have not been able to find it, though I have sought for it carefully the last three weeks. I am not very proud, but, for one of the family, would be able to enjoy a few more comforts than I see here. I have long been a missionary, and must tell you that I always had quite as good accommodations as I find at Laurens St. We all eat with a tin spoon, and contentment, and think it great gain. And though Sister tells you how few chairs we have, I sit very comfortably, as I write to you, on the upturned end of a small box. I might tell you some other items, but I fear you might think we were complaining. No, no. Not a bit of it. We have a mind to work, and a fine field to work in. We do have a good many comforts, and one of the greatest is a regular family altar, some good corn cakes, and something always to eat out of our spoons, or drink from our bowls.

I see nothing wrong here, only that our Sister has had her hands too full, her heart too generous, to support this one, and that, who come with some claim on her purse. They still come, but we gently remind them that a new year has been opened at the Home,—a new leaf turned over; and the Secretary (Mrs. Dow), is ever on hand (Superintendent present or absent) to take account of all that comes in or goes out this year, to be reported systematically. We think we have commenced the year right, and we do it with a full set of books strictly kept, if for no other purpose, to screen our Superintendent for all coming time from all censure and blame.

It seems to us now, that it is necessary to make a note of many things which her own pen would be too modest to name, and yet they make up the account. I consider that this is the exact time and place to set things in a proper light. I am opposed to waiting till this sister has worn herself out in the work, and then we bury her under a marble monument, with the inscription that her life was a whole sacrifice to the outcasts of society, and that she fed, clothed, warmed and taught those for whom the multitude did not care. All this and many more wonderful things may truthfully be cut on it, but the better way is that we, who want to be all the Lord's, shall take hold of this work with her, and lead the blind, halt and lame into the narrow way of life. We would say to her, in the language of one of Bunyan's characters, "Pilgrim, keep your head above the water. I feel the bottom, that it is good. Your feet are on a Rock, and while your heart and hands are turned toward the throne, you certainly are safe." Keep it in mind that the disciple is not above his Lord; and remember, too, that the many temples named for St. Peter and Paul were not reared during their lifetime, but after they had suffered all manner of persecutions, and were horribly murdered.

But enough of this now. Should it be likely to interest your readers, I am ready to furnish you some incidents of what goes on at the Mission from time to time. I am done with the Superintendent now, and ready to report to you of our work itself. I preferred to say of her what I have while she is not at home, lest out of some sensitive feeling she might choose to direct our pen to some other subject, while she innocently suffered on, quietly and alone.

Our meetings are full of the Holy Spirit, as illustrated last Friday night at our conference meeting. An old veteran of the cross rose and said that he preached to a humble little church every Friday night. Constantly he missed some of the flock, and on inquiry he often found they had strayed to some place which they called the Laurens St. Mission. "I thought," said he, "I too would find it, and here I am, to say with one of old, 'The half hath not been told me.' O, bless the Lord that I have found the Mission. I feel that God is here, and I wish I had found the place long ago." In the family we constantly are made to feel that "it is more blessed to give than to receive."

A few mornings since, a woman, whom we know to be an honest, hard working woman, came to ask the loan of ten cents, to buy her some coal, wood, and tea. Said she had nothing for her supper, and felt as if she would like a little bite of breakfast. We had the pleasure to direct her to the kitchen, where she was fed and warmed, and then selected a suitable place to add to her scanty wardrobe, whereby she might be more comfortable while she went out to scrub. As her back was bared, to show us how hardly she had been dealt with in the past, the sight gave us a sensation of pain and sickness. Long furrows had been made and healed repeatedly from her shoulders down; and though she is a contraband, a stranger in this city, with not one relative out of a large family, scattered during the war, she earns enough to rent a room, which she highly prizes as her home, where she has liberty whether she has food or not. The donors to the "Star of Hope" are her friends; and when she cannot possibly avoid it, she applies to them through the mission.

We could go on, and show you a genteel poor man coming to the Dispensary morning and evening, with a painful and dangerous disease on his hand. Here he receives the attentions of some Mary or Martha of the mission; and a warm poultice, with a few kind words, lights up his countenance, while he tells us that he will now come to our religious meetings.

We might still continue, and tell you of one of the little ones of this flock, in deep affliction and poverty, to-day sitting beside the cold remains of a husband, who has just fallen asleep in Jesus, and she knows not where, nor how, to get means for the cheapest christian burial. Certainly, she comes to the mission; and this morning, one of the missionaries goes to the house of mourning, bearing a part of the needed fund, and some shoes to cover the little innocent feet, that to-morrow shall follow to the mission (for burial services) for the last time, and then to the lonely grave, a dear christian father. May the orphan's God make our Home to them a blessing. Come, go with us when you will, and visit our sick; look in upon our children; listen to our singing, and you will go away convinced that this is none other than a "Star of Hope." Yours, etc.,

E. S. M., Resident Physician.

"Star of Hope Mission," No. 14 Laurens Street, New York, Nov. 1st, 1868.

— A preacher once inquired of Garrick, the comedian, "Why is it that you theatrical performers, who deal only in fiction, have so much power over your audiences, while we clergymen who deal in truth, have so little power over ours? Garrick replied, "The reason is that we treat fiction as though it were truth, while you treat truth as though it were fiction."

— When the celebrated Haydn was asked how all his sacred music was so cheerful, the great composer replied, "I cannot make it otherwise. I write according to the thoughts I feel; when I think upon God, my heart is so full of joy that the notes dance and leap, as it were, from my pen. And since God has given me a cheerful heart, it will be pardoned in me if I serve him with a cheerful spirit."

ABBOTT'S NAPOLEON.

The History of Napoleon III., Emperor of the French. Including a brief narrative of all the most important events which have occurred in Europe since the fall of Napoleon I. until the present time. By John S. C. Abbott.*

Very appropriately, if not prophetically, did the wisest of men say that "of making many books there is no end." The mighty steam-press is groaning daily beneath the weight of its printed sheets, which are to go forth to the world bearing upon their pages that which shall instruct, enlighten and elevate; or that which shall pander to a vitiated taste, demoralize and debase. Books, like companions, always make an impression upon the mind either for good or evil, and the requirement, "Take heed how you read," is equally authoritative with the command, "Take heed how you hear." Thousands of worthless novels are flooding the land, to be eagerly caught up and read by as many trifling minds. But thousands also of good, solid, instructive volumes are teeming from the press, and cordially welcomed by as many appreciative hearts. An ardent lover of such books, we are always ready to employ our pen in their favor.

In entering upon our present work of review, we are not forgetful of the fact that the very name associated with the volume before us will awaken prejudice in some minds, and lead them to turn a cold shoulder to that, and to what we have to say about it. The author of Napoleon I. will not be received with favor by those who rudely assailed and harshly criticised that work, and not the work only, but even impugned the motives of the writer.

Of course, when a volume is cast upon the uncertain waves of public opinion, it is expected that reviewers will express their opinions openly and frankly pro or con, and that critic who candidly and courteously dissents from the author, is much more respected than the cynic or the flatterer. But no reviewer has a right to cast aspersions upon the author.

Our opinions respecting the Napoleonic dynasty have, as we must admit, been formed by the representations made to us mainly through English literature; and who can for a moment admit that such testimony is wholly impartial?

The author of this work is a citizen of our republic, and a Protestant clergyman; and our respect for his relation ought to lead us to believe that he would not be likely to entertain too favorable opinions of monarchal government and the Papal church. He assures us in his "Preface" that in "writing the history of the restoration of the empire under Napoleon III., he has been laborious in investigation, and conscientious in statement." Of the truth of the former statement we have abundant evidence in the volume before us; of the latter we accept his word for that. He tells us that from the commencement of the restored empire in 1852, unto the present time, he has carefully studied all its movements. Twice he has visited France in order to observe the practical operations of the government. He has conversed with distinguished French gentlemen of the different political and religious parties, and has carefully listened to the observations of intelligent foreigners from the different nationalities of Europe and America residing in Paris. He also collected from London and Paris every book and pamphlet he could find upon the subject of the empire, whether from the pen of friend or foe.

Thus furnished, he assures us that he has written this book with as honest and earnest a desire to present the truth as it is possible for him to possess. It has been his aim to make every statement so accurate as to stand the test of the severest scrutiny. On every page almost we are cited to the source from whence he collects the records now given to the American reader. We therefore accept our author's statements given in the Preface, and enter upon a perusal of the volume with an unprejudiced mind.

The subjects presented for our consideration are those sketched in brief by the writer:

"The Revolution of 1789, sweeping away in blood and flame the throne of the ancient kings; the republic, with its convulsions, its anarchy, its reign of terror, over whose woes even angels might weep; the empire of Napoleon I., dazzling the world with its power and glory; the alliance of all the dynasties of Europe to crush the republican empire; the long and bloody struggle; the overthrow of Napoleon; the restoration of the throne of the Bourbons by foreign armies; the expulsion of Charles X.; the rise and fall of Louis Philippe; the transient republic; the recall of the exiled Bonapartes; the election to the presidency of Louis Napoleon; the coup d'etat; the restored empire; the brilliant reign of Napoleon III.; his internal policy; his foreign policy; the Roman question; the Roman campaign; the Mexican invasion; the liberation of Italy; the re-organization of Germany;—such are the subjects which are involved in the career of Napoleon III. . . .

"Perhaps no man has been more unscrupulously assailed than Napoleon III. There is scarcely a crime of which he has not been accused. All the epithets in the vocabulary of vituperation have been exhausted in application to him, and yet you may search all his multiplied addresses and his voluminous writings in vain to find one angry word in reply. He is always the refined and courteous gentleman.

"It is a remarkable fact that Napoleon III. occupies a space in the journals of Christendom larger, probably, than that of all the other sovereigns of earth united. One can scarcely take up a newspaper, in Europe or America, which does not contain some allusion to the French; and the writer submits the question, whether there is not found in this narrative a more reasonable explanation of the fact than in the popular rumors which are floating in the air."

This volume is a royal octavo of about seven hundred pages, medium type, and differing from the majority of books in the brevity of its margin. It contains a vast amount of important information, written in a very fascinating style. It is illustrated with nine first-class steel engravings, executed by the best artists in Paris. The first represents the emperor in his prime; a portrait of his father, Louis, King of Holland; a portrait of Queen Hortense, his mother, and the young Louis Napoleon, a child of seven years by her side. We have also a family group—the emperor, the empress, and the prince imperial, in the quietude of home; the Chateau of Arenburg, in whose retirement the emperor spent most of the years of his early youth; the castle of Ham, where he languished in captivity for six years; the palace of the Tuileries, the city residence of the emperor as seen from the court of the Louvre; the palace of Fountain bleau, the favorite country retreat of the royal family; and a bird's-eye view of the Great Exposition in its central buildings and surroundings. The portraits are taken from paintings in the royal palace.

This volume, to the student of prophecy, who has regarded the Napoleon dynasty as marked in the prophetic word, will possess an interest and value such as the carnal reader cannot possess. He has here embodied every thing connected with the life of this man, after whom the world wonders, from his birth to the present time, that is of any importance. In our next, we will give a brief biographical sketch of Napoleon III. M. D. W.

Note. We would say to those who wish to learn more particularly respecting the work, if they will write, enclosing a stamp, we will send them a descriptive circular. The price of the work, substantially bound in muslin, green and gold, is $4.00; in morocco, sprinkled edges, $5.00. Ministers ordering the work through us, can have it at a discount.

"THE LAMBS."

And is it true, as I am told,
That there are lambs within the fold
Of God's beloved Son?
That Jesus Christ with tender care
Will in his arms most gently bear
The helpless little one.

And I a little straying lamb,
May come to Jesus as I am,
Though goodness I have none;
May now be folded in his breast,
As birds within the parent's nest,
And be his little one.

And he can do all this for me,
Because in sorrow on the tree
He once for sinners hung;
And having put their sins away,
He now rejoices, day by day,
To cleanse the little one.

Others there are who love me too;
But who with all their love could do
What Jesus Christ has done?
Then if he teaches me to pray,
I'll surely go to him and say,
"Lord, keep thy little one."

Then by this gracious Shepherd fed,
And by his mercy gently led
Where living waters run,
My greatest pleasure will be this,
That I'm a little lamb of his
Who loves the little one.

EFFECTS OF CHRISTIANITY.

The religion of Christ is a religion of love; its law is the religion of kindness, and its exercises are the exercises of benevolence. It shuts out the parade of grandeur, and the circle of worldly pleasures. It delights to visit the abodes of misery and the retreats of sorrow. It whispers its consolations to the dejected mind, and administers relief to the wants of the sufferer.

Religion is a love that comforts the poor widow and the orphan, and brings relief to weary souls. It brings glad tidings to the captive soul and sets at liberty them that are bound. It has comforted many a poor soldier while in the prison cell. When every hope was gone, Jesus condescended to bless him with the hope of heaven. This hope is for all of us to enjoy. "Seek, and you shall find, knock, and it shall be opened unto you."

Paganism could glory in her heroes, her lawgivers, her philosophers, her orators, and her poets; but Christianity exhibits a Founder who went about doing good, and his disciples in every age have devoted their time, their talents, their property and their influence to instruct and bless mankind.—Earnest Christian.

Gems.

— All we possess is from God, not fortune.

— Iron sharpens iron; scholar, the scholar.

— Truth which cuts the conscience, cures the soul.

— In prosperity, caution; in adversity, patience.

— Benefits, like flowers, please only when fresh.

— Great is peace: it is to the land what leaven is to the dough.

— No man can avoid his own company, so he had best make it as good as possible.

— We must tell some men a great deal to teach them a little.

— To the heart that is full of kindness every other heart beats in kindness.

— Nothing can be accomplished without labor, and with it nothing can be too difficult.

— All is right everywhere when the heart is right.

— There is only one thing worse than ignorance, and that is conceit.—Of all intractable fools an overwise man is the worst.

— They who respect themselves will be honored; but they who do not care about their character will be despised.

Our knowledge is as the rivulet, narrow and shallow; our ignorance as the sea, vast and profound.

— He who has not forgiven an enemy, has never yet tasted one of the most sublime enjoyments of life.

— Working and thinking should go together; the thinker working, and the worker thinking.

— The lives of three are no lives; that of the too compassionate, of the man with a temper, and the misanthrope.

— It is as difficult for revenge to act without exciting suspicion, as for a rattlesnake to stir without making a noise.

— There is not a stream of trouble so deep and swift-running that we may not cross safely over it, if we have courage to steer and strength to pull.

— Bible promises are like the beams of the sun, which shine as freely in at the window of the poor man's cottage as the rich man's palace.

— By religion I mean a steady choice and affectionate adherence to God, as the paramount object of our hearts, and the supreme sum and centre of our happiness.

— "The poor ye have always with you." and if you have the ability to succor, and withhold relief, your religion would perplex an inspired apostle.

— God will accept your first attempts to serve him not as a perfect work, but as a beginning. The first little blades of wheat are as pleasant to the farmer's eyes as the whole field waving with grain.

There is no test of the christian character so severe as prosperity. Through its means many fail who have stood proof against all the direct assaults of Satan. The smiles of the world are more to be dreaded than its frowns.

— Truth needs no policies, no strategems, nor licensings to make her victorious; these are the shifts that error uses against her power. Give her but power, and do not bind her when she sleeps.

To Prevent Mice Gnawing Young Trees.—Late in the fall, just before snow comes, scrape all the leaves and rubbish away from the roots of the trees, then spread leached ashes close to the tree, one inch thick all around, and a foot wide. I have tried this method five years, without having my trees injured, where before most all of them had been killed by mice.—Ex.

TO WHAT SECT DO YOU BELONG?

Pray, said a friend the other day, what is the name of the sect of christians to which you belong?

To no sect at all, sir, was the reply.

What, then you are an infidel?

No, sir, my claim is that of a disciple of the Lord Jesus Christ.

Oh, then, you belong to the sect of Nazarenes, of which Paul was the ring-leader. I thought you must belong to one of the numerous sects now in existence.

The term sect, sir, is classed by an apostle as one of the "works of the flesh;" and if you, like the enemies of old, choose to designate the followers of the Lord by that opprobrious name, the responsibility rests with yourself, and not with me. I shall firmly maintain that I am not a sectarian, nor do I belong to a sect—that is, if those with whom I associate understand their dignity and profession.

Oh, continued this friend, christianity never did exist without a sect; and in the nature of things, never can. Paul himself said, "there must needs be sects," so that it cannot be otherwise.

Yes, the apostle did say, "there must needs be sects;" but mark, he adds, that the approved may be made manifest." Now, the question is, were those approved, a sect? I affirm not; and can prove that a christian, or a disciple of Christ, may exist, without being justly chargeable with that reproachful epithet.

But suppose, said he, that government should have occasion to send to you, inquiring what name you assume, pray what answer would you give?

I claim to be a disciple of Christ, or a christian. This would be my reply.

But, continued our friend, that would not satisfy the government. You must designate the party to which you belong; and who is your leader?

Well, sir, this I would most cheerfully do by saying, that Christ is my only leader, and those who receive his teachings and keep his commandments the party to which I belong.

Now, continued this inquisitive and persevering inquirer, if you were to be honest, would you not have to acknowledge some man as your leader?

No, sir; no more those who in Corinth, Phillippi, and other cities, who understood their proper standing, were converted to Paul, or Cephas, or any other of the ambassadors of Christ. I am ready at all times to acknowledge my obligation to those from whom I obtain a more clear, full, and practical knowledge of the divine requirements, but not to acknowledge any man as my leader.

It is only those who have but glimmering views of the "liberty wherewith Christ makes his people free," that are the followers of men. Christ is the Captain of our salvation! his laws and institutions are our delight! and all those who submit thereto, in heart and affection, enjoy a serenity of soul which those who bow to an inferior standard are strangers to. —Herald of the Kingdom.

THE DUTIES OF A MOTHER.

She should be firm, gentle, kind, always ready to attend to her child.

She should never laugh at him, at what he does that is cunning; never allow him to think of his looks, except to be neat and clean in all his habits.

She should teach him to obey a look, to respect those older than himself. She should never make a command without seeing that it is performed in the right manner.

Never speak of a child's faults or foibles, or remarks before him; it is a sure way to spoil a child.

Never reprove a child while excited, nor let your voice be raised when correcting him. Strive to inspire love, not dread; respect, not fear. Remember you are training and educating a soul for eternity.

Teach your child to wait upon himself; to put away a thing when done with it. But do not forget that you were once a child. The griefs of little ones are too often neglected; they are great for them. Bear patiently with them, and never in any way rouse their anger, if it can be avoided.

Teach a child to be useful whenever opportunity may offer.

IS SEEING BELIEVING?

Let him that thinks he knows, take heed lest he make mistakes. The following paragraph from "Once a Week," is a curious and instructive illustration of how easy it is to be in error:—

Here is a row of ordinary capital letters and figures:

S S S S X X X X Z Z Z Z 3 3 3 3 8 8 8 8

They are such as are made up of two parts of equal shapes. Look carefully at these, and you will perceive that the upper halves of the characters are a very little smaller than the lower halves—so little that an ordinary eye will declare them to be of equal size. Now turn the page upside down, and without any careful looking you will see that this difference in size is very much exaggerated—that the real top half of the letter is very much smaller than the bottom half. It will be seen from this that there is a tendency in the eye to enlarge the upper part of any object upon which it looks. We might draw two circles of unequal size, and so place them that they should appear equal.

PROOF READING.

There are a good many people who think proof-reading one of the easiest things in the world, and who get very impatient over mistakes in books and newspapers. A writer in The Galaxy gives some very interesting instances of typographical errors. He mentions one edition of the Bible which contained 6,000 mistakes. He gives the following example of the difficulties in the way of getting out a perfect book. Some professors of the University at Edinburgh resolved to publish a book which should be a model of typographical accuracy. Six proof-readers were employed, and after it was thought to be perfect, the sheets were pasted up in the hall of the University, and a reward of two hundred and fifty dollars was offered for every mistake that should be discovered. When the book was printed, it was found that it contained several errors, one being in the title page, another in the first line in the first chapter. The only books that are believed to be entirely free from errors, are an Oxford edition of the Bible, a London and Leipsic Horace, and an American reprint of Dante.—Ex.

Beautiful Swiss Custom.—The horn of the Alps is employed in the mountainous districts of Switzerland, not solely to the sound of the cow call, but for another purpose, solemn and religious. As soon as the sun has disappeared in the valleys, and its last rays are just glimmering on the snowy summits of the mountains, the herdsman who dwells on the loftiest, takes his horn and trumpets forth —"Praise God the Lord!" All the herdsmen in the neighborhood take their horns and repeat the words. This often continues a quarter of an hour, while on all sides the mountains echo the name of God. A solemn stillness follows; every individual offers his secret prayer on bended knees and uncovered head. By this time it is quite dark. "Good night!" trumpets forth the herdsman on the loftiest summit. "Good night!" is repeated on all the mountains from the horns of the herdsmen and the clefts of the rocks. Then each lies down to rest.

— He who sees much evil, has much in himself. "Charity thinketh no evil," being the fruit of a pure spirit. A truthful spirit has unbounded faith in the truth. He who is honest with God, knows that God will be faithful to him.

PHYSIOLOGICAL LETTERS.—No. 8.

The majority of the readers of the Crisis will not probably take much interest in the present chapter. It is not easy to render attractive and interesting any theories as to the causes of sleep, and the vascular condition of the brain during sleep.

The proximate cause of sleep is believed to be a diminished supply of arterial blood to the cerebral nervous centres. The heart arteries and smaller vessels receive an impression from the brain and general system, or from some medicinal agent, which, acting as an ultimate cause, does somewhat retard and somewhat diminish the arterial stream.

Did you ever contrast the sleeping with the waking pulse? If you will take the pains to do so, you will find that invariably the sleeping pulse is slower by some ten to twenty beats than the waking pulse. Less blood is needed in the brain, and consequently less blood goes there. Ordinarily the procuring cause of this state is in the brain itself. The heart cannot beat, and the arteries cannot contract without nerve force, and this nerve force originates in the cells of the brain, and when the material for the evolution of this force becomes scant, a sense of fatigue ensues, which, by acting on the heart and blood vessels, depresses them, and gives rise to that slackened condition of the circulation to which I have referred.

It requires little effort on the part of nature to inject the waking-state quantity of blood into the brain—a slight impression made on the nervous centres calls forth nerve force and stimulates the heart and arteries to send on more blood, and the capillary vessels soon become filled to their greatest capacity. The senses and mental faculties are now wide awake. It will be seen from the above, that the intellect and sensibilities are certain brain functions, which are superadded to the general function of nutrition, and dependent on it; and by a divine intelligence seems to animate and govern the life cells in selecting and elaborating from the blood those materials which are necessary for the nutrition and development of the body, so the mental faculties —the products of an exquisitely formed nervous organization—bespeak divinity in man,

"There's a divinity that stirs within us."

In accordance with the view given of the conditions requisite to sleep, we have an explanation of the manner in which cold applications to the head sometimes induce sleep. It is by stimulating and thus constringing the extreme capillaries of the nerve centres, and thereby lessening the quantity of arterial blood in the brain. Warmth to the feet, sinapisms to the nape of the neck, and the eating of a hearty meal, doubtless act on the principle of derivation,—calling away blood from the brain. From experience, however, we cannot advise eating a hearty meal as preliminary to sleep, except to those that are blessed with an excellent digestion. Undigested food is too apt to occasion pain and discomfort, engaging the attention, and precluding sleep.

One more paper will finish the causes of sleep, and then we shall enter a more interesting field. H.

THE ART OF BREATHING.

The first, last, and one of the most important acts of life is to breathe, and there can be nothing more essential to life and health than to properly perform this function, and yet a majority of our civilized and enlightened people are utterly ignorant of the first principles of a correct inspiration. Millions of human beings pass through life performing this act upward of twenty-five thousand times every day, or more than six hundred and fifty millions of times in a life-time of seventy years, and yet they neither know why they do it, nor how to do it as it should be done. The consequence is their health is impaired in various ways, their vitality unnecessarily wasted, and their lives greatly shortened.

The conditions necessary for natural and healthful breathing are:

1. Pure air to breathe.
2. Freedom of motion of the respiratory organs.
3. A correct mode of inspiration.
4. Suitable physical exercise.

Most people think if they "go out to take the air" for half an hour a day that they fulfill the first requirement, even if they are shut up in close, unventilated rooms all the rest of the twenty-four hours, and many there are who do not even do as much as that. What the lungs require to purify and vitalize the blood, and give the finishing touch to the process of digestion, is pure air all the time, night and day.

The second condition, and equal in importance, requires an erect bodily position and an unrestrained movement of the chest and abdomen. A bent position of the body, with the shoulders drooping forward, habitual with many at all times, and often temporarily assumed by others, as when engaged in certain occupations, or when sleeping with the head elevated by bolsters and pillows, prevents the free expansion of the chest and lessens the amount of air inspired. So also, to a far greater extent, does compression of the chest and abdomen by corsets and tight clothing diminish the inspiratory power of the lungs, and weaken all the powers of life.

As many as nine-tenths of the women of this country, and probably one-half of the men, scarcely ever use the principal respiratory muscle of the body—the diaphragm—in breathing. Tight clothing and a cramped bodily position prevent its action. The consequence is the chest is only expanded laterally, and the lungs but partially filled with air. When the diaphragm acts naturally, as it only can do when the body is unconstrained, it presses the stomach, liver, and bowels downward and outward at each inspiration, and the contraction of the abdominal muscles returns them to their position at each expiration, thus keeping up a constant motion of the digestive organs, which is essential to their normal and healthful action. Without this motion they can not act properly, and torpidity of the liver, constipation of the bowels, and other digestive derangements, are thereby induced.

An example of the artificial mode of breathing can be seen in any fashionably dressed lady; the upper portion of the chest expands laboredly, because unnaturally, and that is all—there is no expansion of the lower part of the chest, of the sides, or the abdomen, as there is with those persons who have lived uprightly, physically speaking, and who have never tried to improve upon God's beautiful handiwork of the "human form divine" by pinching and squeezing themselves in accordance with the behests of Dame Fashion. New born children always breath correctly, as do animals of every kind. Look at them, examine them carefully, and go imitate them. In a natural inspiration the principal visible motion is in the abdomen. The upper portion of the chest expands slightly, the lower portion of the chest and the sides expand more, and the abdomen most of all.

Do not breathe through the mouth—the nose is the true entrance to the lungs, the mouth to the stomach. The natural position of the mouth is, closed, and it should only open to eat, to drink, and to talk; the natural position of the nostrils is, open, and they never close, as, while life lasts, breathing never ceases.

Physical exercise is equally important in promoting the healthful action of the lungs, as it is of every other organ of the body. It hastens the frequency of breathing, and causes a greater quantity of air to enter the lungs at each inspiration, thus greatly increasing the quantity of inspired air, and more perfectly purifying and vitalizing the blood.—Herald of Health.

LIGHT AND AIR.

Warmth, however, and an atmosphere containing a due amount of moisture, are not enough to secure health without insuring the daily presence of a sufficient amount of light. The dark side of a street is far more subject to disease than the light side. Sir James Wylie found three times as many cases of disease on the shaded side of the barracks at St. Petersburg as on the other side. Dupuytren is said to have wrought a cure in the case of a lady in a seemingly desperate condition, by simply removing her from her dark quarters to a brighter residence, and keeping her as much as possible in the daylight. There is no better testimony on any such point than that of Miss Florence Nightingale. What she says of the value of light to those who are ill indicates no less its necessity for those who are well:

"Second only to fresh air, however, I should be inclined to rank light in importance for the sick. Direct sunlight, not only daylight, is necessary for speedy recovery. Instances could be given almost endless, where in dark wards with a northern aspect, even when thoroughly warmed, or in wards with borrowed light, even thoroughly ventilated, the sick could not by any means be made speedily to recover."

Very few persons seem to have a due sense of the luxury and benefit of aprication, or immersion in the sunshine bath, which every fair day will furnish gratuitously to all applicants. One ancient man, very poor, and very simple in most matters, whose clay-pipe I sometimes replenish for him, is almost the only person I happen to know who seems really to enjoy the sunshine as much as if he were a vegetable. That these humbler creatures enjoy it, if they enjoy anything, we may guess by their actions. The passion of the sunflower for "her god" is famous in song. But there are examples of still more ardent devotion than hers. Mr. Jesse tells how a potato, left in a dark cellar with only one opening, sent its shoot twenty feet to get at the light through that little crevice.—Oliver Wendell Holmes, in Atlantic Almanac.

CONSTIPATION.

"Please inform me of the cause, means of relief, and mode of cure, for constipation of the bowels."

It is generally the result of sedentary occupations and lack of exercise, or the use of fine, concentrated food, or both. Temporary relief may usually be obtained by the employment of enemas of tepid water. When it is attended with pain or griping, the hot fomentation to the abdomen should also be used. To effect a cure, the dietetic and other habits which produced it must be discontinued. The diet should consist principally of good, ripe fruits, coarse bread, cracked wheat, oat and rye meal mush, etc. No sugar or fine flour. Daily, active exercise in the open air is important. No occupation should be followed in which the body is kept in a bent or cramped position. Kneading, shaking, and percussion of the abdomen will be found very useful and efficient, also any gymnastic exercises in which the body is bent, compressed, or twisted. These exercises should be practiced regularly every day, and with as much vigor as possible without producing pain or soreness.—Herald of Health.

Lying in Bed.—It is often a question among people who are unacquainted with the anatomy and physiology of men, whether lying with the head exalted or level with the body, is the most wholesome. Most, consulting their own ease on this point, argue in favor of that which they prefer. Now, although many delight in bolstering up their heads at night, and sleep soundly without injury, yet we declare it to be a dangerous habit. The vessels in which the blood passes from the heart to the head are always lessened in their cavities when the head is resting in bed higher than the body; therefore, in all diseases attended with fever, the head should be pretty nearly on a level with the body; and people ought to accustom themselves to sleep thus, and avoid danger.—Medical Jo...

Curiosities.—A physician who prescribes tobacco and alcoholic liquors for his patients and does not use them himself. Who ever heard of one?

A drug physician who is willing to take his own remedies when he is sick.

A Hygienic physician who is not willing to take his own remedies when he is sick.

A civilized adult human being who is perfectly healthy in every respect.—Ex.

Worth Knowing.—A poison of any conceivable description and degree of potency, which has been swallowed intentionally or by accident, may be rendered almost instantaneously harmless by swallowing two gills of sweet oil. An individual with a very strong constitution should take twice the quantity. The oil will neutralize every form of vegetable or mineral poison with which physicians are acquainted.

AN OLD STORY.

I've been reading an old, old story,
Of the fair and starlit morn,
When in Bethlehem's humble manger
The child of sweet Mary was born.

Of the shepherds, their flocks that were watching;
Of the STAR, lighting valley and hill,
And the song which the angels were chanting,
The new song of "Peace and Good-will!"

I read how he stood in the temple,
And taught the learned men;
How they looked on the child, and wondered,
And answered him not again.

I read how he spoke to Galilee's waves,
Till the storm was hushed and still;
How he wept with Lazarus' sisters,
And the dead were alive at his will.

And I read how he prayed in Gethsemane,
The while his disciples slept,—
How he prayed that the cup might pass from him;
And how, as I read, I wept.

I read of the hill of Calvary,
How they mocked him, and pierced his side;
And how, crying, "Father, forgive them!"
He bowed his dear head and died.

And so I finished the story,—
So wondrous, so old, and so rare,—
And, closing with reverent hand the book,
My heart said a voiceless prayer:

That he who blessed little children,
He who for sinners was slain,
Would shelter 'neath wings of his mercy,
Our souls from the wind and the rain;—

Would wash us in pity's sweet fountain,
Till every sin was forgiven;
And, leading us close in his footsteps,
Make us more meet for heaven.

THOUGHTS ON A FEW THINGS.

DEATH BY DROWNING.

Let us, with an earnest love for the true intent of the divine word, ponder another scripture. "But they that will be rich, fall into temptation and a snare, and into many foolish and hurtful lusts, which drown men in destruction and perdition." Now we have to contemplate the question of a penalty. Or if not a penalty in the judicial sense, certainly the natural and necessary result of a wrong volition. The penalty is to be "drowned in perdition." And is this something to be comprehended? Is the meaning to be taken according to the statement? Is the drowning a consequence of the sin? and is it like the sin, a thing consummated? Or is it, on the other hand, eternally *un*consummated? Is the drowning perpetually in process, and never finished? Is it an ordeal making no progress toward the finis, death? For, clearly, however urgent the suffering, and terrible the struggle, no progress is made toward the result declared in the text, if the end is infinitely distant. And yet in every case ever seen, or known, or reported, in all the experience of suffering and destruction on earth among men, the result of drowning is death. The only alternative of hope is rescue. If there is no rescue, there neither is, nor can be life. And if this is not the apostle's meaning, why did he employ language representing ideas in regard to which nothing but the constraint of theological misconceptions could cause a mistake? Surely there can be no mistake. To be drowned is not to be drowning for an indefinite time. If this were so, where were the consummation? To be eternally drowning in perdition positively excludes the possibility of the consummation of the clearly annexed penalty. The declaration is therefore in that case made void and false. But not only is an eternally drowning man never drowned, but it furnishes to the mind the suggestion of at least a possible deliverance, and in the mind more or less infected with the theories of Universalism the suggestion is easily developed into a sort of confidence. But we know perfectly that a drowned man is a dead man. And the death is a vital element in the casualty, or else the drowning is not complete. In such a case there is hope of resuscitation, and the drowning was accomplished only so far as the brief ordeal of suffering was concerned, while by universal consent the unfortunate victim was not really drowned after all; and the proof is furnished in his perfect restoration, and visible presence among men.

Is this the penalty meant by the apostle; viz., a drowning almost, but not quite accomplished, or, in other words, a brief though terrible moment of struggle and agony, followed by health and restoration to the old status? Why, then, did he not say baptized in perdition? for then he would have made his meaning evident, since in baptism the candidate has not only an immersion, but an emersion. And this baptism into death would be simply the guaranty of resurrection and life to come after. This would be rather a queer penalty for persistent covetousness, and the impetuous pursuit of gain. It was therefore with intelligent direction from above that the sacred writer used the phraseology we find in the text. Of all drowning we know the issue to be death.

Now there is no jurisprudence on earth, no penal code in any nation not barbarian, that I know of, nor even a legalized abomination of Paganism, that ordains drowning as a penalty, which has the peculiarity of being skilfully and indefinitely protracted. It was reserved to Romanism (mainly perhaps) to devise and practise the accursed horror of strangling slowly, by repeated immersions, or by the distillation of water drops into the open mouth. It is true we have occasionally read of cases of repeated sousings, but in the first place, what judicial or legislative wisdom would deliberately propose or solemnly sanction such a device, except in an age apostatized and depraved from every rule of justice or sentiment of propriety? And in the next place, how long would the tortured victim survive the shocks to the nervous system, the violent checks to respiration, the weariness of fruitless and desperate struggles? Would not death sooner or later ensue upon the inquisitorial cruelty?

There is an obvious and a mighty difference between heathenized and Bible theology. In one case capital punishment is, in its essential feature, agony; in the other death. In the one it is life in torment; in the other it is loss of life. In the one it is living to suffer; in the other it is such a swift and overwhelming infliction that, with whatever incident of pain, the issue is literal and eternal extinction. Is there not a difference? How strange is the prevailing affection for educated error! How singular the homage of tradition! You shall see on every side the courage, the perseverance, the tenacity of faith in the untrue. You shall see, what shall I say? The sacred pride of opinion! The unity and intensity of adhesion to doctrines baseless as air, but affirmed to be built on revelation. Yes, it is strange, but true. It is a phenomenon of the age, a marvel of the nineteenth century. The christian civilization of this era, the polished proficiency of schools, the theology and eloquence of the pulpit, are infected with the colossal and subtle error of something indestructible and eternal in man. There remains yet the great awakening, the startling discovery, that the immortality of the soul is a fable. Yes, a delusion, a fantasy, a snare. And were not the day of judgment now so near, it could be put in an appendix of some new edition of "Mrs. Opie on Lying."

According to the Bible, "the foolish and hurtful lusts," which a frenzied eagerness for wealth begets, "drown men in destruction." Their gravity is too great for the victim to float, or else they paralyze action and destroy a power of escape. Can a man bound and bundled float in a raging sea? No. The entanglements of riches drown the possessor. The hurtful lusts disable him. They do drown him, and never is there a hint in the passage of an Adamic immortality in the sinner forever struggling with the doom of death, and perpetually lifting him up to the surface to catch a breath, to counteract the doom. In fact, according to the almost universal pulpit and Bible-class theory, this "immortality" is for ever more or less successfully contending with death, and resisting and defeating it. But just take a look at the theological sea of death. There, you behold an agitated and boundless waste, encumbered with struggling forms of myriads of hapless creatures, battling for life, battling for death, battling against hope, enraged, desperate, drowning for ever, and never drowned; sinking, rising, suffocating; spouting little seas of Tartarean brine from their mouths; with starting eye-balls, longing to die, but judicially condemned to live. How dare any man say the penalty of sin is life, in spite of the decree of the Most High that the sinner shall die? Aye, and it is not alone a sea loaded and thronging with sinners judged and damned after the solemn assize of the great day, but an ocean alive with ante-judgment prisoners and sufferers, a perfect labyrinth of immortal souls, immaterial human monads, threading their way blindly in endless zigzags through the terrors of interminable vastness. Such is orthodoxy!

But to escape this dilemma, some may say this scripture is figurative; that the drowning in perdition is by no means literal. But if so, the thing meant, the truth taught in the figure is positive and clear; viz., that the fate of the over-encumbered victim is equivalent to that of being drowned. The apostle in Romans inquires—"What fruit had ye then in those things whereof ye are now ashamed? for the end of those things is death." To be drowned is to be dead. To be drowned in destruction is plain enough. To be drowned in destruction and perdition is yet more emphatic. But there is a painful necessity, from the stress of a long-held vagary, to hold ever ready for the defense of error endeared by age and acquaintance; an elasticity of mind that can bend simple truth to labored interpretation. The theory of a man alive after he is dead (alive in hell, both before and after the judgment), lies at the bottom of all the floundering, and is the copious fountain of strained interpretations and utterly unscriptural suppositions. "We do, we must, we shall believe the dead are not dead"—practically aver the votaries of ecclesiastical Platonism; "the dead are alive, awake, and therefore the one part full of pain, and the other ecstacized with joy, by being gone like the pardoned thief to Paradise."

And so the lame and decrepit stature of Egyptio-Hellenic theology will limp and flounder on, perhaps. But not for long. There is a day of discovery coming. We conclude there will be some surprises then. If it is at the day of judgment, that will help to show why it is justly called a day of wonders.

C. Colegrove.

— It is a poor relief from sorrow to fly to the distractions of the world; as well might a lost and wearied bird, suspended over the abyss of the tempestuous ocean, seek a resting place on its heaving waves, as the child of trouble to seek a place of repose amid the bustling cares and intoxicating pleasures of earth.

THE SPIRIT OF MAN—WHAT IS IT?

The words spirit and soul are not the same in meaning, as is generally supposed. We know that religious teachers and authors use these words interchangeably, as meaning the same thing. This is a mistake, and a serious one, which we can not pass over in silence. The soul is one thing, and the spirit quite another thing—a distinction with a difference. Because religious teachers use these words, as if they were identical in meaning, it does not make it so.

PHANTASMA.

This word only occurs twice in the New Testament,—Matt. 14: 26, Mark 6: 49; and is translated Spirit. The disciples saw Jesus walking on the sea, and thought they saw a phantom, or in other words a shadow, a fancied vision or apparition, or what people would vulgarly call a ghost. The disciples, seeing Jesus walking on the sea, could not at first believe what they saw, and therefore supposed that they saw a phantom, or shadow reflected upon the water's surface. This, to our mind, is the simple meaning of the text. Phantoms, be it remembered, are not real beings. Sometimes we think that the imaginary notions of a soul or spirit, which many people affirm leaves the body at death to enjoy the bliss of heaven, or woes of hell, could with propriety be called phantomology, or ghostology. Such a spirit as many people suppose inhabits human bodies, has no more real existence than the ghosts of some old woman's story, rehearsed for the purpose of amusing and frightening children. The word of the Lord is a perfect antidote for all fabulous ghost stories, and for all kinds of spiritualisms. No man who believes the word of the Lord will ever be troubled with ghosts, nor will he be guilty of inquiring through some silly spiritual medium after his dead friends.

PNEUMA.

This word corresponds to the Hebrew word roo-agh, and occurs in the Greek text upwards of three hundred times. The word comes from pneo, to blow, breathe, etc., and is defined by Liddell and Scott as follows, "wind," "air," "the air we breathe," "the breath of life," "the spirit, a living being," "feeling," i.e., a disposition of mind. From the foregoing definitions, the reader will see at once what is the primary meaning of the word.

Pneuma occurs in all those passages where the Spirit of God or Holy Spirit is referred to; as for example, "Blasphemy against the Holy (pneuma) Spirit shall not be forgiven unto men."—Matt. 12: 31. "It is not ye that speak, but the (pneuma) Spirit of your Father, which speaketh in you."—Matt. 10: 20. Pneuma is translated spirit in those passages where a state of feeling or disposition of mind is spoken of. For example, "The (pneuma) Spirit is willing, but the flesh is weak."—Matt. 26: 4. The disciples felt a willingness to watch with Jesus, but through bodily weakness they could not. Spirit, in this text, signifies a disposition of mind, and nothing more. Again, "Blessed are the poor in (pneuma) spirit."—Matt. 5: 3. To be poor in spirit is not to exhibit the pride and arrogance of wealth, or to put on the lofty look of the worldly minded. The Lord loveth those who are truly poor in spirit, and of a contrite heart; they shall be blessed, "for theirs is the kingdom of God." In the above text, a state of feeling is indicated, as must be evident to every one. Paul says, Be "not slothful in business, fervent in spirit, serving the Lord." Rom. 12: 11. In this text spirit also indicates a disposition of mind.

Pneuma is rendered ghost twice in Matt. 27: 50; John 19: 30. Both of these passages have reference to our Lord's death on the cross. "Jesus, when he had cried again with a loud voice, yielded up the (pneuma) ghost." In the "Diaglott" it is rendered thus: "Then Jesus, crying out with a loud voice, expired." Wakefield and Campbell also render it expired. This is doubtless the correct rendering. Jesus yielded up his breath and died, is the idea.

Pneuma is sometimes rendered spirit in the common version, where it evidently means the breath of life. The word primarily signifies wind, air, breath of life, etc. Hence, the word can be very properly used to represent the atmosphere we breathe, by which all breathing creatures live. "As the body without the (pneuma) spirit is dead," so "faith without works is dead." James 2: 25. In this text, pneuma should be rendered breath; it is so in the "Diaglott," also by Wakefield, and breath is inserted in the margin of our English Bibles. What works are to faith, breath is to the body. When the Lord takes away from man his breath, he dies, and returns to dust. And unless there is a resurrection from the dead, future life is impossible. No man who has ever fallen under the power of death, can ever live again, except by a resurrection from the dead. Paul makes this matter plain when he says, "If the dead rise not, then they who have fallen asleep in Christ are perished."—1 Cor. 15. Say not, then, that the dead are praising God in heaven, or howling with the damned in hell, when, in fact, they are sleeping the profound slumber of death. O that men would believe the word of the Lord, and give to the winds the doctrines of men. O, my soul, take shelter behind the rock of truth, and rejoice in hope of eternal life, through a resurrection from the dead.

Another example we have in the account of the daughter of Jairus. Jesus said, "Maid, arise; and her (pneuma) spirit came again, and she arose straightway."—Luke 8: 55. The word spirit, in this text, evidently means breath, and is so rendered by Wakefield and others. Does any one suppose, that Jesus called her immortal spirit back from the realms of bliss in heaven? When Jesus raised Lazarus from the dead, did he call him from heaven, or from the grave? Modern theology affirms that the spirit is the real, thinking, responsible man, and cannot die. If this is so, then Jesus did not raise the daughter of Jairus from the dead, because she never died. If man is immortal, he cannot die, and it is all nonsense to talk of raising a deathless man from the dead. The doctrine of the resurrection is nullified by man's speculations about immortal souls, and deathless spirits. To believe that man is immortal, is equivalent to a denial of the glorious and sublime doctrine of the resurrection. Dear reader, take heed how you believe and advocate that which nullifies God's word. In the foregoing example, Jesus actually raised the maid from a state of death, and as the result, her life came back to her again. But to affirm that an immortal disembodied spirit came into the body again, is an assemption groundless and absurd. What spirit then, is it that came back to the daughter Jairus, when Jesus restored her to life? We answer, the (pneuma) breath of life. No other spirit had departed, therefore, no other could return.

The martyr Stephen, while suffering from the violence of his persecutors, prayed the Lord to receive his spirit. Acts 7: 59. That is, says an objector, he desired the Lord to receive his immortal soul, or his undying spirit. But we do not see why it was necessary for such a man as Stephen to pray thus. Did he not know that Jesus would receive his spirit? Did he not know that his immortal spirit would emigrate to heaven, and to God, just as soon as it left the body? Why then pray for what he knew must come to pass, necessarily? The fact is, Stephen desired the Lord to receive, or take away his (pneuma) breath or spirit, that he might be relieved from the pain and torture inflicted upon him. This is the obvious meaning of Stephen's prayer. He commits his life to the Lord, and desires him to receive, or take it away, knowing, as expressed by Paul, "I know on whom I have believed, and am persuaded that he is able to keep that I have committed unto him unto that day." After Stephen had finished his prayer, by asking the Lord not to lay this sin to their charge, it is said that he fell asleep," or in other words, died. But the question arises, did Stephen really fall asleep? If, according to modern theology, Stephen moved away to heaven, to enjoy the society of angels, and the happy spirits, then we ask how could it be said that Stephen died? Stephen did not die, he did not fall asleep, but, on the contrary, he was made alive, and awoke in heaven, and in the presence of his God, if the teaching of clergymen and theology is true. Surely no one will fail to see the contrast between the Bible and the sayings of theological teachers. The Bible says Stephen fell asleep—died, whereas a modern clergyman will stand up and affirm that Stephen did not fall asleep, but simply awoke in heaven, to know more than all the living. Dear reader, which will you believe, the word of God, or the word of men?

SPIRIT MEANS PERSON.

The Greek word pneuma, rendered spirit, in 1 John 4: 1–5; is representative of a person, or persons. "Believe not every spirit, (person) but try the spirits (persons) whether they be of God, because many false prophets have gone out into the world." The spirits referred to in the above passage, are false teachers, who alloyed, or corrupted the gospel with the pernicious fables and doctrines of men. The world has been cursed with such spirits as these ever since the days of the apostles. There has never been a scarcity of false teachers. As in the days of the apostles, so now, it is well to try them, and see whether they be of God or not. Try them by the infallible word of God. "If they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them."

We have now briefly examined the use of the word pneuma, in the New Testament, and have not been able to find a single passage where it represents, what is termed by clergymen, an immortal; intelligent spirit entity in man. We conclude, therefore, that the Bible does not teach that man is immortal, or that he is conscious between death and the resurrection. We can find no text that teaches that there is in man's body a spirit being, which on the dissolution of the body, rises up to praise God in heaven, or sinks down to wail with the damned in hell. David says, "the dead praise not the Lord, neither any that go down into silence." We believe it. We do not, therefore, have any sympathy for, or affinity with, that system of teaching which seeks to corrupt the gospel, with the speculations of heathen philosophy, about immortal souls, or deathless spirits. We care not what Socrates and Plato of the Greeks, or Cicero, of the Romans taught. Their reasonings upon the subject of future life, only exhibit the strugglings of great minds to find out what God alone is able to make manifest. The question with us should be, what does the word of the Lord teach? What has God made known in his word concerning a future existence, and not what are the speculations of man, should be our motto. In our examination and investigation of this subject, we have endeavored to keep close to the Bible.

In conclusion, then, on this part of the subject, we remark, that both in the Old and New Testaments, the word spirit is used to represent,

I. A personal being, as applied to God and angels, and,

II. To represent that Omnipotent power and creative energy, by which all things are created, termed in the Scriptures the Spirit of God, Holy Spirit, etc. This spirit power moved upon the waters in the morn of creation. Gen. 1: 2. "By His Spirit he hath garnished the heavens." Job. 26: 13. By his Spirit the prophets and the apostles spake the words of God, wrought signs and wonders among the people. Jesus was raised from the dead by his Spirit, and by which the saints also will be raised up, and their mortal bodies quickened unto eternal life. See Rom. 6: 4; 8: 11.

III. To represent a state of feeling, a disposition of mind. Under this head, the word spirit is frequently employed by inspired penmen. If the reader will put himself to the trouble of looking into Cruden's Concordance, he will be enabled to see to his own satisfaction, how the word is used, to represent the various states of feeling, dispositinn, etc.

IV. To represent the atmosphere surrounding our globe, which from the fact of its containing the vitality that comes from God, is termed the "breath, or spirit of life."—Herald of the Kingdom.

"CHOOSE THOU FOR ME."

Thy way, not mine, O God!
However dark it be;
Lead me by thine own hand,
Choose out my path for me!

I dare not choose my lot,
I would not if I might;
Choose thou for me, O God!
So shall I walk aright.

The kingdom that I seek
Is thine, so let the way
That leads to it be thine,
Else I must surely stray.

Take thou my cup, and it
With joy or sorrow fill,
As best to thee may seem,
Choose thou my good or ill.

Choose thou for me my friends,
My sickness or my health,
Choose thou my cares for me,
My poverty or wealth.

Not mine, not mine the choice
In thing or great or small,
Be thou my guide, my strength,
My wisdom and my all.

IS FAITH THE GIFT OF GOD?

"For by grace are ye saved through faith; and that not of yourselves: it is the gift of God: not of works, lest any man should boast."—Eph. 2: 8, 9.

There are two explanations of these verses which have given rise to two different theories in regard to the origin of faith. One takes as its authority the English text only, and makes faith to be the gift of God. The other takes as its authority the original Greek text, and affirms that faith is not the gift of God.

There is apparantly a great difference between these two explanations, but the difference is not so great as it seems. When accurate definitions and statements are made on both sides they will be found, to harmonize in every respect.

It will be evident to every Greek scholar, by a reference to the original, that our English version does not give an accurate translation, although it may be easily explained so as to express the original. A full rendering of the Greek would be thus; "For by grace are ye saved through faith; and that not of yourselves: it (salvation) is the gift of God, etc." The word "it" is neuter, while the word "faith" is feminine. The former, therefore, cannot be made to refer to the latter.

In what sense is faith the gift of God? It is the gift of God in the sense that the Spirit shows us the things of God—shows us our sinfulness and need of regeneration—shows us the willingness of God to help us, his love for us and interest in us—shows us Christ THE WAY, and how worthy of our confidence he is; and thus we are led by the Spirit, without any violation of our free moral agency, to have faith in God. Our faith is the natural result of the previous revelation of "the things of God."

In what sense is faith not the gift of God? It is not the gift of God in the sense that he bestows upon us a new faculty. We do not receive it directly from God as we receive "the gift of the Holy Spirit." As one has expressed it, "Faith is not injected into us."

I have faith in my fellow-man when I have proof of his honesty, integrity, etc. In the same way I have faith in God when I see how worthy of confidence he is, and how true to all his promises. As it is the Spirit of God that leads us to the exercise of faith, and as by nature we do not have faith in God, so he may be said to give us faith. This is agreed to by all. But whether faith is the gift of God or not, let no man boast, for our salvation is "not of works, lest any man should boast." It is all of FREE GRACE. It is of more importance to have faith than to know how you receive it.—Church Union.

"SEVEN SABBATHS SHALL BE COMPLETE."

Mr. Editor:—Will you allow a few more comparisons of Scripture with Scripture, on certain points in that "all of Scripture," which Paul declares to "be profitable for our instruction." I will endeavor to select such examples of illustration as have not already been started. By turning to the 23d of Leviticus, and onward a few chapters, we find a pretty full illustration of God's original mode of reckoning time by sevens, or "sabbaths," which term is nearly of the same import. I do not wish to offer my own opinion, nor will I quote any other uninspired man's views on what I wish to offer for the consideration of your readers. Nor will I indeed go outside the lids of the Bible for any fact not universally acknowledged to be true.

Premising the general object, take for illustration the generally acknowledged fact that God in fitting up our globe for the residence of man, employed six days, and the completion of the first Sabbath of days was a day of rest, and declared to be holy. The declared object of the Exodus out of Egypt was the rest of Canaan. This was, as near as can be ascertained by Bible chronology, 350 Sabbaths of years. It will require a Sabbath of millenniums to finish the Bible analogy, and "complete" the seventh and last great Sabbath of all Sabbaths.

Let us then look after the six Sabbaths which must precede the millennial, or seventh great Sabbath. My text will be the 23d of Leviticus, and "my context" the Bible in general. Let it be remembered that in following Bible analogy, even, we are never to estimate it beyond its relative value; yet we may, by tracing the course of the foretold events already fulfilled, gain many delightful views of God's providential arrangements in respect to the great outlines of predicted future events.

Our first inquiry will be, how many sevens, or Sabbaths, have "been complete" in the past? 1st. The Sabbath of days was "complete" the first week of creation, crowned by a "rest." 2. The Sabbath of weeks was complete forty-nine days after its commencement, crowned by the day of Pentecost. To understand how this second Sabbath of the series has been honored, call to mind the glorious outpouring of the Holy Spirit on the apostles, and the conversion of three hundred souls at one time. This was fifty days after the Passover, and the first fruits of the barley harvest. This memorable event and the "feast of weeks" was long celebrated in the Christian church. The apostle of the Gentiles regarded it with much interest, as we find in Acts 20: 16. "For Paul had determined to sail by Ephesus, because he would not spend the time in Asia; for he hastened, if it were possible for him to be at Jerusalem the day of Pentecost."

3. We pass to the third Sabbath in the series, which is the Sabbath of Feasts. (See Lev. 23: 4.) "These are the feasts of the Lord, even holy convocations, which ye shall proclaim in their seasons." 1. Feast of the Passover (verse 5.) 2. Feast of unleavened bread (v. 6.) 3. Feast of harvest (v. 10.) 4. Feast of weeks (v. 21.) 5. Feast of trumpets (v. 24.) 6. Feast of atonement (v. 27.) 7. Feast of tabernacles (v. 34.) Thus we see the third Sabbath has been "complete." The crown of this Sabbath was the feast of tabernacles, terminated by a galaxy of the lesser Sabbaths, as the reader will see by perusing the whole chapter.

4. Next in order is the Sabbath of months. "Beside the Sabbaths of the Lord, and beside your gifts, and beside all your vows, and beside all your free-will offerings, which ye give unto the Lord. Also in the fifteenth day of the seventh month, when ye have gathered in the fruit of the land, ye shall keep a feast unto the Lord seven days; on the first day shall be a Sabbath, and on the eighth day shall be a Sabbath."—Lev. 23: 38–39. This "completed" the Sabbath of months.

THE TEN VIRGINS.

Dear Brethren and Sisters, I know that much has been said on this subject, but I wish to call your mind to one idea that is most prominent in this parable, the fact that we must be watching. The Lord has taken from an eastern wedding, an idea with which they were familiar, and says, "the kingdom of heaven" or the church, is "likened unto ten virgins," etc. They were all ready, and went out to meet the bridegroom. He delayed to come, or tarried. During the time of tarrying, the virgins slumbered and slept. Some, seemingly, give up all idea of his coming, and are drawn away with the busy cares of the present, and the all-important work, that of being ready, left undone. They are content with their position, and time passes on unobserved by them; but the rest of the virgins did not give up the idea but what he would come, and so the lamp was ever burning. They were ever ready, and waiting all the time. Whatever they were called to do, their eye was on the watch for the coming of the bridegroom. At length, while all these virgins were in this state, moving on with time, all of a sudden a cry was heard, the bridegroom is coming. This aroused the attention of all. They started up, but O how sad the fate of some. They had let their lamps go out. The very thing that would give them a place in the procession was wanting. They cry, What shall we do? Help us to get ready. Buy for yourselves, was the reply. "And while they went to buy," the procession came along; then those whose lamps were all ready, and burning brightly, took their places in the company, and moved on to the house, and went in "and the door was shut."

In a little way off you see the other virgins running for the door. They knock, but a voice from within is heard, "I know you not." In vain they plead, "Have we not prophesied in thy name? and in thy name have cast out devils? and in thy name done many wonderful works"? but the answer comes back, "I know you not"; or "I never knew you." Matt. 7: 22. Having fully set before the mind of his disciples these two classes, and seeing that the ready ones were the ones that went in, and the others left out; he said unto them, in words they might understand, "Watch therefore, for ye know neither the day nor the hour wherein the Son of man cometh." As we take this position, and look back and follow the path of the church down to this point of time, we find them traveling on from one point to another; first, the desolation spoken of by Daniel; second, the darkening of the sun; third, of the moon; fourth, the stars shall fall; fifth, the powers of the heaven shall be shaken. Here let me remark that I believe the Master meant just what he said,—"The powers that are in heaven shall be shaken." Mark 13: 25. It is in harmony with Peter:—"But the day of the Lord will come as a thief in the night; in the which the heavens shall pass away with a great noise." 2 Pet. 3: 10. "And the heaven departed as a scroll." Rev. 6: 14. "Yet once more I shake not the earth only, but also heaven." Heb. 12: 26. So we expect that "the powers of the heaven (not earth) shall be shaken," or moved away; "and then shall appear the sign of the Son of man; and then shall all the tribes of earth mourn." Now where are we? What yet remains? Nothing, save the shaking of the powers of heaven; therefore watch.

I cannot give you my position more clearly, than to quote the words uttered a long time ago, by William Cunninghame, as found in "The Voice of the Church," page 7. He says: "If we who have marked every sign in the spiritual horizon for a long series of years, were now asked, Is there any sign of his coming yet accomplished? We should be constrained to answer, to our view not one sign remains unaccomplished. If we were further asked, Shall he come this year? our answer would be, we know not; but this much we know and believe, that Christ is near at hand, even at the door." Then, dear brethren and sisters, watch, "lest coming suddenly, he find you sleeping. And what I say unto you, I say unto all, watch." Mark 13: 36, 37. Be ready. May writer and reader be found thus when the Master comes, is the prayer of Bro. Geo. A. Streeter.

PERSEVERE.

"Lord, what shall this man do?"—John 21: 21.

How often do we see temperance men who have long been active and faithful in disseminating and sustaining the principles of temperance, sink down at last in heart-weariness and discouragement, and say, "it is of no use, my fellow temperance men, and the community generally, who ought to be as much interested as I, will do nothing to enforce the law, or to save the youth of our community from the ruin of intemperance." My brother, if by such feelings you are tempted to remit individual effort in the cause, there is a lesson for you in the incidents related in the paragraph from which our heading is quoted. Jesus said to Peter, "Follow me." But he, instead of yielding implicit obedience, turning about, and looking to see what other disciples were doing, and asking, "Lord, what shall this man do? elicited from the great Master the rebuke, "What is that to thee? Follow thou me." Do not concern thyself with the faithfulness or otherwise of thy fellow disciples. To their own master they stand or fall. Thy duty is thy own, measured only by thy responsibility to me, not by their performance or neglect of what is incumbent on them, and never will the final Judge accept thee saying, "Well done! good and faithful servant," unless thou hast been "good and faithful." Never, "thou hast done as well as thy associates, enter thou." The measure of thy responsibility is, the ability God hath given thee, and the opportunity he has given thee for the exercise of that ability; and remember, if from want of co-operation or any other cause, except personal unfaithfulness or indiscretion, thy measure of success fall short of thy desire, remember that it is written, not, "every man shall receive his own reward according to his own"—success; but, "according to his own labor." Nor yet again, the reward he has merited by his own labor, for it is written, "When ye have done all, say, we are unprofitable servants." We have only done our duty, and deserve no reward, but God in his sovereign goodness, promises a reward, proportioned not to success but to labor. Then pluck up heart, my brother, and labor on, not to earn a reward, for a mercenary spirit will get from God only condemnation. But while striving to do good, it is right to "have respect to the recompense of reward."

And a word to those whose lack of effort has been cause of discouragement to your brethren. Have you not already perceived that God makes no distinction in his requirements, that he says to you as truly as to others, "Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might." Not one good thing, or one class of good works only, but, "Whatsoever", thus including temperance with every other good word and work. Wherefore, brethren, "let us not be weary in well doing, for in due season we shall reap if we faint not." There, brethren, is a promise worthy of our confidence. If we persevere we shall prevail at last. The promise is, not this year, but, "in due time," and who so well knows when that is as God who gave the promise. If we faithfully, unitedly, perseveringly perform the condition, he in "due time" will perform the promise.—State League.

For the World's Crisis

THE GOSPEL MESSAGE.

John the Baptist came preaching repentance and saying, "Repent ye; for the kingdom of heaven is at hand." Matt. 3: 2. And when Jesus sent out his twelve apostles, he told them to "preach, saying, the kingdom of heaven is at hand." Matt. 10: 7. The great motive for repentance presented at that time was the nearness of the time for the coming of the kingdom, or the KING, for he was indeed "at hand," although the kingdom was not at that time manifested, "set up," nor established. For when that kingdom is revealed, "it will break in pieces and consume" all other kingdoms, and we need not argue that christianity has never done this, or that it never will. Christianity is, and has ever been as a lamb in the midst of wolves, and is from necessity as well as from choice non-resistant. But when the kingdom of heaven comes in power and glory, and the Lion of the tribe of Judah appears to take vengeance on his enemies, then all the kingdoms of the earth will be dashed in pieces, consumed, swept away, like chaff before the wind. The true gospel message is the same to-day that it was in the days of John the Baptist. "Repent, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand."

The same that Peter and John preached in the temple: "Repent ye therefore, and be converted, that your sins may be blotted out, when the time of refreshing shall come from the presence of the Lord, and he shall send Jesus Christ, which before was preached unto you." "Who hath ears to hear" this message of the truth? O, reader, if you are not yet at peace with God, hasten to repent, confess and forsake your sins, for "the kingdom of heaven is at hand."

The World's Crisis
AND SECOND ADVENT MESSENGER.

Boston, Wednesday, Nov. 18, 1868.

☞ Take Notice!

All subscriptions for the Crisis are payable IN ADVANCE, at the rate of $2.50 a year.

☞ Please Remember!

All remittances to this office, in the form of drafts, bank-checks and postal money-orders, should be made payable to the BUSINESS AGENT, GEO. T. ADAMS.

☞ Money Orders.

Our correspondents should remember that if they send money orders in a letter which contains the name of the sender, and the name of the person to whom the order is payable, there is NO SAFETY for their money. Any person may draw the amount named in the order, if these names are given.

Neither is it safe to send us your names in advance. Somebody may open the letter, get the names, and then wait till the order comes, and get that too.

Send on the order, not writing a word; make it payable to GEO. T. ADAMS, directing it to MILES GRANT, or World's Crisis. Then, in two or three days, write in the usual way, stating that you have sent the order, and what you wish done with the money obtained on the same, and it will be entirely safe. In the second communication be sure to give us YOUR NAME AND POST OFFICE ADDRESS. AG'T.

☞ We purpose to attend the National Convention of the Christian Associations, to be held in New York the 17th to the 19th of November.

TRACTS.

We are more and more satisfied that but few are aware of the good that may be accomplished by sending out tracts. We are anxious to do more the coming season than ever before. We find the people are greedy to get hold of the tracts. They are now ready to read. Prejudice against us is fast giving away, like dew and frost before a warm sun. This is a favored time for work in the vineyard of the Lord. The ground is ready, who will help sow the seed?

Many are mourning because they cannot do more for the Lord. They wish they could talk like Bro. A., then they would be willing to speak in meeting, or anywhere else. Perhaps that same one can spare a dollar, five, ten or more, to scatter tracts, and they will speak for him, while he may be at work earning more money to pay for more tracts. Others are out of work, and would be glad to spend some time in distributing tracts, but have not the money to pay for them. Come, Brn. and Srs. let us be whole-hearted in this good-work. It is a safe investment. Let the tract fund increase rapidly. Lend to the Lord.

"NEVER DIE."

Bro. Kankle, in behalf of a minister at Baraboo, Wis., wishes an explanation of John 11: 26—"And whosoever liveth and believeth in me shall never die. Believest thou this?"

In order to understand this verse, we need to read the three that precede it, as follows: "Jesus saith unto her [Martha,] Thy brother [Lazarus] shall rise again. Martha saith unto him, I know that he shall rise again in the resurrection at the last day. Jesus said unto her, I am the resurrection and the life; he that believeth in me, though he were dead [like Lazarus,] yet shall he live" [in the resurrection at the last day.]

But how will it be with those who will be alive at that time, and believe in Christ? Must they die, and remain dead for a short time and then be raised from the dead? Jesus settles this question by the next verse: "And whosoever liveth and believeth in me [at the time when he shall raise the dead believers,] shall never die. Believest thou this?" This was something new to Martha, that there would be some who would never die. Paul repeats this doctrine in 1 Cor. 15: 51—"Behold, I show you a mystery; we shall not all sleep," i. e., die. He then goes on to say that those christians who are alive when "the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised," will "be changed in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump;" hence, as Jesus says, they "shall never die."

SECRET SOCIETIES.

We have long been satisfied that secret societies are not in harmony with a pure christianity; but have been got up as a substitute, a counterfeit, for the purpose of mingling together the world and religion. We have known a number of devoted christians, who after becoming such, said they found it necessary to withdraw from the secret societies to which they had belonged. They felt sure it was not for the glory of the Lord that they should longer remain connected with such institutions. We think it is high time that all who wish to keep unspotted from the world, and be ready for the coming of Jesus, should come out from all the worldly associations, and trust in the Lord, instead of the secret societies.

We are pleased with the report of the Wisconsin convention relative to these societies. It is expressed as follows:—

"There are other more secret orders—as that of Free-Masonry—which we disapprove for the following reasons: Their organized and perpetual secrecy we deem contrary to the openness of freedom of the one model society of Jesus Christ, and discordant with the genius and institutions of republican governments; their unconditional oaths are inconsistent with the liberty of a sound christian conscience, and a proper sense of accountability to God; their sworn obligations to fellow-members, together with their secrecy, practically operate in some cases to thwart the ends of justice before human tribunals, and result in unjust distinctions and iniquitous favoritism in society; their intimate and secret communions sometimes bring good men into protracted and injurious contact with bad men; their boasted superior principles of benevolence are only those of mutual insurance, and sometimes of friendship; their claim to a religion which, if practiced, is sufficient for life here and for admission to heaven, is not grounded upon any doctrines of divine atonement and regeneration, but upon good works; while embracing some good moral principles in their faith, and some christians in their membership, and yet ignoring the leading characteristics of the christian religion, they endanger souls by supplanting the true church in the minds of many, and by drawing off some from their christian allegiance. We recommend the members and ministers of our churches to withhold themselves from such societies, but we advise testimony and exhortation rather than discipline with those who have entered into such relations. With some evils the application of reason and scripture is the best and sufficient antidote."

"MY VOTE."

The following appeared in the Boston Journal, Nov. 7th. It was probably taken from a Rochester paper:—

"A SINGULAR VOTE.—On Tuesday a man appeared at the Rochester polls and presented a piece of paper indorsed "My Vote," upon which the following was plainly written. The Inspectors declined to receive the paper:

'MY VOTE. I was once a guilty rebel against the best government in the universe, but have been freely pardoned.

I was once an alien from God and the Commonwealth of Israel, but have been brought nigh by the blood of Jesus, and am now a fellow citizen with the saints.

For several years my name has been registered in the 'Lamb's Book of Life.'

I hereby vote for Jesus Christ to come back to this revolted realm, ascend his majestic throne, overturn the kingdom of darkness, destroy the works of the devil, gather his scattered people, and reign as King of the saints—not four years merely, but forever and ever!" A. A PHELPS.

Our readers will recollect Bro. Phelps as the one who asked several questions through the Crisis relative to the nature of man and the punishment of the wicked; also as the one whose "Farewell Message" to the Free Methodists was recently published in the Crisis. He has since been preaching to good acceptance to the church in Rochester. He has a heart to labor in the cause of Christ. We trust he will find plenty of open doors, notwithstanding some who once esteemed him have now given the cold shoulder because he does not believe in the doctrine of eternal torment for the finally impenitent. He has made a noble sacrifice for the sake of the truth, and we trust he will never be sorry.

A QUESTION.

BRO. GRANT:—If the greater portion of the human family are to be lost, including our wives, our children, and our kindred, how can the saved ever enjoy the heavenly world with the knowledge of such a fact?

Respectfully yours, ALBERT F. MORSE.
Willington, Ct.

If the lost were to be eternally writhing in agony, within speaking distance and in sight of the righteous, as taught by the theology of the day, we should be unable to give a satisfactory answer; but when we learn from the Scriptures that the wicked are to "be as though they had not been,"—"not be remembered, nor come into mind," then all looks right, and consistent with the character of our heavenly Father.

MESMERISM AND SPIRITUALISM.

All Spiritualists and spirits, so far as we know, admit that Mesmerism and Spiritualism are governed by the same laws; and claim that the only difference between the two is this: Mesmerism is what a man does while in the body, before death; and Spiritualism is what he does out of the body after death. The following questions put to the spirits at the office of the Banner of Light, and their answers are samples of their uniform teaching:—

"Q.—Is not the law of mesmerism the same as Spiritualism?

A.—It certainly is. Both are branches from the same trunk. The same life pervades both.

Q.—You said that mesmerism was the same thing. I wish you to state other forms, if you can.

A. Psychology is another.

Q. Clairvoyance?

A. Yes; clairvoyance may be called the most extensive. It embraces the whole."—Banner of Light, Sept. 19th, 1868.

With these facts before us, it is very evident that no real spirit friends are present, or seen by the medium, any more than the objects seen by the mesmerized peason are actually present. The objects seen by the person under mesmeric control exist only in the operator's mind; so in Spiritualism; the objects seen by the medium may be found in the mind of the controlling demon; but are not present in the circle. This may be easily shown as follows: let the medium point to the spot in the room where she thinks she sees some spirit friend; then let some person in a normal state go and put his hand all about the place where the medium sees the spirit, and he will not feel any thing there more than in any other place. So it is in mesmerism. The person under mesmeric control thinks he sees real objects in a certain spot in the room; but let one who is not mesmerized examine the place, and he will find nothing of the objects seen by the other. Why not? Because they are only in the operator's mind who is controlling the medium. He can cause his subject to see whatever he pleases; so it is with the demons, who are deceiving their mediums, and leading them into the worst form of infidelity, and the direct road to destruction.

"VICTORY AND PEACE."

In the Albany Morning Express, Nov. 4th, we find the leading editorial headed, "THE TRIUMPH OF THE NATION." We could not help thinking, as we read the article, that in this nation man is honored more than God. The following is the first part of the article in the Express:

"Thank God! The great triumph has been won. True democracy has vindicated itself. The nation has been saved. Weary with the exciting agitation and the exacting strain of prolonged strife, we rest this morning in tranquil repose. Through the awful sacrifices of war and the dread turmoil of acrimonious political struggle, we breathe at last the invigorating, exhilarating air of assured peace. By the simple ballot, falling silently as the noiseless snow-flake, yet potent as the monarch's decree, the people have chosen Ulysses S. Grant as their President. In that name there is victory and peace.

The nation reveres its great savior. This splendid tribute is the expression of its profound gratitude for his matchless services. Yet that is not all of it. For Grant, the hero, it has all honor. But it is Grant, the embodiment of a great cause, the incarnation of a great purpose, that it has chosen to the Presidency. The taciturn hero of Appomattox, has its deepest admiration and homage. But it is the champion of peace assured and loyalty triumphant that carried its overwhelming suffrages. Not merely the past but the future, not the glory of war but the security of peace, inspired the majestic voice of yesterday. It is not only for what Grant has done, but for what he will do, that the people have called him to the chief magistracy of the nation."

As said Patrick Henry at the opening of the war of the revolution, "Gentlemen may cry peace, peace; but there is no peace." There may be a short calm, like that before a mighty storm, but dark clouds bode the coming of terrible scenes not far in the future. O what blindness has come over the people in relation to coming events. This happens because they have rejected the Lord and his word.

SR. ABBY ORDWAY, Saugus Centre, Mass., writes:—

"Bro. Grant:—I write to express my gratitude (if it were possible), for the receipt of the Crisis for one year, free. It has been to me preaching, prayer and conference meeting. Isolated as I am, I should be very much grieved to do without it."

We have many such letters. Shall this class, who cannot pay for the paper, who have no other preaching, or conference meeting, be deprived of this source of comfort? We think we hear many voices say No. Then can you not send us something to help pay for the free papers that are sent weekly to several hundred of the Lord's poor children?

QUERIES AND ANSWERS.

BRO. GRANT:—Please answer the following questions through the Crisis, and oblige a "Scripture searcher."

1. What is meant by the "whole world" in John 21: 25?
2. Give me all the proof in Scripture that Christ's kingdom will be on earth.
3. Why did not Christ want Mary to touch him?
4. What was the end of Peter:

N. W. RANDELL.

1. Other translations make John 21: 25 quite plain. Wakefield's reads as follows:—"Now there are also many other things, which Jesus did; but, if they were written every one, I do not think that the world even then, would receive the books which should be written. Amen."

Thompson renders it as follows:—"There are indeed many other things which Jesus did. With respect to them, if they were all committed to writing, one by one, even then I do not think that the world would cordially receive the books written. Amen."

2. We have not time now to give "all the proof in Scripture that Christ's kingdom will be on earth." We can find no proof that it will be any where else. In Matt. 5: 5, Jesus says: "Blessed are the meek for they shall inherit the earth." Said the Lord to the prophet Isaiah; "Behold, I create a new heaven and a new earth; and the former shall not be remembered, nor come into mind." Isa. 65: 17. Said Peter, "Nevertheless we, according to his promise look for new heavens and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness." 2 Pet. 3: 13.

The Revelator, in vision, heard the redeemed singing of Jesus as follows;—"Thou wast slain, and hast redeemed us to God by thy blood, out of every kindred, and tongue, and nation, and hast made us unto our God kings and priests, and we shall reign on the earth." Rev. 5: 9–10.

In Rev. 21: 1, John says: "I saw a new heaven and a new earth; for the first heaven and the first earth were passed away; and there was no more sea."

After the prophet Daniel had been shown the four great monarchies that were to hold sway over the earth, he says: "But the saints of the Most High shall take the kingdom, and possess the kingdom for ever, even for ever and ever." Dan. 7: 18. Again he says: "The kingdom and dominion and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High, whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom." Dan. 7: 27.

Said the apostle James:—"Hearken, my beloved brethren, hath not God chosen the poor of this world, rich in faith, and heirs of the kingdom which he hath promised to them that love him."

In Matt. 25: 31–34, we find Jesus instructing his disciples as follows:—

"When the Son of man shall come in his glory, and all the holy angels with him, then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory; and before him shall be gathered all nations; and he shall separate them one from another, as a shepherd divideth his sheep from the goats; and he shall set the sheep on his right hand, but the goats on the left. Then shall the King say unto them on his right hand, Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom preared for you from the foundation of the world."

It will be seen that the saints do not inherit the kingdom till Christ comes. In Rev. 11: 15, we find the time for Christ to receive the kingdom is not till after the seventh angel sounded; "and there were great voices in heaven, saying, The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord, and of his Christ; and he shall reign for ever and ever." These Scriptures we consider sufficient to settle the matter for ever.

3. In answer to the third inquiry, we would give Thompson's translation, which, we think gives the true idea in the text:—"Jesus saith to her, Cling not to me, . . . but go to my brethren and tell them I am about to ascend to my Father, and to my God and your God." Mary did not like to leave him; hence he said "cling not to me;" but go and tell the good news that I am raised from the dead.

4. Peter was crucified with his head downwards, in compliance with his own request.

REPORT OF THE UNION FEMALE MISSIONARY ASSOCIATION.

This Association held its fourth annual meeting at the Springfield campmeeting, commencing Aug. 26th, 1868. Meeting opened by prayer. Report of the last meeting was read, after which the following sisters reported their labors during the past year: A. E. Smith, M. L. Durand, A. M. Tripp, M. Otis, E. L. Crumb, M. D. Wellcome, J. Hitchcock, H. B. Hastings. These reports were interesting, and showed the deep interest of God's handmaids in the work of saving sinners. Adjourned to meet Thursday morning.

Thursday, Aug. 27th. Met according to adjournment. After prayer, listened to the remaining reports of laboring sisters. The following sisters reported: E. Azerene, — Warner, L. M. Stoddard, L. A. Mirick, M. McKinstry, — Tatro, E. S. Jennings. These reports were also interesting.

Voted, That the Constitution be read, after which those who wished to become members of this Association were requested to hand in their names, with the required fees. (See list of names.)

Voted, To elect the officers for the ensuing year. Officers elected as follows:

For President, Sister E. S. Jennings. For Vice President, Sr. A. E. Smith. For Secretary and Treas., M. McKinstry. For Assist. Secretary, M. L. Durand. The time having arrived for preaching, Voted to adjourn.

Friday, Aug. 28th. Met according to adjournment. After the opening preliminaries, the President gave a short address, for the purpose of showing to those interested the object of this Association; after which a committee of three was chosen to take the names of those who wished to join and aid in this work. This meeting was one of very great encouragement to the sisters who labor in the gospel. A goodly number joined, paying the required fees for membership (See list of names), and one good brother pledged $500 to the Association, to be had when needed. May the Lord bless him abundantly, and give him a crown of life in the kingdom.

Called for the reading of the Treasurer's report, which was as follows:

M. MCKINSTRY, Treasurer, in account with the U. F. M. Association.

DR.
To Cash received at last annual meeting, Aug. 24th, 1867	$126.00

THE PILGRIM BAND.

BRO. GRANT:—While at the Springfield campmeeting, a company of sisters met every day alone in the woods, to spend a little time in prayer. We met the same at Wilbraham last year; but this year, many more met with us, and the Lord made one in our midst. Many souls were blest, and some backsliders were reclaimed. They were precious seasons indeed, and we gave our company the name of "The Pilgrim Band," and covenanted together to spend a little time each day in prayer, especially for each other. It was proposed that each one occasionally should write a short article for the Crisis, headed "To the Pilgrim Band." It would be heart-cheering to hear from each other. MRS. O. D. WOODRUFF.

SETTING A CHAIR FOR JESUS.

A good sister of our acquaintance, a few days since, in preparing the table for supper, set an extra chair, plate, etc., saying she would set a chair for Jesus. Presently a brother in Christ called at the house, and was the recipient of her hospitality, occupying at the table the place she had in her mind prepared for Jesus. This circumstance is suggestive of an important principle in our holy religion,—"Given to hospitality." D. N. SMITH.

CHARITY MEASURE.—Men measure their charities by a peculiar standard.—A man who has but a dollar in his pocket, would give a penny for almost any purpose. If he had a hundred dollars, he might give one; carry it higher and there comes a falling off. One hundred would be considered too large a sum for him who has ten thousand, while a present of one thousand would be deemed miraculous from a man worth one hundred thousand—yet the proportion is the same throughout, and the poor man's penny, the widow's mite, is more than the rich man's high sounding and widely trumpeted benefaction.

Correspondence.

From Bro. H. K. Flagg.

BRO. GRANT:—Peace and quietness begins to reign again in this city; and the fear of riots and bloodshed have given place to the cheerfulness of other days. How glad we are to look upon the national election as a thing of the past. Although our people took no part whatever in the political strife of the past few weeks or months, yet we could not but feel a deep interest in the success of the principles which might give peace to our people. By the advice of our Mayor, we closed all our schools and some of the meetings during the election excitement. The hotels, saloons and all other places where liquor was sold, were closed by order of the Mayor also; and all children, black or white, were forbidden to go out on the street from Monday at six P. M., till Wednesday morning. The day of election was very quiet indeed. O how many times I have thought what a happy time, comparatively speaking, we should have, if all such places could be closed forever. We are looking for that time; and praise God for the evidences that it is so near; when there will be no fighting, no pain, no death. Yes, and we are called upon, not to elect our coming King, but to make our own calling and election sure.

We are at work, as usual, trying to lead sinners to love God. I baptized six last Sabbath; five white and one colored. Our meetings are interesting. All but five of those baptized were converted in our church during my absence east. Bro. Floyd from Philadelphia, Pa., has been with us nearly two weeks, and preached for us at different places of worship to good acceptance. Our brethren do enjoy a good visit from our eastern friends, and especially those who can tell them about the coming kingdom They have heard me three long years; and why should not a new gift or talent be as refreshing to them as to our brethren and sisters east?

Our schools are prospering; our meetings are interesting; and although we are not having many conversions, yet we are united and working in harmony with each other. There is at present a good prospect, should time continue, of future success. A white man at Catskill has sent me word by my son-in-law, who preached there last Sabbath, that he will deed us, as a free gift, a nice spot of ground to put a house of worship on, and also furnish us all the timber standing to build with. The colored people will cut the timber, and put up the frame, if I will cover it. Now if we could promise the Government that we would use the house as a school, and sustain it, they would furnish the aid for the lumber to cover it; but I dare not at present make that promise. If brethren east would only send us $75 for that purpose, I think it would enable me to finish the house for them. We are cramped for just such aid. I leave all in the hands of the Lord. But I feel almost discouraged. I want to do more than I am able to do. There are a great many colored people over there, and not a place to meet and worship in, except a little log house, with, I think, one small window. I let them have a little money to buy some boards to lay a floor, so as not to use the ground for that purpose. I expect to go and preach there next Lord's day. Bro. Floyd will preach here. Bro. Macon will preach at Benton Barracks, where I have leased a hall for one month. Arthur Waite will preach at Lowell, and Bro. Decatur expects to preach at East St. Louis, to a small colored Baptist church, who own their house of worship, which they built some two years ago. They promise to come into our mission.

We are doing all we can; but we need aid. Will our friends help us? I have received since my return, from private sources, from Bro. Charles Shepard, Wisconsin. $5.00. From Bro. L. Boutwell, two barrels, containing one nice bed, and some clothing, which was very acceptable indeed. The bed I gave to my daughter, who had none of her own. She has been, and is, devoting all her time to teaching, and I did not know of any one needing it more than she. Our quarterly conference was interesting, and gave us new strength and zeal for work.

Your brother in the blessed hope,
H. K. FLAGG.

St. Louis, Mo., Nov. 4th, 1868.

From Bro. I. I. Leslie.

BRO. GRANT:—The Lord is with us here, and Satan too. The last month has been one of great labor and trial. There has been considerable persecution, all coming from those who call themselves the people of God. The Devil works against us through professed christians. You know that much of the persecution which God's true people have suffered in every age, has come from the professed church of Christ. Our most bitter enemies here are church members. But in the midst of all the opposition of the combined churches in this city, the Lord has given us six souls during the month. I have baptized these into Christ, and all are rejoicing in the hope of soon seeing him. Sickness among us has considerably abated, and the warm, pleasant weather the last week has cheered many poor, nearly broken-hearted ones, and checked those diseases which are the result of chilly and rainy weather, unprotected feet and unclad bodies. O how the poor suffer here. But many of them are rich in faith and heirs of the kingdom. There is longing here for the kingdom to come. That part of the Lord's prayer is sweet to this poor people. Never could a people more desire the coming of the Lord than this. They have nothing to hold them here. They are ready and long to "take wings" and fly away to meet their coming Savior.

Our views in relation to the end of the wicked and the reward of the righteous are extending beyond the limits of our church and congregation. The doctrine of going to heaven or hell when we die, is being shaken to its foundations (if it has any) wherever we have got a hearing. The ministers, of course, do all they can to prevent the people from hearing and thinking upon the subject of the Lord's coming, and the crown and reward being given to them. But the truth gets into the hearts of many, and remains in spite of the efforts to prevent it. Praise the Lord. We are not laboring in vain. The seed sown will germinate and yield a harvest. Pray for us still, and we will work on until the Master comes. I. I. LESLIE.

P. S. Since I returned I have received a barrel of clothing from the church in Worcester, Mass. Thanks to those dear children of God. Also a package of children's garments, made and given me, when I was at home, by an invalid sister in Natick, Mass. This dear one has the use of her left arm only, and with this she has made, during the past summer, many garments for the poor children in our missions. Some of the children here are feeling warmer by her one hand. I also hear, through Bro. Boutell, that a barrel of clothing is on its way from Conn. Bro. B. is at work for the poor here. God bless him.

I. I. L.

From Bro. J. B. Wadsworth.

BRO. GRANT:—I have been told not to put off any thing for to-morrow that can be done to-day. For a few days I have felt as if I had done nothing; for, really, I have been puzzled in my mind to know how or where to begin. New Orleans has long been on my mind. I have a little feared it; but I have at last reached this wicked city. I arrived here in time to be at church last Sabbath. In the forenoon I visited the African Baptist church. In the afternoon I went to the Methodist church; heard an instructive discourse. I was not there long, before I was informed by the sexton that the church was built by northern people. It is free for every body. But few except the northern people worship there. I saw about half a dozen colored people there. The southern and northern and black man seem to have their place of worship distinct from each other. Previous to the war this was not so bad. In many localities, they made no difference as to their worshiping the Lord in a house together; but malice, enmity, and numerous other evils, have rooted out that good spirit, and it must be very painful to the Christian to see such a state of affairs; for we are taught of God to love one another, and, indeed, to do it towards all the brethren, and increase more and more; for every creature of God is good, and nothing is to be refused.

This city has some from nearly all nations in it. The southern people may not be the worst people in the world. There may be others fully as vicious. The time is not far distant when we must all appear before the judgment seat of Christ, that every one may receive the things done in his body, whether it be good or bad.

O, brethren and sisters, let us do what little we can for the perishing ones of this city. You send me what tracts you have read, and have no further use for, and I will dispose of them for you. They can be sent from here to all parts of the country. I think to visit cars, boats, in fact, to go wherever the Lord would have me to go. Here is work enough for a dozen better workers than I am, for the short time I have to stop here. This city is as black as night. She is wallowing in the mire of pollution, sinking in the jaws of everlasting destruction. O send me some printed advice, and pray that I may deliver it to the honor and glory of God. Each grain of the advice may all fall in good soil, come forth, and bear mighty fruits.

I think to stop here till Jan. 1st, if means will permit. To save money, I thought best to rent me a room and board myself; so I have rented me a room for $5.00 per month. I have a good blanket, and my knapsack will answer for my pillow. I have a box that Bro. Himes sent me full of tracts. It will do for a chair. My cooking utensils cost me seventy-five cts., and I can board myself for about $1.00 per week; so the $5.00 for the room, making in all $9.00 per month, save about $11.00 per month by boarding myself. My post-office box is 1587, New Orleans, La. My health is good. Your Bro., waiting for the time when we can praise the Lord for ever. Remember me often in your prayers.

J. B. WADSWORTH.

From Sr. Hattie Hastings.

Dear readers of the Crisis:—It is a privilege for me to address Father's family through the columns of our family paper, the Crisis. I left Boston the first of October, stopping in Worcester and Conn. a few days with friends, who helped me on my "journey after a godly sort." Came to New York, and found a resting-spot at the "Star of Hope Mission," as do all missionaries going South, whether interested in that mission or not. Sister Smith's generous heart is always open to cheer the traveler on his way, and help poor pilgrims on their journey. I have feared this mission would stop for lack of means; but I see no reason why it should. If our sisters keep their faces turned Zionward, and not stop by the way, or be turned from their purpose, they shall never be moved. That they are well adapted to this work the devil well knows. Who can say that God has not blessed their efforts? Who else could go into the garrets, and wade through filth and dirt, and be obliged to hold their breath while there for the terrible stench that exists; then down into the cellars, which are as much worse as you can think? Show me the brother or sister that would be willing to give up their children and a pleasant, quiet home for such kind of work as this, and I will show you a christian. I know what it is. I have been a missionary in the garrets and cellars; the narrow streets with horse stables in some corner of terrible filth, too degrading for human beings; and there is no work on earth that takes hold of a person's finer feelings like this, and no work that needs to be done so much.

God has prospered this mission. Infidels, backsliders, the most infamous, and worst of sinners, have been converted. Houses of ill-fame have been broken up, the haunts of vice and drunkenness, thieves and robbers, have yielded to the gentle influence of God's Spirit, through the labors of these missionaries. Satan looks on, and sees what God has done through them, and determines that he will stop the work. He is a shrewd being, and knows just how and when to strike. And so he tries one thing after another, until he gets hold of the tool of jealousy; and he knows these persons, like the best of christians, have their faults. Now he says, I'll stir up jealousy between them, and among their best friends, and when I get the ball moving, I shall accomplish my object; so he listens, waits, and watches, and when the body is tired and sick, and worn down with constant toil and labor, a word may be spoken in an unguarded moment, thoughtlessly perhaps. Now is the time, and he whispers in the ear, for whom he says it was intended, That was meant for you; then the spirit of jealousy begins to work like leaven. Now the ball has commenced rolling, and who does not know that it is hard stopping it until it gets to the bottom of the hill. When it once gets started, let it go. It will go faster than you can, if you try ever so hard. And it will stop when it gets to the bottom. All the lies that stick to it can not stand the genial rays of heaven's sunlight, down in the valley of humiliation. You know they are false, and some of your best friends know they are false, and, best of all, God knows it too.

No person taking a public stand for Christ will escape the slanderer's tongue. Cruel jealousy and envy are two of the greatest enemies in the cause of God. But God, who is for us, is more than all they who are against us. The Star of Hope Mission was started in the fear of God, sanctioned by his Spirit, blest by revivals; and any one free from prejudice, visiting New York, if they will go with Srs. Smith or Boide, visit some of these places, and stop at one of the prayer-meetings, cannot help seeing that God is with them of a truth. Who dares to take the responsibility of throwing hindrances in the way of these laborers? Who dares to withhold the means needed to sustain this work, when God tells them to give of their abundance?

I have been a missionary in the northern cities, and now I am laboring in this southern field. Some get the idea it is much harder and more discouraging here than at the north; but they are mistaken. The hardest and the most laborious of all missions I have ever visited, north or south, is the Star-of-Hope Mission. The God of Israel, that led his people safely through the Red Sea, will hear the prayers of his dark-skinned people; and since my last visit there, I have no fears that the work will stop. May God bless all the missions, and show us what our duty is. Be as charitable for one as you are for another; and if you are tempted to expose the faults of any of the laborers, remember you have faults, but you do not wish to be cast aside.

I have heard some say that a large amount of money has been expended on that mission. Yes, we know it. Suppose that seventeen or eighteen hundred dollars have been spent to support it; have not other missions cost double that sum? and yet it may be all right. The question is, Is any body saved? I answer, Yes, a church of many members, thank God! May he bless and sustain the Star-of-Hope Mission.

And now, dear brethren and sisters, I ask you to remember in particular the wants and needs of this mission, and now and then breathe a prayer to God for all the missions. Yours in the gospel field,

Mrs. H. L. Hastings.

Darlington, S. C., Oct. 30th, 1868.

From Sister E. S. Jennings.

To the saints scattered abroad; greeting:—After an absence of nearly two months, I am once more in Western New York, where I have spent the past two years preaching in several counties, opening a number of new fields, and gaining an entrance into many places where no man of our faith could have got a hearing; in some of which good churches have been raised up, and the doors are open for God's faithful servants to preach the views we entertain. I could also name at least four meeting-houses, of different denominations, where I have been admitted to preach while both minister and people have outwardly joined hands with me, rejoicing in the effect of the gospel, until they have thought best to draw in their own net in order to ascertain their gain; and finding that instead of increasing in number (as their selfiih hearts had led them to suppose,) they were decreasing, and lovers of truth were apparent in their midst As a result, they have barred their doors and shut their hearts; but I know of no instance where it has not turned out for the furtherance of the gospel, although its results to them have been spiritual death, and the hatred of outsiders. Retirement, ease and quiet, are more congenial to my nature than a life before the public; but the call breaks upon my ear from old fields and new ones, from destitute and neglected ones, "Come and help us." And though a cold winter is at hand, already spreading her white sheet over the faded flowers and fallen leaves, my heart responds to the call; even though it takes me from warm, cosy, rooms surrounded with ferinds, and with all that I need for my comfort, while I only preach to them on Sunday.

For three months last winter I preached nearly every evening; and my health and heart is good for another cammpaign, and ready for the coming struggle; but O how great the harvest; and where are the faithful laborers? I hear of preachers, of ministers, Drs. of Divinity, and theological seminaries; but when I look for prudent, faithful laborers, workers, with hearts willing, and hands ready (if need be), I have to pray "send them into the field." I thank God there are some such; others are halting; may they only wait for the heavenly endowment.

Permit me to say to those friends in various parts, who have during last spring and summer solicited my labors in a series of meetings, when the evenings were of a suitable length, that I count no solicitation, or indefinite engagement, of any force, unless repeated; as a year, or even six months, may have wrought many changes in many places, both in feeling and circumstances. Those who are expecting me to meet such engagements, will therefore write me now, stating their present wishes and circumstances, and though my calls are many, I will try to do the best I can for you. My chief anxiety is to know just where my Lord would have me go; for experience has taught me that only there may I expect his blessing and his presence. May he direct our hearts into the patient waiting for his Son from heaven.

Your sister in hope,

E. S. Jennings.

Honeoye, Ont. Co., N. Y., Nov. 3d, 1868.

From Bro. B. F. Davis.

Bro. Grant:—I love to think of the good time coming, when Father's children will get through with the troubles and trials of this wicked world, and be gathered into the kingdom of Jesus, never to part any more for ever. When we look around us, and see the sin, wickedness, and misery that there is, my heart is pained, and I am led to say, How long, O Lord, how long will this state of wickedness last? I do not expect it will be any better till Jesus comes, and wicked men and devils are all destroyed, and the earth restored back to its Eden beauty and glory. Then it will be a blessed land indeed. Glory to God for the prospect. I long for the time to come when our dead friends will live again.

Dear brothers and sisters, walk right out on the promises of God. They are yea and amen in Christ Jesus. Lift up your heads, and rejoice, knowing that your redemption draweth nigh. I believe it. Bless the Lord. This generation shall not pass, said our blessed Lord. Who can doubt it? Can the Savior lie? No, never, never.

We are having some very good meetings in Lewiston. Some have had moral courage enough to come out and embrace the truth and fall in love with Jesus. Others are inquiring the way to Zion. Bless the Lord.

Lewiston, Me. B. F. Davis.

Long Articles.—Some time ago, The Independent gave a few excellent hints on the way to write a good newspaper article, and among the rest the following, which ought not to be forgotten:

"Short articles are always the ones most likely to be read, and of course long ones are those most likely to be unread. One column is better than two, and sometimes half a column is better than either. Two columns need a very weighty theme and a first-class writer. On this subject every writer may judge of others by himself. Seldom has he the time or patience to wade through a long article; and what is true of himself, is equally true of nine men out of ten. The writers who write for the greatest number of readers do not exceed a column of any ordinary sized newspaper."

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

Cable News.

London, Nov. 15. The election attracts the attention of all classes of people, and but little business will be done during the week. The cotton trade at Liverpool will be suspended on Tuesday and Wednesday, and the breadstuffs market will probably be closed on those days. In London the stock exchange will be closed on Tuesday.

Sanguine Liberals estimate that Mr. Gladstone will have a majority of one hundred and thirty in the next House of Commons.

The prosecution by the French Government of the parties who promoted the subscription for a monument over the grave of M. Bandin, one of the victims of the coup d'etat of the 2d of December, has resulted in the conviction of several journalists and other, all of whom have been heavily fined and additionally punished by a suspension of their rights. The decision of the Court in these cases causes much popular indignation in Paris, and symptoms of unusual agitation have appeared. The police and military authorities in the city are taking extraordinary precautions against a disturbance of the public order.

The French Government has commenced a prosecution against the Gaulois newspaper for an infraction of the press law.

New York, Nov. 12. Cable specials say that the Pope, through his Nuncio at Madrid, still refuses to recognize the new Spanish Government.

Paris, Nov. 13. At a council of Ministers held at the Tuileries, proof was adduced of the existence of a conspiracy for the overthrow of the existing order of affairs in France, and a resolution was adopted providing for the use of the most vigorous measures for its suppression. The public journals will be exempted from interference if they refrain from inciting the people against the government.

At a meeting of French Bishops and Cardinals at Rome, several reformatory measures were introduced, which, to the surprise of the Conservatives, were favorably received by a majority. One of these was to revise the Council of Trent decision concerning the celibacy of the Catholic clergy and declaring that they could marry, and the other was to abolish the Latin liturgy and substitute for it the language of the nation in which the service is performed. These measures will be reported to the Ecumenical Council soon to be held.

DOMESTIC.

Havana, Nov. 15. The rebels have appeared on the railroad track between Neuvitas and Puerto Principe. They captured a train of cars with a number of passengers on board. Four of the latter were retained as prisoners, and the others were allowed to proceed to their destination on hand cars. The baggage cars were plundered of their contents and the railroad track torn up for a considerable distance.

Grand Scheme for the Invasion and Annexation of Cuba.—A grand scheme is at present on foot in New York, among a band of adventurous Americans, for the capture and conquest of the beautiful "Queen of the Antilles." The enterprise is only in embryo as yet, but not many weeks will be required to bring it to maturity. The News says:—

"The leaders in this movement are men of daring, who will reck not what danger may attend the undertaking. Several of them fought beside the ill-starred Walker on the plains of Nicaragua. The programme of the leaders is briefly this:

Part of the population of the Island of Cuba is in a state of rank disaffection to the ruling power, and is prepared to co-operate with any friendly expeditionary force that may invade the island with the object of overturning the existing government and establishing a republic that will join the United States in the same manner as Texas. It is contemplated to fit out a volunteer expeditionary army of 2,500. They must be all fellows of infinite pluck, and ready for any thing desperate. Emissaries will be dispatched to the island to apprise the revolutionary element before-hand of the intended design and concert measures for mutual co-operation. A native of high rank and considerable military genius has rendered much aid in the arranging of the plan of invasion. The invaders, however, will be nearly all Americans, who are deeply imbued with the idea that the beautiful Island Queen ought by right to be annexed to and abiding under the friendly shadow of this Western Republic. When the force is equipped and ready, it will start from these shores in fast-sailing steamers, and commence operations upon effecting a landing within a convenient distance of the city of Havana. This will also be the signal for an instant uprising simultaneously all over the island. The result of the enterprise is problematical, though it may be regarded as a project not altogether impossible.

The only delay at present to the carrying out of the enterprise is said to be "a want of the necessary funds;" but these it is expected will be forthcoming in abundance as soon as the enterprise shall be a little further under way."

Women's Suffrage Convention.—It is understood that a call is issued this week, signed by Rev. Drs. Clarke and Manning, Mrs. Julia Ward Howe, Mrs. Sarah Shaw Russell, Mrs. L. Maria Child and others, inviting the public to attend a Convention in behalf of Women's Suffrage, at Horticultural Hall, in this city, on Wednesday and Thursday, the 18th and 19th of November.

The Display of Meteors.

A correspondent furnishes the following:

Last night, Nov. 13th, seemed to be reserved to this region for the meteoric display, about which so much has been said of late. The two preceding great November showers were seen from different parts of the globe. It was not expected that another great shower would follow this year; but it was expected, however, that there would be last night the usual number of meteors occurring at the annual showers. It seems that the great meteoric swarm has not entirely passed the orbit of the earth.

The writer witnessed this spectacle from his window from three to near six o'clock this morning, having the bright star Benetnasch in the centre of the field of view from three to four o'clock, and keeping to the same azimuth the rest of the time. The radius of the field of view was about thirty degrees. From three to four o'clock one hundred and ninety-eight meteors were seen within this field, and from half-past four to half-past five o'clock, two hundred and forty-three. During this time nine were recorded by the brilliancy of their light alone, having appeared out of the field of view in the east. These must have been very brilliant.

Many of the meteors left trains of light visible for near a minute. One which passed little above the star Cor Coroli, at five thirty, downward towards a point below Benetnasch left a train visible for seven minutes, and it then became invisible by reason of daylight. The train was full ten degrees long at first, and perfectly straight; but it soon began to crook into the form of a serpent, and finally became a mass of light something larger than the moon, and drifted away in the direction the meteor moved. It resembled, in form, the great Jenny Lind meteor seen here many years ago. The meteors seemed to increase in number as daylight came on. Bright meteors were seen to the last dropping down into the dawn. Judging from the number of meteors visible in this area, there must have been seen at least seven hundred an hour. The sky was perfectly clear, and the air tranquil, all the time. The absence of the moon was favorable.

With few exceptions the meteors moved in lines which, continued back, would converge in or near the Sickle in Leo.

Special Despatch to the Traveller.

Vassar College Observatory, Poughkeepsie, Nov. 14, 1868.—Thirty-five hundred brilliant meteors were observed here last night and this morning.

[To the Associated Press.]

Poughkeepsie, N. Y., Nov. 14.—The display of meteors here last night was very fine. One magnificent meteor lasted several minutes. It represented a ball of fire as large as a man's head, with a trail of great length and width.

Hartford, Ct., Nov. 14.—Four observers last night counted three hundred meteors, at the rate of over ten a minute. The display was greatest after one o'clock A. M.

National Christian Convention.—A call signed by a large number of the most distinguished clergymen and laymen of evangelical denominations in the United States, has been issued, inviting their brethren, both lay and clerical, to meet in convention in the Reformed Protestant Dutch Church, corner 5th Avenue and 29th street, in the city of New York, from the 17th to the 20th days of this month. The object is to "more freely develop christian zeal and render efficient the gifts and energies of the church of Christ," that the indifference of multitudes to the claims of the gospel, and the tendency to irreligion in our country may be overcome. A list of eighteen topics for discussion has been prepared, in which well known clergymen and laymen will deliver introductory essays.

☞ The Turkish Government has made a contract with a house in Boston for the purchase of one hundred revolving guns. The agitations in the Danubian provinces are said to be the cause of the present military preparations.

☞ The Lynn Reporter states that Mr. Hiram Marble, so well known for his connexion with the remarkable work of excavation at Dungeon Rock, died at his residence near the spot at an early hour Tuesday morning.

☞ A fine meteoric display was witnessed in England Saturday night.

Mission Tent for Florida.

Shall the Maine Mission Tent go to Florida on a mission during the coming winter? Bro. Griffin, who is a good and faithful manager, proposes to go with the tent, provided the committee consent and the friends of missions will provide the means. Who that has abundance of means, can do better than to aid such a work? One thousand dollars would sustain such a mission during the winter. We have brethren in the State who could do it single handed, if they would. It remains for them to say what they will do at once.

I. C. Wellcome.

Maine Annual Conference.

The Maine Annual Conference will hold its next session in Bath, commencing Wednesday evening, at 7 o'clock, Nov. 18th, and continue over the following Sunday. We hope all our preachers will make an effort to attend, and a good delegation of the brethren and sisters, who feel ready to labor for the salvation of sinners. The church and friends in Bath cordially invite us, and will do all they can to entertain those who come. But they have no places for horses. Those who come with teams must provide for them. Several brethren out of the city can take horses. Brethren will call on Brn. N. G. Reed and Samuel Leman, who will direct them to other places. J. K. Partridge.

I. C. Wellcome.

Notice.

The Second Advent Chapel at Locustville, Hopkinton, R. I., will be dedicated to the worship of God, on Thursday, Nov. 26th, 1868. The meetings are to be protracted over the following Sabbath, and longer if the interest demands. Brethren and preachers from abroad are invited to attend. Come, brethren and sisters, with a mind to work for God, and the salvation of dying men.

For the church, A. Durfee.

Notice.

The next session of the Maine Central Quarterly Conference will be held at the Town House, in Rome, commencing Nov. 26th, at 7 o'clock P. M., and holding over the following Sunday. Brethren and sisters are invited to attend and unite in the worship of the Lord and the work of saving souls.

William A. Knight, Sec.

General Conference at Buchanan.

There will be a general social conference of believers in the speedy advent of our Lord Jesus Christ, at Buchanan, Mich., commencing Monday, Nov. 23d, and continuing over the following Lord's day. Elder John Couch, of New Hampshire, will be present to preach the word. Also, Elds. J. V. Himes, Wm. Sheldon, Frank Burr, and many others of our western ministers. We invite all our friends, north, south, east, and west, to be in attendance. Those purposing to make visits east or west this fall or winter, will do well to arrange to stop here during the whole or a portion of the conference. Provision will be made for all who attend. Our hearts are large enough, and our homes are open. Come, and bring a blessing from the Lord with you. Many have long wished for an opportunity to visit this place. Embrace this occasion, and it will do, not only us, but your own soul good.

The General Ministerial Conference will hold an adjourned session at the same time, which will add greatly to the interest of the occasion. Come to the feast. In behalf of the church at Buchanan,

D. R. Mansfield, Pastor.

Wm. L. Himes, Secretary.

General Ministerial Conference.

The Western General Ministerial Advent Christian Conference will meet at Buchanan, Mich., Thursday, Nov. 26th (in connection with the Social Conference), as decided by a vote of the General Conference at its last session. This meeting is not to be regarded as a special meeting, but as a continuation of our unfinished meeting at De Kalb; hence, all ministers having a good standing in any of the Western Advent Christian Conferences can take part in our deliberations, as specified in the primary call. Let the watchmen rally. We represent a noble cause. Let us honor it in earnest efforts for its promotion.

Wm. Sheldon, Secretary.

Conference.

The next regular quarterly meeting in Ohio, for the Norwalk and Fairfield districts, will be held at the latter place, in the Advent Chapel, on Saturday, at 1½ o'clock P. M., and Sunday at 10.30 A. M., of Dec. 5th and 6th. A full attendance is desired.

G. W. Stetson, Pastor.

Notice.

Those at the west wishing books, tracts, or charts, can be supplied at Rochester, N. Y., by addressing Dr. J. Nassmore, (Eagle Block) Rochester, N. Y.

Conference.

The Lord willing, the first quarterly session of the N. H. State Conference, for the present conference year, will held at Barnstead, (Clark meeting house), commencing Thursday evening, Nov. 19th, to hold over the Sabbath. It is hoped that our preaching brethren will make an effort to attend. May the Lord greatly bless.

For Committee. T. W. Piper.

Thanksgiving Meeting.

If the Lord will, there will be a meeting at Carr's Corner, Dexter, Me., Thanksgiving day, Nov. 26th. Brethren and sisters are invited to come and give thanks with us, praying that the blessing of the Lord may attend. O. G. Trundy.

Notice.

The first quarterly meeting with the church at Woodhull, N. Y., will commence Friday evening, Nov. 27th, and continue over the Sunday following. All are invited to attend. J. W. Taylor.

Notice.

Our meetings in South Boston, for the worship of God, will be held hereafter at "Fraternity Hall," No. 120 Broadway, every Sunday, the Lord willing. Come over and help us.

J. N. Berry, Secretary.

Appointments.

☞ We would say to our preaching Brethren that it is necessary we should receive their appointments as early as Tuesday Morning, as our paper goes to press about noon; otherwise they will not be inserted till the week following.

WORK FOR WINTER WITH PAY.

A book that will benefit those who buy it.

"The Plan of Redemption."

Second Edition Enlarged.

What the Brethren say of it.

FROM ELD. P. W. HOUGH.

"Dear Bro. Wellcome:—I am sorry I did not take a dozen of 'The Plan of Redemption.' It is the choicest book on that subject I ever read. I wish it could be put into the hands of all who would read it. It is just the work for this time. I have sent for more. I think there will soon be a great call for them in the west. I shall do all I can to sell it, for I believe we have no book published that is more needed.

Yours in the christian hope, P. W. Hough.

Mendoza, Wis., Sept. 28th, 1868."

FROM ELD. M. B. PATTERSON.

"Dear Bro. Wellcome:—I have improved my spare moments recently in examining the book, 'The Plan of Redemption,' for myself, and now I am better able to present it in its proper light to others. I must say here that it is the most comprehensive and instructive work that I ever examined on any theological subject whatever.

M. B. Patterson.

Richmond, Oct. 27th, 1868."

All who want to engage in selling such a work, to benefit their fellow men, and earn what they can, may address I. C. Wellcome, Yarmouth, Me., with post stamp, for terms. Our terms are liberal and safe. Retailed at $1.25. Sold at the Crisis office. 460 pages.

TARRY WITH ME.

Tarry with me, O my Savior,
For the storm is bleak and shrill;
Give me grace, that I may ever
Strive to do thy holy will.
If in thee I have found favor,
Let thy light around me shine,
Till my weak and sinful nature
Shall be swallowed up in thine.

Tarry with me, O my Savior,
While I journey here below;
For within each earth-born pleasure
Lurks unseen a deadly foe.
Guide me by thy love and counsel,
Through this wilderness of sin;
If I have not loved thee freely,
Help me, Savior, to begin.

Tarry with me, O my Savior,
For my life is ebbing fast;
And the trials and temptations
Journey with us to the last.
Linger near me when forsaken
By the friends I once could deem;
Linger near me when is broken
Friendship's brightest, purest dream.

Tarry with me, O my Savior,
For the tempest rudely blows;
And my heart is faint and weary,
Striving with my carnal foes.
Savior, look with great compassion
In the chamber of my heart;
If there's aught of thy displeasure,
Gently let it all depart.

Tarry with me, O my Savior,
Let me lean upon thy breast,
As did John, the blest disciple,
When I calmly sink to rest.
May thy counsel ever guide me,
Till I reach the promised shore,
Where the angel choir are waiting,
Waiting to invite me o'er.

TWO RESURRECTIONS.

Part of a sermon delivered by Bro. H. Munger, by request, in N. Y., upon the evidences of two classes coming up to judgment. Text, Psalms 73: 20.

This text, in its connection, is talking about the prosperity of the wicked in this world. David, no doubt, was at a loss to know what advantage the righteous had over the wicked. So it seems, by reading twenty-two verses, his human reasoning was puzzled, and he was inclined to believe that the wicked were much better off here. They had more than heart could wish, and David was in trouble all the day long, and had cleansed his heart in vain. For, if they died easy, and had no pangs in their death, and that was the end of all suffering to them, he was inclined to believe or adopt the pleasing doctrine of the non-resuscitation, or living of the wicked again. But to bring David out straight, God let him go into his sanctuary and see the end of the wicked, after they are waked up out of their sleep. God despises their image. They must live again, to have an image after they wake up. This light from God's sanctuary cleared David from the non-resurrection doctrine, and it will others.

Next Dan. 12: 2. Here are two classes that wake up to judgment. Next Jesus says, in John 5: 28 and 29, all the righteous and wicked shall come out of their graves alive to be rewarded. This statement of Jesus must stand as truth. Hark, and hear what Paul's hope was, as found in Acts 24: 15. His expectation was that there would be a resurrection, or living again, of the just and the unjust, as David and Jesus did. Now if Christ died for the Adamic transgression, he paid that debt. What did the broken law claim of Christ to satisfy the demand against Adam? Was it to be eternally dead, as some say? If so, Christ is dead yet, if he ever died, and has not risen, and the dead in Christ have perished; so says Paul. 1 Cor. 15: 12–23. Here are two orders, and two classes. Just as true as Christ died because of sin; just so true saint and sinner must die that same death, and just so true saint and sinner must come up to the Adamic life again, by virtue of the second Adam, and be judged for the deeds done in the body. The wicked that died in their sins will then die for their sins, as the Scriptures say, after they are judged and sentenced to "the second death." They must have a second life, to fulfill the Scriptures.

Out of the many that Christ brought to life, there is no evidence that but one was a virtuous man, and that was Lazarus, and he died again. One thing is certain, he was not immortal when he awoke; so it does not follow that rising up from the grave means immortality. It was not so in the arrangement of Christ, to show the order of the resurrection or coming to life again. The rising is going up after the change comes. See 1 Thess. 4: 13–17. Here we have the order again,—the righteous waked up before the change takes place. Do read it again carefully. Paul says in 1 Cor. 15, "we shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed." This shows that the righteous dead will need changing after they wake up, which agrees exactly with Paul in Thess., and in Christ's own case. He was not changed thirty-nine days after he took his life again. Paul says he brought life and immortality to light, so we could see it. How? Life first, immortality after life. This was so in his case, certainly. Those that came out of their graves when or immediately after he did (see Matt. 27: 51–53), came out—not mummies, but mortal, living beings, and walked into the holy city; i. e., Jerusalem, and appeared unto many. Here we have the same order again. No immortality by coming up to life.

Once more, and I have done. I will go back to the oldest scholar on this theological point. He walked with God three hundred years, and no one will question his veracity. Jude says (14, 15,) Enoch was a prophet, and walked with God three hundred years. And he prophesied about Christ's coming to judgment, and gave the order and object of his coming, i. e., to convince all the ungodly —not a part—of their ungodly speeches made against him (God). Read this 15th verse again. He is coming to execute judgment upon all righteous and wicked—two classes, and convince the wicked especially of their wickedness. Will he convince a dead mummy and send him into hell-fire? Jude, as well as Enoch, David, Ezekiel, Daniel, Christ, and the apostles, all harmonize.

Talk about God's so loving the world that he would lay by his attribute of justice! You might as well say that God so loved the race that he would not make an element that would drown or burn men if they disobeyed the laws of nature.

The broken law of God did not claim of Christ eternal sleep, nor to go to hell-fire at death, from the fact he is not in either position, and both positions are incorrect. The truth is between these two extremes. Coming forth is not rising to meet the Lord in the air. There are three positions now before the public: first, all will come out of their graves immortal. If so, the doctrine of universal salvation is true, or will be at the time of the resurrection.

The second position, that the wicked never will wake up to come to judgment, is designed to head off the other; when in fact the Scriptures show another view; i. e., they will all come forth, but the wicked will not be changed, which is necessary before being caught up. When the watchmen see eye to eye, I believe it will be from this stand-point. Amen.

THE CHRISTIAN'S HOPE.

What a blessed hope is the christian's. What comfort and consolation it affords the weary, suffering child of God, as he toils along amid the thorny path that leads to life and eternal blessedness. While he journeys homeward to the celestial city, he is oft times heard singing, when those he loves are torn from him by the cruel hand of death:

"In that bright world no tears will flow,
Death ne'er can enter there;
For all who gain that heavenly land,
Shall be as angels are."

This sweet hope that I cherish and cling to so closely, is my joy in sorrow; my light and comfort in distress. Truly this hope is as an anchor to my soul, both sure and steadfast. Praise God for this blessed hope. I would not give up my hope for anything and everything that could be seen, thought of or imagined.

What a vast difference between a worldly hope and a gospel hope. My hope leads me to expect an entrance in to the kingdom of God, where there shall be no more pain, no more want, no more suffering, for all these things shall have passed away and life and immortality shall forever last. This is my hope to-day, as I lie and suffer extreme pain. Soon, very soon I expect to be free from them all. O blessed hope! Well may it be called a "helmet," the hope of salvation. Praise the good Lord, this hope is ours; that whether awake or asleep we are the Lord's, and that by and by our hope will be consumated, and changed to glad fruition, faith lost in sight, and prayer turned to praise. No wonder that the beloved apostle exclaims, "Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, which according to his abundant mercy hath begotten us again unto a lively hope, by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead." And what are we to hope for? An "inheritance incorruptible, undefiled, and that fadeth not away, reserved in heaven for you." Praise Jesus, bless his holy name for this sweet hope; a hope that frees us from all that can harm or annoy us. O how cheering is the hope for a land free from all these things, to be redeemed, delivered, and be made forever free from all these ills; tears all wiped away by God's own soft hand, as we stand on Mount Zion with all that countless throng, and join in the glad songs of the redeemed ones of God.

Is this hope mine? Can I hope for all these things? Yes, if I but endure to the end, I shall see the King in his beauty. The morn will soon dawn, the shadows flee away, and his sweet melodious voice will be heard calling to his saints, Children, come home. How sweet to their ears will it be. Then parents, brothers, sisters, meet and clasp glad hands in the better land. Husbands and wives will there meet again, and there be united forever. O, what a hope is ours. What blessed realities cluster round it. O, let us be good.

CONFORMITY TO THE WORLD.

"And be not conform ed to this world."—ROM. 12: 2

BRO. GRANT:—I have felt it my duty to say something to the church in relation to this subject. I feel quite incompetent, yet I speak in behalf of my Lord in view of the solemn responsibility that rests upon all the watchmen to speak faithfully, that we may not be found guilty before God in that great day just before us. May the Lord guide our pen.

What does the apostle mean by this expression? Does he not mean that we should present ourselves to God a living offering, for God to use as he shall please? If so, then he would control all our affections and passions in harmony with his law. Then shall we understand that this world is unlike the laws of God? If so, in what sense?

1st. The world demands our sympathy, that it may control our passions in sin, in direct opposition to righteousness and true holiness. Then a conformity to the spirit of the world would be to please vain eyes and ears, and to gratify our passions and lusts. Perhaps it would be proper to give the definition of the word heart: "The seat of the affections and passions; as love, joy, grief, enmity, and courage, pleasure, etc." Now if the Lord means what he says, then we understand him when he says, "My son, give me thine heart." Then all these before-mentioned passions must be given to the Lord, to control or use to his glory. Then when we adhere to the injunction, "Be not conformed to this world; but be ye transformed," we shall understand that God demands all of this to be a christian. Hear James on this point: "Doth a fountain send forth at the same place sweet water and bitter?"—James 3: 11. This is plain. A conformity to the world in one of these vain passions would be to reject the other. O Lord, help us to feel this. Are we acting out our passions in sympathy with Christ or against him?

Question. Which way do our passions run in politics? Hear Jesus say, "My kingdom is not of this world"; if it was, "then would my servants fight." There is no fighting passions found in grace; hence that worldly passion is changed to a heavenly thirsting for the coming kingdom of Jesus Christ.

How is it with the passion of talking? Hear the words of Inspiration: "In the multitude of words there wanteth not sin; but he that refraineth his lips is wise."—Prov. 10: 19. "The lips of the righteous feed many."—ver. 21. Look on the other side: "For the sin of their mouth, and the words of their lips, let them even be taken in their pride; and for cursing and lying which they speak."—Ps. 59: 12. Then we need wisdom to order our conversation.

But what about the sight of the eye? Hear what Peter says: "Having eyes full of adultery, and that cannot cease from sin; beguiling unstable souls; an heart they have exercised with covetous practices; cursed children."—2 Pet. 2: 14. Must not this passion be transformed? Again, do our eyes love to see vanity? Do we love to see the vain fashions of the world, such as the Lord forbids in his word? or do we love to please others' eyes? Have we got that passion? do we indulge in that passion? Do we ornament our bodies, and our heads? Do we conform to the world, or to Christ? "Be not conformed to this world, but be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind." By yielding to one, we reject the other. The Spirit of Christ only goes with that passion, or mind, which keeps the word of God. Then if we yield to the vile passion, do we not lose the spirit of Christ? Ye cannot serve two opposites at the same time.

Does the divine testimony forbid us from decorating our bodies? Most assuredly. Hear the apostle: "Whose adorning, let it not be that outward adorning of plaiting the hair, and of wearing of gold, or of putting on of apparel."—1 Pet. 3: 3. Do our eyes fancy wearing gold on the hand, or in the ear, or any where? Do we like the gold chain and watch, with all the fixings? Have we got that passion, so much against the Spirit of truth? Are we thus conformed to the world, and claiming to be waiting for him, living in open violation of God's word? Hark! hear Jesus speak: "My words . . . shall judge him in the last day." Paul says: "Not with broidered hair, or gold, or pearls, or costly array."—1 Tim. 2: 9. Is it a passion of the world to wear costly array? Some may think it will do, and that the Lord will accept the sacrifice if they give away their old silks and fine dresses that have gone out of fashion, and buy a new one that will cost fifty or sixty dollars. Can we deceive the Judge of all the earth? Can we indulge in ornamenting our houses to please our own passion and others' eyes, saying in the inmost soul we must be like other folks? By what rule shall we live? by the Scriptures, or some other rule? Will you decide this question? What does the apostle say? "Be not conformed to this world." Now to be conformed is to follow in the same habit. God's word never condemns any habit necessary to our comfort. Vain, costly things, for show, do not add to our comfort.

My dear brethren, do you think that the Lord means what he says? or do you think you have done so much for the cause that he will let you in any how? The law reads to every one, "Strait is the gate." It means so. Self-indulgence is forbidden in every case, rich or poor. Let me quote the text once more: "Be not conformed to this world; but be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind."

I. DAMMAN.

APOSTOLIC PREACHING.

The apostles never preached death nor man's mortality, to persuade to the performance of any duty. They never told their audiences that they were dying assemblies, that life was very short and uncertain, and that death was very near; nor urged these as arguments to persuade them to a life of holiness. They never cried, repent, for you are mortal and dying. They never cried, believe in the Lord Jesus Christ, for sickness will soon come; the dying hour will soon come the heart-rending, final farewell to weeping friends will soon come; the unchangeable grave-clothes, the narrow coffin, the mournful procession, will soon come; and soon you will be laid in the dark, lonely, silent grave, to be devoured by corruption and the worms. No, no; this was not their style of preaching. They never said to believers, suffering persecution, imprisonment, martydom for the name of Jesus, by way of consolation, you will soon die and be with the Lord Christ in paradise, where your blessedness will be perfect and eternal. They never said to those mourning the death of near relatives, of dearly beloved ones who had died in the faith, believe in Christ, and live a holy and godly life, and you will soon go to them. They never told believers that there is a kingdom and a throne awaiting them above the skies. They never taught such doctrines, never uttered such sentiments. All these, grand, impressive and powerful as they may seem, are wholly the devices of men, and utterly subversive of the doctrines and teachings of the apostles, who learned their theology from the lips of Jesus, and spoke as they were moved by the Holy Ghost. Such doctrines were never taught in the first and purest ages of Christianity; but always the coming kingdom of Christ on earth. It was not till Romanism began to infuse her errors into the church and the Pope became the vicar of Christ on earth, that these human doctrines were preached, which in their abounding, so obscured gospel light, that the gloom of the dark ages followed as the consequence. They never preached man's dying and going away beyond the skies, but always Christ and his coming; and after the resurrection, their remaining with him here and reigning on the earth. Their teaching and preaching everywhere most clearly prove this. The climax of the songs of the redeemed, which John heard before the throne, declares the same truth: "We shall reign on the earth." And the great voices which he heard in heaven reechoed it, when they cried: "The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord and of his Christ; and he shall reign forever and ever."

The apostles preached the coming of Christ to the conversion of all nations, the ushering in of the millennium, and the establishment of his kingdom on earth. They never preached a millennium previous to his coming, but always subsequent, and always coupled his appearing and kingdom, as he himself always did. There can be no millennium till the antichristian powers are destroyed; and they positively declare that it is only the Lord's coming that shall destroy these. 2 Thess. 2: 8: The mystery of iniquity, that Wicked, shall work, till the Lord shall consume him with the spirit of his mouth, and destroy him with the brightness of his coming, or appearing. But we cannot enlarge upon this, which is taught alike by prophets, by Christ, by apostles, and by the vision-seer of Patmos. Suffice it to say, on all occasions, and for all purposes, the apostles preached the second and glorious coming of the Lord Jesus Christ. With them it was not the cross alone; it was also the crown of life, the crown of immortality. It was not Christ hanging on the tree; it was also Christ coming in his own and his Father's glory. It was not Christ sleeping in Joseph's tomb; it was Jesus coming in his resurrection power, and causing all that are in their graves to hear his voice and come forth. It was not his having gone to heaven that they so frequently preached, but his coming again to sit upon the throne of his father David, and rule the nations of the earth; the kingdoms of this world having become his kingdom, their eyes were ever turned to the coming of their Lord; their heart and affections were ever set upon it, and hence, they were forever feeling and saying, preaching by word and action: "Now are we the sons of God, but it doth not yet appear what we shall be, but when he shall appear, we shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is." The apostles preached the coming of Christ to the restitution of all things. The apostles preached the coming of Christ to reign here eternally in glory. But we must now forbear, having already trespassed upon space and patience. —The Israelite Indeed.

MEMORIAL.

On the Death of Sr. F. C. [illegible], of the Memphis (Tenn.) Mission.

Sister, thy toil is o'er,
Thy works shall follow thee;
The Spirit speaks the living word,
"Blest they who die in Christ the Lord,"
Theirs immortality!
Oh, morn arise,
When from the skies
The Judge shall come, and give his saints the prize.

Sister, the word of life,
That gave thee peace with God,
Was dealt by thee to souls in need,
Who feasted on the heavenly bread,
And learned of Jesus' blood.
O faithful band!
Soon ye shall stand
Approved and welcomed to the King's right hand.

Sister, thy lonely grave,
Scorned by the proud of earth,
Is watched in that sad southern land,
By an unseen angelic band,
Till Jesus call thee forth.
Sleep, sister, sleep,
In hope we weep,
And wait till the Good Shepherd calls his sheep.

Newark, N. J. JOHN LYLE.

ROME.

The Pope's Proclamations to Protestant and other Non-Catholics—Letter to the Bishops of Eastern Churches.

ROME, Oct. 3d. The Pope has issued lately two proclamations of considerable importance, the first in date being addressed to the hierarchy of the Eastern churches, Greek and Armenian, whose prelates, although looked on by the Holy See as schismatics, are still acknowledged by the Roman church as bishops by apostolic succession, and as such exhorted in a style totally different from the language addressed to "all Protestants and other non-Catholics," in which the Anglican church and its hierarchy are totally ignored, or only classed among the "religious societies" whose derelictions are to be deplored. This second apostolic letter appears to me to be of sufficient universal interest to send you a free rendering from the Latin of the entire document. It is entitled "Letters apostolic of our most sacred Lord, Pius, by divine providence, ninth Pope of the name, to Protestants and other non-Catholics," and runs as follows: It will be already known to you all that we, although undeserving, being raised to this chair of Peter, and thereby given supreme rule over the whole Catholic church confided to our care by the Lord Jesus Christ, have judged it fitting to convoke the bishops of the whole world, to unite them together in the Ecumenical Council, to be celebrated in the coming year, in order that with these venerable brethren summoned to share in our solicitude, we may adopt all those councils which may be found most suitable and needful for the dissipation of the darkness of so many pestilent errors that prevail and pervert souls everywhere, as well as to the end of securing the daily increase and amplification, in those nations committed to our vigilance, of the kingdom of the true faith, of true justice, and the true peace of God. And these being chiefly entrusted to that most close and loving bond of union by which our venerable brethren, who have never failed during the whole term of our Pontificate to give brilliant proofs of fidelity, love and obedience to us and to this our Holy See, are wonderfully linked together with us and this our See, we hope that like other general councils in past ages the council convened by us at the present time, may, by the favor of divine grace, produce copious and joyful fruits to the greater glory of God and the eternal salvation of mankind.

Therefore, sustained by this hope, and incited and impelled by the loving kindness of our Lord Jesus Christ, who gave his soul for the salvation of the whole human race, we cannot refrain from addressing in paternal and apostolic language, all those who acknowledging the same Jesus Christ as the Redeemer, and glorying in the name of christians, still profess not the true faith of Christ, nor follow the communion of the Catholic church. And we do this admonishing, exhorting, and beseeching them seriously to consider and reflect as to whether they follow the way prescribed by the same Christ our Lord, which alone leads to eternal salvation. And assuredly none can deny that the same Jesus Christ, in order that the fruits of his redemption might be applicable to all generations of mankind, did build here on earth, on Peter, the only church which is one, catholic, holy, and apostolic, and on her conferred every needful power to preserve entire and inviolate the deposit of the true faith, and to teach that faith to all peoples, races, and nations, in order that by baptism all men should be united to his mystic body and that new life of grace be in them preserved and perfected, without which no one can merit and obtain eternal salvation; and that this same church which constitutes his mystical body should endure and prosper, firm and immutable in her own nature until the consummation of all time, to supply his children with the means of salvation. Now, whoever will well consider and meditate the condition in which the various religious societies find themselves at war among themselves, and separated from the Catholic church, which from the days of our Lord Jesus Christ and his apostles, uninterruptedly by means of her sacred and legitimate pastors has ever exercised, and at the present day exercises, the divine power confided to her by the same Christ our Lord, must easily feel assured that no one society among them, not the whole of them put together, constitute in any way, or are at all that one and Catholic church, when they are evidently divided from the catholic unity. Since wanting that living authority established by God, which especially teaches matters of faith and habits of discipline, directing and governing in all things which regard eternal salvation, these societies vary continually in their doctrines, with a fickleness and instability that can never cease. Surely every one can readily understand and see openly and clearly that this is entirely opposed to the Church instituted by God, in which truth must continue ever stable, and not subject to any change, even as the deposit intrusted to be preserved by the Church in its integrity, and for the safe custody of which the presence and aid of the Holy Spirit was promised in perpetuity. None, moreover, can be ignorant that from these dissensions in doctrines and opinions arise also civil disunion, and that they originate the innumerable sects and communions which day by day are propagated to the extreme injury of the christian and civil republic.

Wherefore, all those who recognize religion as the foundation of all human society, ought likewise to recognize and confess what injury such division of principles in religious associations has exercised throughout civilization, and how strongly the rejection of the authority constituted by God to govern the persuasions of the human intellect, and to direct the actions of men, both in private and social life, has excited, promoted, and nourished these most unhappy perturbations of the affairs of the day, by which almost every nation has been agitated in a miserable and grievous manner. Therefore, now, all those not holding the doctrine of the unity and verity of the Catholic church should embrace the opportunity of the Council, by which the Catholic church, subscribed to by their ancestors, offers a new argument of her intimate unity and vital power, and seconding the true need of their hearty endeavor to deliver themselves from a state in which they cannot feel sure of their own salvation. Nor should they omit to offer up the most fervent prayers to the Lord of mercy that he would be pleased to throw down the wall of separation, dissipate the mists of error, and lead them back to the bosom of Holy Mother Church, wherein their ancestors possessed the saving paths of life, and wherein alone is perfectly preserved and taught the doctrine of Jesus Christ and the mysteries of heavenly grace dispensed.

We then, as holding the office of supreme apostolic ministry, confided to us by the same Christ our Lord, feel bound to fulfill with utmost diligence all the duties of the good shepherd, and to follow after and seek to embrace in fatherly love all mankind throughout the world, wherefore we send these our letters to all christians separate from us, exhorting and beseeching them again and again to hasten to return to the one only fold, since from the depths of our soul we desire their salvation above all things, and one day to have to answer before our same judge, if, as far as lay within our power, we had not pointed out and prepared for them the way to secure eternal salvation. In every prayer with acts of grace we will assuredly never cease our efforts by day and night humbly to beseech the eternal Shepherd of souls to grant them an abundance of heavenly gifts and graces. And as here upon earth we, although, hold the office of his vicar, so we await with open arms and ardent anxiety the return to the Catholic church of her wandering children, that we may receive them with all love into the house of the heavenly Father, and enrich them with his inexhaustible treasures. Since on this most desired return to the truth and to communion with the Catholic church depends not their individual salvation only, but in a great measure the salvation of all christianity, and because the whole universe can never enjoy true peace till there be but one fold and one shepherd.

Given at Rome, at St. Peter's, 13th September, 1868, in the twenty-third year of our pontificate.

The letter to the bishops of the Eastern churches, which bears the date of the 8th of last month, contains a warm invitation in the name of their common faith to return to that communion with the Catholic church which their predecessors of old gloried in, and to attend the coming council even as the bishops of their communion failed not to do when invited to the second Council of Lyons, held by Pope Gregory X., in 1274, and to the Council of Florence held by Eugenius IV., in 1439 (both of which it may be remembered were specially for the end and purpose of the reunion of Eastern and Western churches.) His Holiness desires in his letter to recall to their memory with what care and indefatigable labor the fathers of the Oriental church sought, by precept and example, to cultivate a perfect union with the Apostolic See, their hearts being full of the love and charity of him who with his blood purchased peace and reconciliation for all men whose prayer to the Father was, "I beseech thee that these may be one as we also are."—The World.

— In company, set a guard upon your tongue, in solitude, upon your heart. The most ignorant have knowledge enough to discover the faults of others; the most clear-sighted are blind to their own.

— A hidden light soon becomes dim, and if it be entirely covered up, will expire for want of air. So it is with hidden religion. It must go out. There cannot be a christian whose light in some aspect does not shine.

— A holy silence allays all tumults in the mind, and makes a man in patience to possess his own soul, which, next to his possession of God, is the choicest and sweetest possession in all the world.

— Two things, well considered, would prevent many quarrels; first, to have ascertained whether we are not disputing about terms rather than things; and secondly, to examine whether that on which we differ, is worth contending about.

— Labor is of noble birth, but prayer is the daughter of heaven; labor has a place near the throne, but prayer touches the golden scepter; labor, Martha-like, is busy with much serving, but prayer sits with Mary at the feet of Jesus.

— Genuine, neighborly love knows no distinction of person. It is like the sun, which does not ask on what it shall shine, or what it shall warm; but shines and warms by the very laws of its own being. So there is nothing hidden from its light and heat.

— Little faults become great, and even monstrous in our eyes, in proportion as the pure light of God increases in us; just as the sun, in rising, reveals the true dimension of objects which were dimly and confusedly discerned during the night.

— To know evil of others, and not speak it, is sometimes discretion. To speak evil of others, and not know it, is always dishonesty. He may be evil himself who speaks good of others upon knowledge; but he can never be good himself who speaks evil of others upon suspicion.

— The saints are sustained by the Spirit under their weaknesses; supported by him under their troubles; recovered by him when they are under spiritual decay; assisted by him in all their conflicts with their spiritual enemies, till they enter the kingdom of eternal rest.

BE DOERS OF THE WORD.

The net-work of God's providences is wonderful. His warp is stretched all along our pathway; and if we furnish the filling, there will be a garment for us at the end which will shield us from the coming storm. But if we neglect to fill up or improve these opportunities, we may stand before the Judge naked, and hear from his lips, Ye did it not to my brethren or me.

We often hear of circumstances of this kind. I recollect of reading, in Sister A. E. Smith's report of her labors, of receiving articles of clothing, etc., and those in need of these things were at hand to receive them. The same principle is often exemplified in preaching and in social meetings. The preacher's mind is directed to a certain text, and he, as it were, fires at random; but there are those who listen who need the very meat he is giving. So we should sow beside all waters, and remember the words of Inspiration, "Blessed is he that considereth the poor. The Lord will deliver him in the time of trouble." Job also said, "The cause which I knew not, I searched out." We must infer from this that we are not to wait, in all cases, to be asked for help, but to search for opportunities for relieving those in need. Shall we lay up treasure in heaven?

GOOD ADVICE ABOUT DOING GOOD.—Why do you begin to do good so far off? This is a ruling error. Begin in the centre, and work outwards. If you do not love your wife, do not pretend to such love for the people of the antipodes. If you let some family grudge, some peccadillo, some undesirable gesture, sour your visage toward a sister or a daughter, pray cease to preach beneficence on a large scale. Begin not next door, but within your own door; with your next neighbor, whether relative, servant, or superior. Account the man you meet the man you are to bless. Give him such things as you have. "How can I make him or her happier?" This is the question.—Charles Quill.

A "SWEARING-ROOM."—From one of the American papers, we learn that a person, having the appearance of a gentleman, was recently using very profane language in one of the public rooms of a hotel in Baltimore; when he was told by the landlord that such language was very disagreeable there, but that there was a private room fitted up for a "swearing-room," where he might swear to his heart's content. The man took the rebuke kindly, and was heard to swear no more.—British Workman.

A RECEIPT FOR SOAP.—An econimical family of Pittsfield, whose soap bills were eighty cents a month, have for the same amount of money, which the ingredients of the following cost, made an excellent quality of hard soap, which has lasted the same family over a year, or a saving of over one thousand per cent: Take six pounds of sal-soda, six pounds of grease, and three pounds quick-lime. Thoroughly mix the soda and lime in four gallons of water, pour off from the sediment, put in the grease and boil twenty minutes; pour off and before entirely cold cut in bars. Try it, and report.

"DID YOU SWEAR, PAPA?"

Flora was at the window watching for papa. She was growing impatient, for it was almost time for the stars to come out, and she wanted to give him a good-night kiss. Presently Flora's quick ears caught the sound of a familiar footstep, and with a cry of joy she bounded away to meet her father. Before she reached the gate, a gentleman who was passing stopped to speak with him.

Suddenly the sunny face became clouded, and slowly the child turned towards the house; she sat down in her own little chair, and covered her face with her hands.

The mother seeing her, said, "Is Flora sick to-night?" "No, mamma;" and then the little head was bowed again. The mother took her in her arms, and said, "Will not Flora tell me what troubles her?" "I know I must keep nothing from my mother," Flora answered. "I was watching for papa, and when he came I ran out to meet him, but some one called him, and while I waited for the man to go away, I heard some one swear. Do you think it was my papa?"

The mother knew not what to answer. She knew that her husband frequently took the name of God in vain, but to her sorrowing little one she could not say this.

Flora slipped from her mother's arms into her little chair, and again buried her face in her hands, when her father came in. He had missed the bright face and bounding step of his little one, and when he entered the house, and she did not come to meet him, thought she must be ill. Taking her in his arms, he said tenderly, "Is my little Flora sick to-night?" "No, papa." "What has troubled my darling, then?" After a moment's hesitation, Flora said, "When I was waiting for you just now, I heard some one swear, and I think it was the man on this side of the fence. Was it you, papa? Did you swear?"

It was hard to meet the gaze of those clear eyes. What would not the father at that moment have given could he have answered, "No, Flora, your father did not swear." From the silence and the averted gaze, Flora's quick intuition gathered the truth, and she would not be comforted.

Never before in the presence of his child had an oath escaped this father's lips, and he was grieved that his little daughter's faith in him should be so shaken. If before his child he stood condemned, how can he appear before the Judge of all the earth?

TAKING A STAND.

Tom ——— was invited to the room of a friend, where he found a party of young men.

"Will you smoke, Tom?" Tom did not smoke. He said he had given up smoking, and he meant to stick to it.

"A little hot punch, Tom?"

"No, sir," very decidedly.

"We are getting up a club, Tom, and want you, as a member of the old croquet club, to join the new one."

Tom still declined; and when asked why, he frankly told why. Members of the old croquet club occasionally drank whiskey; and what assurance was there that they would not do the same thing again, or worse? In clubs or associations of any kind, bad habits of the few, often drag the whole club down, and bring its members to disgrace. "So I must stay out," said Tom, "even at the cost of losing a friend."

On his way home, Tom was joined by another of the company.

"I was so glad to hear you say 'No,' Tom," cried the young man, who wanted to, but did not quite dare to take the lead.

Oh! how many thousands of young people, not quite strong enough to say "No" them selves, hail with thankful joy the "No" of a companion. They need holding up. We are not all oaks, able to breast temptation alone. We need support, assurance, the comfort of a strong, brave heart to lean upon.

There is wonderful power in a clear, decided "No." It braces the person who says it; it braces every right-minded person who hears him. Oh! if the boys, and the girls too, would only be true to their conscience, to their convictions of right, to their christian training, there, would not be so many, many sad wrecks among us.

"Be steadfast," says Paul, "immovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord;" and I am sure it is a noble part of his work to strengthen the weak.—Child's Paper.

THE RIGHT WAY TO BEGIN.

A little girl once said, "O mother, how very hard it is to do right! I don't think I shall ever be able."

"Have you really tried, my dear?"

"Oh! yes; I try every day. When I awake, before I get up, I say to myself, 'I will be good all the day; I will be gentle and kind; I will obey my parents and teachers; I will not quarrel; I will always tell the truth.' But then, mother, I don't know how it is, I do so often forget. Then, when evening comes, I have to say, 'There now! what is the use of trying? I have been in a passion; I have been disobedient; and once or twice, mother, you know, I have said what was not true."

The dear child seemed very much ashamed while saying this, so her mother looked kindly at her, and only said,

"My dear, I do not think you have begun right."

The little girl looked up wonderingly, and her parent went on:

"The first thing is to have a new heart; have you asked for this?"

"No, mother, I am afraid not."

"Then, my child, do so at once. Good fruit, you know, can only come from a good tree. If your heart is wrong, your conduct will be wrong. You cannot make it right yourself, with all your good resolutions; but ask God, for Christ's sake, to help you. He will give you his Holy Spirit, and you will not find it any longer impossible to do right."

My dear young reader, are you, in all things, trying to do right? And have you begun in the right way?

WASHING.

Come, children, now, and have a wash,
And then rub nice and dry;
For washing's very good for health;
And I will tell you why.

The skin is full of tiny holes,—
Pores, as the learned call;
Such thousands!—it would take a life
To try and count them all.

And through these a moisture fine—
Too fine by far to see—
Passes from off the blood, and leaves
The vessels cool and free.

Now, if these holes are choked with dirt,
The moisture can't get through,
But turns again into the blood,
Which it ought not to do.

For thence will many evils spring,—
Feverish heat and sores;
And all because the dirt has filled
Those wondrous little pores.

STORY OF A DOG.

Many people laugh at the idea of being careful of a dog's feelings, as if it were the height of absurdity; and yet it is a fact that some dogs are exquisitely sensitive to pain, shame and mortification, as any human being. See, when a dog is spoken harshly to, what a universal droop seems to come over him. His head and ears sink, his tail drops and slinks between his legs, and his whole air seem to say, "I wish I could sink into the earth to hide myself

Prince's young master, without knowing it, was the means of inflicting the most terrible mortification on him at one time. It was very hot weather, and Prince, being a shaggy dog, lay panting, and lolling his tongue out, apparently suffering from the heat.

"I declare," said young master George, "I do believe Prince would be more comfortable for being sheared." And so forwith he took him and began divesting him of his coat. Prince took it all very obediently; but when he appeared without his usual attire, every one saluted him with roars of laughter, and Prince was dreadfully mortified. He broke away from his master, and scampered off home at a desparate pace, ran down cellar, and disappeared from view. His young master was quite distressed that Prince took the matter to heart; he followed him in vain, calling "Prince, Prince!" No Prince appeared. He lighted a candle and searched the cellar, and found the poor creature cowering away in the darkest nook under the stairs. Prince was not to comforted; he slunk deeper and deeper into the darkness and crouched on the ground when he saw his master, and for a long time refused to take food. The family all visited and condolled with him, and finally his sorrows were somewhat abated; but he would not be persuaded to leave the cellar for nearly a week. Perhaps by that time he indulged the hope that the hair was beginning to grow again, and all were careful not to destroy the illusion by any jests or comments on his appearance.—Queer Little People, by Mrs. Stowe.

STAND FAST.

"And having done all, stand."—Eph. 6: 13.

Can you stand for God though you stand alone,
With your heart at rest and your soul secure;
With your feet on the rock and eye on the throne,
Can you stand and toil, and stand and endure?

Can you stand for God 'mid the storm's wild wail,
Can you stand when the tempests ride the air;
Can you stand when earthly hopes shall fail,
Can you stand for God and never despair?

Can you stand for God when your heart grows faint,
And your sad soul looks through the blinding tears,
Can you stand without murmuring or complaint,
Through the tedious days and the toilsome years?

Can you stand for God while the witching smile,
And the siren song and the world's caress
Unite their charms with the serpent's guile,—
Can you stand with only God to bless?

Can you stand in the faith, though the time be long,
Though the night be dark and the day-star dim;
Can you stand and in his own strength be strong,
Till at last you are found in peace of him?

Can you stand?—then stand in the strength of God,
Through the waning years of this world of woe;—
When the golden streets are by pilgrims trod,
You shall stand within and his glory know.

"ADVENTISM CONSIDERED."

A Review of Rev. W. Post's Work purporting to expose the Errors of "Adventism."

I.—Introductory Remarks.

Duty often imposes unpleasant tasks upon men. Precious pearls may lie buried deep amid the debris of human superstructures; and, though an unpleasant task to clear away the rubbish and extricate them from their obscurity, yet, when brought to the light, shine forth with renewed and glorious lustre.

"Truth crushed to earth shall rise again,
The eternal years of God are hers;
While error wounded writhes in pain,
And dies amid her votaries."

There is a class among the popular school of theologians who seemingly stand in the shoes of infallibility regarding the interpretation of Revelation, and virulently oppose those who have stepped out of sectarian stocks, choosing to think for themselves, rather than to run the risk of losing eternal life by adopting the theory of some one else for their faith. We shall not here question their honesty. They may think that they are doing God service in opposing those who differ with them theologically; but we certainly think they would honor God more by cultivating christian charity.

We are an advocate of the greatest freedom of thought consistent with an earnest, vital christianity. We believe in freedom that steps far outside of creeds, and that shakes off the iron chains of church-anity. Dr. Dodds truthfully remarks: "Had not some master spirit dared to freely speak and write their thoughts, then these professed friends of truth and knowledge, who now oppose every theory that may appear new or strange, would have been destitute of that knowledge which they have obtained from books, the product of other men's thoughts; and not daring to think for themselves, they would have forever remained in mental darkness."

The publication which it has become our duty to examine, entitled "Adventism Considered and its Errors Exposed," is plainly a work either of willful misrepresentation, or of ignorance on the part of the author. To be charitable, we hope the latter may be true.

The work is so contrary to the Scriptures in theology, and so unfair in its representation of a class of people who hold views radically differing from his own, that we have waited for other and abler pens to place the matter in its true light, and thus give the public an opportunity to see both sides. With none but the feelings of christian love for all who may differ from the thoughts which we shall advance, we sincerely ask a candid, honest consideration of the Scripture arguments we shall advance. We want truth. It makes no difference under under what banner it may be found; truth is the satisfying portion for which we seek. But what is truth? may be asked. "Thy word is truth," is the apostolic answer, and in this investigation we shall ask you to search diligently God's word; and my prayer is that the Spirit of truth may lead you into all truth.

The principal theme before us for discussion is future punishment. We first propose to examine Scripturally the theology—the ground-work of the author, and by finding this wholly unsound, both philosophically and scripturally, we shall be able to easily answer his objections and criticisms brought against Adventism (so-called).

II.—"Is there no future punishment?"

It has been truly said: "He that will not reason is a bigot; he that cannot reason is a fool; he that reasons fearlessly is [illegible]."

Mr. Post makes quite an effort to show that Adventists do not believe in future punishment; but any one at all acquainted with what they do believe, will readily see the fallacy of this position, and will very clearly see his main object is to excite prejudice in the minds of those who are not posted. But he will not succeed largely. He says:—"It is asserted that God is love, that IT so entirely governs his conduct toward man, as not to admit the idea of FUTURE PUNISHMENT, and therefore the doctrine is not valid."

This is a gross misrepresentation of their views as a people. They truly believe that "God is love," but they also believe that he is a God of JUSTICE;—that his love is so great that he "gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life" (John 3: 16); that "the wages of sin is DEATH," but the gift of God is eternal life."—Rom. 6: 23. While they believe in future punishment, they believe the NATURE of that punishment is consistent with both the love and justice of God. Mr. Post intimates in one place that Adventists "do not admit the idea of future punishment," but in another place he makes a quotation which entirely overthrows his whole claim.

Matt. 24: 46, is the strongest text adduced to favor the endless existence of the lost in torment. It reads: "And these shall go away into everlasting punishment; but the righteous into life eternal." This passage teaches simply two things. (1.) It teaches plainly the doctrine of future punishment, which we firmly believe. (2.) It teaches that future punishment is everlasting—unending; but not a word does it say in regard to the NATURE of that punishment. But why did not Christ say something here about the nature of the punishment? We answer, because he had explained that point plainly at other times. It is all assumption on the part of those who claim that this passage teaches the eternal misery of the lost. Albert Barnes says: "The word used here is the same in the original as that used to express the eternal life of the righteous." That proves that the punishment is of the same duration as the reward of the righteous, but does not by any means prove the nature of that punishment. We will not claim for this passage a limited meaning. If this passage implies any thing in regard to the nature of the punishment, it must imply something very opposite from endless misery, for the same term when applied to the righteous proves their eternal freedom from death, and death is the very opposite of life.

But let us put another passage beside the one we have quoted, and see if we do not obtain additional light. 2 Thess. 1: 7-9. "The Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven with his mighty angels, in flaming fire, taking vengeance on them that know not God, and obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ; who shall be PUNISHED WITH EVERLASTING DESTRUCTION, from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power." This passage not only shows the duration of the punishment, but also plainly shows the NATURE of that punishment, which is DESTRUCTION; and this is in harmony with the whole Scriptures. It will not avail our opponents by saying that the word "from" means a separation from God. According to their theory, that God is everywhere present, it makes such a condition impossible. God is the SOURCE from whence this destruction comes. That this is the true sense, may easily be seen from numerous passages (see Acts 3: 19; Rev. 20: 9; 2 Kings 1: 10, 12, 14, etc.) Macknight translates the passage thus: "These wicked men, being raised from the dead, shall suffer punishment, even everlasting destruction, by fire issuing from the presence of the Lord." That suffering may be attendant upon the execution of the penalty, we do not deny; but suffering is no part of the penalty for sin. "The wages of sin is DEATH"—not eternal life in misery. We will now make a comparison of the two views of future punishment.

III.—THE MODERN THEOLOGICAL VIEW OF THE CONDITION OF THE LOST.

The popular theory regarding future punishment is that all the unrighteous, who are capable of distinguishing between good and evil, the moment they quit the mortal strand, are hurled into a burning hell, where they suffer excruciating pain and torment to all eternity. At the judgment, they are brought forth from their deplorable place to again be judged, and be remanded back to the blackness of eternal despair. The celebrated Robert Pollock very plainly presents this doctrine. We quote him because his views are considered orthodox by the most eminent of the popular school of divines. He draws a picture of an imaginary transit from earth to heaven. The etherial traveler passes a fearful and unknown abode of creatures, whom he took to be of heavenly make originally. Ascending up on steady wings, he reaches the sphere of the celestials, all anxiety to understand the history of this dreadful locality which he had passed, and commences the inquiry thus:—

"Eternal Justice, sons of God, tell me, if ye can tell,
What then I saw, what then I heard? Wide was the place,
And deep as wide, and ruinous as deep;
Beneath I saw a lake of burning fire, with tempest tossed
Perpetually; and still the waves of fiery darkness 'gainst
The rocks of dark damnation broke, and music made
Of melancholy sort; and overhead, and all around,
Wind warred with wind, storm howled to storm, and lightning
Forked lightning crossed; and thunder answered thunder,
Muttering sounds of sullen wrath; and as far as sight could
Pierce, or down descend in caves of hopeless depth,
[illegible] I saw most miserable
Beings walk, burning continually, yet unconsumed;
Forever wasting, yet enduring still; dying perpetually,
Yet never dead; [illegible]
[illegible]
And ever vainly seek, for utter death. And to their Everlasting anguish, still the thunders from above
Responding spoke these words, which through all the Caverns of perdition forlornly echoing, fell on every Ear, "Ye knew your duty, but ye did it not."

This is not an exaggerated picture, but is the faith of a majority of Christendom, and which is but a duplicate of heathen mythology. Comments and criticisms upon the absurdities of this system of future punishment will be found in its appropriate place in this review.

IV.—THE SCRIPTURAL VIEW OF THE NATURE OF FUTURE PUNISHMENT.

We have already made some remarks on this point, so that the reader has got an idea of the nature of our argument. As to an inexhaustible mine of wealth we go to the Scriptures. Whatever we may find to be God's plan, we may rest assured of its perfect execution. He will never turn aside from his purpose, for his magnificent plan has for its foundation justice, mercy, love and truth.

"Firm as a rock thy truth must stand,
When rolling years shall cease to move."

As an introductory to this subject, we will state that the whole argument for the endless torment of the wicked rests upon the assumption that they are naturally immortal. We say this is assumption, for it is without foundation in the Scriptures. The fact that the terms immortal and immortality, when applied to man, are never applied to him in this life, but to the righteous in the world to come, proves the mortality of the human race; therefore God holds out immortality as an object to seek after, by patient continuance in well doing, to be awarded to those who overcome, at the resurrection of the dead.

John, as the forerunner of Christ, thus speaks of him: "Whose fan is in his hand, and he will thoroughly purge his floor, and gather his wheat into his garner, but he will burn up the chaff with unquenchable fire."—Matt. 3: 12. This is a positive passage. The wicked amid the intense fires of Gehenna are described as the most combustible material—chaff; and thence the work of complete consumption will be speedily accomplished; for the process of consumption cannot be arrested, as the fires are unquenchable. The fires cannot be extinguished, but will "consume the chaff" (the wicked), and will "leave them neither root nor branch."—Mal. 4: 1. No metaphysical reasoning can deprive this passage of the plain import that the wicked in the gehenna fire lose their existence; they cease to exist as beings, and the divine statement that they "become ashes," fully corroborates this. It is a complete loss of life. The very idea conveyed by the word "consumed" requires that the thing to which it is applied shall decrease, and its own inherent existence grow less and less, and which must continue, unless the consuming process is arrested. But Inspiration compares them to "chaff," "stubble," "tares," "withered branches," etc., and declares that the consuming process shall not be arrested, but that they shall be "consumed." This passage alone proves that the theory of the inherent immortality of the wicked is false, and if there was not another passage in the Bible on the subject, this alone shows the nature of future punishment, which is the eternal loss of existence; and unquenchable fire is the agent to accomplish the purpose of Deity.

"The term "eternal fire" if anything strengthens the position we have taken, that the fire into which the wicked will be cast after the judgment will consume them. An instance of the use of this term is in relation to the destruction of the cities of the plain, upon which God rained fire and brimstone, and utterly destroyed, or consumed, both them and their inhabitants. The apostle Jude speaks of the inhabitants of "Sodom and Gomorrah, and the cities round about them, in like manner giving themselves over to fornication and going after strange flesh, are set forth for an example, suffering the vengeance of eternal fire."—Jude 7. Here we have the strongest language that can probably be adduced by our opponent to prove the duration of the fires of hell; but if it can be ascertained that this fire, according to the nature of circumstances, cannot be endless, then such an idea cannot be proved by any language contained in the Scriptures. What are the facts in relation to those fires, which consumed those cities? They have long since expired, and not a trace of them remains. The spot is marked by the Dead Sea, which to-day stands a monument of God's vengeance. Now mark the point. This destruction is not said to be the effect of the vengeance of eternal fire, but the utter consumption of those cities by fire and brimstone, and is set forth for an example to all who should afterwards live ungodly. Therefore from God himself we learn the nature of future punishment; that as surely as those cities were destroyed and their inhabitants punished, so surely will the wicked not go unpunished; that as surely as the instrument used by the heaven-sent angels, under the supervision of God, was fire and brimstone, so surely will the angelic executioners of Jehovah's vengeance employ eternal fire and brimstone in the coming day of his wrath; and as that fire did actually consume those cities and their devoted inhabitants, reducing them to ashes; so certainly will the fires of gehenna consume those who are cast into it. As the fires with which those inhabitants were consumed did cease to burn, so will the fires [illegible] when they have been utterly "consumed." Therefore the wicked cease to live, cease to exist as beings; are annihilated in the sense that they return to the elements from whence they were taken. Then will the divine decree be accomplished, "Of dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return." They deserve death, for they would not believe on the Lord Jesus that [illegible] Salvation is free. Accept him, believe on him, humble yourself before him, and you will [illegible] in the world to come. [illegible]

Our space will not permit me to address [illegible] mass of scriptures that stand like an iron pillar to sustain the position we have taken. We subscribe a few of the many passages bearing on this subject. Ps. 37: 10,—"For yet a little while and the wicked shall not be; yea, thou shalt diligently consider his place, and it shall not be." Ps. 37: 20, 35; Deut. 15: 19; Ps. 7: 11, 12; Matt. 4: 16; John 5: 24; 8: 51; Rom. 5: 21; 6: 23; 7: 5, 10, 13; 8: 6; 2 Cor. 2: 16; 7: 10; Heb. 2: 15; James 1: 15; 2 Pet. 3: 12; Job 31: 3, 23; 21: 30; Isa. 1: 28; Matt. 7: 13; Rom. 9: 22; 1 Thess. 5: 3; 2 Thess. 1: 9; 1 Tim. 6: 9; 2 Pet. 3: 1-16; Job 20: 3-7; Ps. 68: 2; Isa. 41: 11; Job. 6: 18; John 10: 28; Rom. 2: 12; 2 Pet. 3: 9; 2: 12.

If this is not evidence enough to convince any man, then we must think he would not believe though one rose from the dead. The evidence on this point is nowhere near being exhausted. We shall, in our next article, further show that our opponent's position, as well as being scripturally wrong, is also philosophically false. We will also examine the objections and criticisms against Adventism.

ENDLESS SUFFERINGS NOT THE DOCTRINE OF SCRIPTURE.

By Thomas Davis, M. A., Incumbent of Roundhay, Yorkshire.

"Enter ye in at the strait gate: for wide is the gate, and broad is the way, that leadeth to destruction, and many there be which go in thereat: because strait is the gate, and narrow is the way, which leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it."—Matt. 7: 13, 14.

Although, as stated in the previous discourse, the very essence of religion is love to God; although love cannot be yielded simply in obedience to a command; although it is undeniable that it can only be exercised towards one who is seen to be lovely—there are not a few persons who seem to feel that there can be no danger whatever of exaggerating the strictness or severity of the Almighty. All the danger, in their view, lies on the side of overstating his mercy. From such persons I am constrained to differ greatly. Kindness is the key to the human heart. There are few among the race of men who cannot be touched by the influence of love. The great difficulty is to persuade men that God really does love them; that he feels a paternal interest in them; that all which concerns them concerns him; that he willeth not that any should perish; that he will pardon them the instant they repent and turn to him in sincerity of heart; and that to open a way for their salvation, compatible with the principles of his government, he in very deed and truth gave up his own dear Son to live on this earth in human form, and after much and varied suffering to die amidst scorn and contempt upon a cross. In fewer words, our main difficulty is, not to persuade men that God will punish the wicked according to the measure of their sinfulness, but to inspire them with a living faith in this most amazing of all truths: that "God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life." Some amongst you will hardly give credit to it; but this I am persuaded is a fact, that, leaving all punishment out of account, it would come this day like a flood of light upon many souls in this church, could they simply believe that God loves them—tenderly, divinely loves them; that they occupy, so to speak, a place in his heart; that they are not lost and out of sight amidst the innumerable creatures of his hands; but that his eye is ever on them; and that no loving earthly father ever so welcomed a prodigal to his home, as God, the great Father, would welcome them, if they would truly turn to him.

Doubtless, we must speak of punishment; we must tell men plainly, as Scripture does, that God will judge every man according to his works; for God is a Ruler as well as a Father. We must warn them that indignation and wrath, tribulation and anguish, await all impenitent transgressors; and, if we do not exceed the truth, denouncing everlasting misery, eternal woe, unending despair, of which the Bible says nothing, if we except two or three passages which the Old Testament sufficiently explains (and to which next Sunday I shall ask your attention,) I say that if we warn wisely, and do not misstate what is written in Scripture, men, for the most part, will readily believe us; for conscience tells them, and they cannot deny it, that they do deserve heavy punishment. But, I repeat, our more difficult task is to convince them after all God will remit such punishment, if they repent and believe the gospel. It seems too amazing to be true, that still there is an open heaven before them, and that they, even they, may, if they will, dwell in it forever.

Still, whether believed or not, we must proclaim the good tidings: and there is little hope —I grant that there is some, but there is little hope—of those who are not thus won to godliness. For the sake of sinners who do need terror, and, indeed, of the good who occasionally need it, we must declare that the Lord God is to the wicked "a consuming fire;" not an eternally tormenting, but a consuming or destroying fire. Yet our delight must be, and our chief dependence, to set forth the truth that "God is love;" and that the very warnings of his wrath are, rightly [illegible] think of, and, still more, that not a few of them can eat, drink, sleep, and be merry—all this is to me a proof that with the lips the doctrine is admitted, but in the depths of the soul it is rejected. Nay, let me speak out my whole heart. I believe that in countless cases flesh and blood could not sustain the clear, firm, undoubting conviction that the alternative before us is everlasting happiness in heaven, or everlasting misery in hell.

Of those who have had most faith in it, some have been oppressed and appalled, and some, dreading the temptations of the world, and taught by mistaken priests, have shut themselves out from all commerce with mankind; they have fled away from the sweet influences and kindly ordered discipline of home, to live where the heart withers, and nothing that is most lovely can flourish.

Hence I return to our subject; one of the most practical of all subjects, if true religion be love, and to love God we must know him. "This is life eternal, that they might know thee, the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom thou hast sent;" and no pains that we can take can be too great to ascertain what God really is, and how he will deal with the children of men.

Those who are not sensible of this will, of course, feel little interest in any explanation of our text. I hope, however, better things.

Perhaps it is a subject well suited for today,* in which we are reminded of the duty of self-denial. For be assured that there are men to whom to eat, to drink, to sleep temperately is but a small matter compared with uttering at the impulse of conscience that which they know and painfully feel may greatly offend those whom they would gladly please, and whose approval and kindly regards they value and desire to enjoy.

But we must not forget that he who hath put his hand to the plough and looketh back is not fit for the kingdom of God. Natural feelings, worldly interests, all must be sacrificed to truth and duty. Truth and duty have often required this; and probably they will to the end of time.

Putting together all the passages which teach, either expressly or constructively, that the end of sinners is absolute destruction, the number, it is believed, may be counted by hundreds. Sometimes the word used is, as in the text, "destruction" itself; and destruction, we say, cannot mean endless preservation in misery. Sometimes it is "death;" and death, we say, cannot mean eternal life in suffering. Sometimes it is being "burnt up like chaff;" and being burnt up like chaff, we contend, cannot mean being kept unconsumed, like the bush of old, in the flames. Sometimes it is "being devoured" (as in the Scripture, "Judgment and fiery indignation shall devour them;") and being devoured, we assert, cannot rightly be thought to signify being kept whole and living to undergo suffering forever. So of several other expressions, such as "to perish," "to be slain," "to be killed," "to lose life," "to be consumed," "to reap corruption," "to be blotted out," "to be rooted up," "to be cut off," "to be cut down," "to be dashed in pieces," "to be lost," "to be ground to powder," "to be cut asunder," "to be cast away," "to have the house broken up," "to be torn in pieces," "to be put away as dross," "to melt away," "not to abide forever," "to be as nothing."

Many of these are doubtless figurative phrases; but if they do not indicate finality, no language would suffice to do so. Add to all this the remarkable fact, that Satan is represented as a "murderer from the beginning;" not one who keeps eternally alive to torment; and also as the "destroyer" ("Apollyon;") not one who preserves forever in misery. Jesus, on the other hand, is called "our life," as opposed to Satan the murderer. In the Syriac, which is the oldest copy of the New Testament, he is styled the "Life-giver," a very significant and instructive title. Then he is also called our "Savior," as opposed to Satan in his character of "destroyer;" and similar remarks might be made regarding some other titles of our Lord. In fact the doctrine for which I am contenning especially exalts the Redeemer of men. We are not immortal independently of him, and indebted to him that we are immortal in happiness, instead of being immortal in woe; but for immortality itself, in other words, for eternal life, our only right trust is Jesus Christ. In the fullest sense that you can give to the declaration, he is our life. We derive from him spiritual life. And by spiritual life I mean life through his indwelling Spirit; holy, happy, eternal life; not holiness alone, nor happiness alone, nor simply holiness and happiness combined, but with this, life itself; never ending vital existence.

Those who differ from us give to the term life a forced and unnatural meaning. To borrow the language of Dr. Whately, "Life as applied to the condition of the righteous, is usually understood to mean happy life. And that theirs will be a happy life, we are indeed plainly taught; but I do not think we are anywhere taught that the word 'life' does of itself necessarily imply happiness. If so, indeed, it would be a mere tautology to speak of a 'happy life,' and a contradiction to speak of a 'miserable life,' which we know is not the case according to the usage of any language. In all ages and countries 'life' and the words answering to it in other languages have always been applied in ordinary discourse to a wretched life no less properly than to a happy one. Life, therefore, in the received sense of the word would apply equally to the condition of [illegible] supposing these to be destined to continue forever [illegible] the words life and immortality never are applied in Scripture."†

I ask your attention to this fact. Search the Bible from beginning to end, and nowhere will you find sinners addressed as immortal beings. I do not mean as beings who survive the grave, but as absolutely immortal, or endowed with eternal life. Common as it is to do so in sermons, they are never warned in Scripture as they value their immortal souls to shun sin; never warned there as they value their immortal souls to repent and believe in Jesus Christ.—Bible Repository.

KNOW AND OBEY.

"Who shall be punished with everlasting destruction."—2 Thess. 1: 9.

How many advocates and defenders of the doctrine of the destruction of the wicked quote this text, who in reality see only four words in it and the connection. Those four words are, "punished with everlasting destruction." But there are two other words to which I would like to call attention. They are to be found in the verse preceding the clause we have noticed. The words are know and obey. Reader, did you ever consider those words in their full import? Let you and I ask ourselves, Do we know God and obey the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ? It is of great consequence that we should know whether we are in this class or not. Jesus says, If ye had known me, ye should have known my Father also." Do we know Christ? Have we made his acquaintance? If we have, we must love him, for he is the One altogether lovely. If we do not love him, it is proof that we do not know him.

The Holy Spirit has tried to make us acquainted with him. This is his office, to lead us to Christ. How often he has brought to our minds the invitations of Christ. How often he has made us feel that Christ war, as it were, knocking at our door, wishing to come in, that we might know him; that we might sup with him and he with us; and we have (I tremble to say it) silenced the voice of the Spirit. We have refused to become acquainted with God through Christ. Fellow creature, it is a terrible truth, that you and I have the power delivered to us to resist the Holy Spirit; yes, to quench it. Are we doing so? O friend, we hear his voice to-day. Now I will obey the command, "Harden not your heart." Will you with me? Let us imitate no longer those whose carcases fell in the wilderness long ago, nor those who are likened to them by the martyr Stephen. Let us bow ous stiff necks to Christ. If we humble ourselves he will exalt us in due time. Let us fall on that stone, even though it break our uncircumcised hearts; he will heal our poor hearts, and fill us with peace and joy, and put his law in us. My heart says, if I stay away from my Redeemer, if I withhold from him my heart and love, I ought to "be punished with everlasting destruction." How is it with you, friend?

Do we obey the gospel? Have we repented? This is one of the requirements of the gospel. Have we a penitent spirit? "Let the wicked forsake his way, and the unrighteous man his thoughts, and let him return unto the Lord." Have we done so? Are we "striving against sin"? Have we "crucified the flesh, with its affections and lusts"? Are we "careful to maintain good works"? Are we doing "good to all men as we have opportunity"? Do we pray ever, occasionally, or without ceasing? Do we seek the kingdom of God and his righteousness, believing the promise connected with it? or do we love the world and the things thereof?

Do we exhort one another, or when we meet do we talk of every thing else but religion? Do we use hospitality? Do we add to our faith virtue, etc.? If we are living in a state of indifference to any or all of these requirements, can we be said to obey the gospel? Jesus says, "He that heareth my words and doeth them, shall be likened unto a man who builded his house upon a rock"; and he that heareth his words and doeth them not, is likened to the man who built his house on the sand. You know the rest. Is it safe to tempt God by presuming on his mercy longer? O, no. By the grace of God we will do so no longer. We will deny ourselves, take up our cross daily, and follow that blessed One who is the author of eternal salvation to all that obey him. The Lord will help us.

DO YOU NEED A FRIEND?

Bro. Grant:—I have just been reading a little tract entitled "Christ's Intercession;" and it is so good, I copy a part of it and send it to you for publication in the Crisis.

F. H. C.

"Does any reader of this tract need a friend? In such a world as this, how many hearts there are that ought to respond to that appeal. How many there are who feel, "I am alone!" How many have found one idol after another broken, one staff after another failing, one fountain after another dried, as they have traveled through the wilderness of this world. If there is one who wants a friend, let that one behold at the right hand of God an unfailing friend, the Lord Jesus Christ. Let that one repose his aching head upon the bosom of that unfailing friend, Jesus Christ, the Lord. There is One, living at God's right hand, of matchless tenderness. There is One, who never dies. There is One who never fails, never disappoints, never forsakes, never changes his mind, never breaks off friendship. (Think of this! never breaks off friendship.) [illegible] the Lord Jesus [illegible] friend [illegible] this fallen world ever need be friendless, while the Lord Jesus Christ lives to intercede at the right hand of God. [illegible] do so. But we ought not to stop short there.

We ought to remember that he not only died and went to the grave, but that he ROSE AGAIN, and is alive. We ought to remember, that he is now sitting on the right hand of God, to do a work as real, as true, as important to us as the work which he did when he shed his blood. Christ lives, and is not dead. He lives as truly as any one of ourselves. He sees us, hears us, knows us, and is acting as a priest in heaven on behalf of his believing people. The thought of his being alive ought to have as great and important place in our minds as the thought of his death upon the cross.

Reader, let us rejoice that Christ died for us, but let us not forget to also rejoice that he intercedes for us before his Father's face. Above all, let us never rest until we know and feel that we ourselves are among those for whom he intercedes."

I trust it will not be out of place here to add a quotation from Acts 1: 11. "This same Jesus, which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven."

Webster, Mass. F. H. Chamberlain.

DID CHRIST DIE FOR ALL MEN?

Answer, Yes. Proof, Heb. 2: 9:—"But we see Jesus, who was made a little lower than the angels for the suffering of death, crowned with glory and honor; that he by the grace of God should taste death for every man." Was man's condition changed by the death of Christ? Yes, most certainly. What was this change? Answer: from a state of condemnation to a state of reconciliation to God; or, in other words, from a state of helplessness to a state of power of choice. Proof, 2 Cor. 5: 19:—"To wit, that God was in Christ, reconciling the world unto himself; not imputing their trespasses unto them; and hath committed unto us the word of reconciliation." Again, Heb. 1: 3:—"Who being the brightness of his glory, and the express image of his person, and upholding all things by the word of his power, when he had by himself purged our sins, sat down on the right hand of the majesty on high."

Can a man die when his sins are purged, or separated, or cleansed? Answer: Yes. The christian can die, and does die, after his sins are washed away. Under what penalty? The one pronounced against Adam's race. Proof, 1 Cor. 15: 21:—"For since by man came death, by man came also the resurrection of the dead. For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive." So sinners can die under the penalty pronounced on Adam's race, notwithstanding they have been reconciled to God by the death of his Son from the condemnation by Adam's transgression. More yet. I. Damman.

"VAIN PHILOSOPHY."

[We would like much to have the Methodist papers, all over the land, republish the following sensible article from the pen of the venerable Dr. Bown, in 1844, then Editor of the Christian Advocate of this city. It was a response to a correspondent.]—Herald of Life.

We have deeply felt the importance of the subjects to which our correspondent refers: "The relations of the spiritual to the material world, and the disposition made of the soul on its separation from the body." We have consulted philosophy and philosophers in regard to these subjects with no success. Philosophy, applied to spiritual things, constitutes what is called natural theology, and from natural theology is derived what is called natural religion. Now natural theology must be derived from natural phenomena; that is, from the works of creation, as they are exhibited to our senses, and from the providential government and superintendence manifested in these works. Both in antiquity and modern times men of the greatest ability and most patient industry have inquired of the phenomena of nature and providence, and have ended in nothing but vain speculations in respect to spiritual things. Their theories are vain imaginations, unsupported by proof which carries conviction to the judgment, or satisfaction to the longings of human nature after sure and certain hope in respect to the future.

At the very threshold of the temple of knowledge, the philosophers of both ancient and modern times have met with an insurmountable obstacle to their progress. They could not proceed a single step without answering the inquiry, Has man an immaterial spirit in him,—something distinct from, and capable of existing independently of matter? They found the opinion everywhere prevalent that he had; but how did it originate? Tradition had handed down the belief from the earliest ages, but mixed up with the most puerile conceits and absurd superstitions. Could it stand the test of philosophical inquiry? One thing was perceived at the outset. The question as to the existence of spirit could not be subjected to ordinary philosophical tests. Philosophy examined matter, its qualities and laws, as it was presented to the senses; but spirit was neither tangible nor visible—was not cognizant of any sense. How then could its existence be demonstrated? If any attempt to demonstrate the existence of spirit by the operations of mind, the argument was met by the objection that no one was so well and accurately acquainted with the powers of which material organization was capable as to be assured that no peculiarity of organization was competent to perform functions attributed to the mind. [illegible]

But if philosophy [illegible] could not assure us of a future state of existence.

AND SECOND ADVENT MESSENGER.
Boston, Wednesday, Nov. 25, 1868.

☞ Take Notice!
All subscriptions for the Crisis are payable IN ADVANCE, at the rate of $2.50 a year.

☞ Please Remember!
All remittances to this office, in the form of drafts, bank-checks and postal money-orders, should be made payable to the BUSINESS AGENT, GEO. T. ADAMS.

☞ Money Orders.
Our correspondents should remember that if they send money orders in a letter which contains the name of the sender, and the name of the person to whom the order is payable, there is NO SECURITY for their money. Any person may draw the amount named in the order, if these names are given.
Nothing is it safe to send us your names in advance. Somebody may open the letter, get the names, and then wait till the order comes, and get that too.
Send on the order, not writing a word; make it payable to GEO. T. ADAMS, directing it to MILES GRANT, or World's Crisis. Then, in two or three days, write in the usual way, stating that you have sent the order, and what you wish done with the money obtained on the same, and it will be entirely safe. In the second communication be sure to give us YOUR NAME AND POST OFFICE ADDRESS. AG'T.

THANKSGIVING PRAYER-MEETING.

It is proposed to have a general Thanksgiving prayer-meeting, at the Lowell Street Chapel, cor. of Causeway and Lowell streets, Boston, Thursday evening, Nov. 26th, commencing at 7½ o'clock. We hope to see a large gathering of the friends of Jesus. Come, let us meet and give him thanks and praise for our rich blessings, consecrate all we have to his service, and make speedy preparation to meet him at his coming.

Let every one who comes try to persuade some new one to come with him. If possible, get an unconverted person, or a backslider to come. Please go into the closet and pray before starting for the meeting.

EAST DOUGLAS.

We had the pleasure of spending Sabbath, Nov. 15th, with the church in East Douglas, Mass. It was a rich feast of fat things that we enjoyed. There are some shining lights in that church, whose influence is blessed. The audiences were large and attentive. Several inspiring testimonies followed the sermons. At noon, five happy souls were buried with Christ in baptism. Their obedience brought them great peace and joy.

At the close of the evening discourse, a man of gray hairs arose and said: "A hit bird flutters. I have used tobacco some forty years, and have indulged occasionally in a glass of liquor; but I now renounce them for ever." Others came to the same conclusion, and were blessed by the Lord.

At the close of the public service, we went to Bro. E. Hough's house for the communion, where we enjoyed, as we did nearly a year since, one of the best communion seasons we ever experienced. About thirty gathered around the table, and all spoke of the love of Jesus before we parted. It was a Pentecostal season, and a heart-searching time. Husband confessed faults to his wife, wife to the husband, and parent to children. Tears flowed freely, and our cups were all filled with rejoicing. There was no cold, dead formality on the occasion, but a living reality to the scene. A vacant chair was at the head of the table, but we felt a strong hope of soon seeing Jesus seated at "the marriage supper of the Lamb," with all the host of the redeemed ones.

NATIONAL CHRISTIAN CONVENTION.

It was our privilege to attend the National Christian Convention, held in the Reformed Church, corner of Fifth Avenue and 29th Street, New York. We were much pleased with the unsectarian spirit of the convention, and the earnest, practical element manifested in many of its members. It was a move in the right direction. The following extract from the report of the doings the second day of the convention, as given in the New York Tribune Nov. 19th, will give the reader a fair idea of the character of the proceedings:—

The second day's session of the National Christian Convention was commenced in the Reformed Church on the corner of Fifth avenue and Twenty-ninth street, at ten o'clock yesterday morning. After the morning prayer meeting was concluded, Dr. Crosby took the chair, and the Convention proceeded to business. The first in order was the report of the committee on the topics discussed during the previous day. The committee reported in substance as follows on the first topic: "How can the christian activities of the entire membership of any particular church be best organized and developed?" In general by conformity to the principles and practices which distinguish the constitutions of the early christian churches. In particular by recognition of the doctrine of universal preacherhood of believers; of the duty of christians of all classes and conditions to engage in direct effort for the evangelization of the world in accordance with the prophecy which found fulfillment in the days of Pentecost: "It shall come to pass in the last days that I will pour out my spirit on all flesh; and your sons and your daughters shall prophesy, and your young men shall see visions, and your old men shall dream dreams. And on my servants, and on my handmaidens will I pour out my spirit, and they shall prophesy." First, by recognition of the indispensable necessity of the influences of the Holy Spirit to labor successfully in the great work agreeably to the words of the blessed Lord to his disciples; "But ye shall receive power, after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you, and ye shall be witnesses to me in Jerusalem, and Judea, and Samaria, and to the ends of the earth." 2d, By the recognition of a regular radiation of effort and influence from the centre of christian light and heats to the centre of darkness and death. Each going out into the sphere of kingship next to that of friendship, and next to that of neighborship, or, in the words just quoted, "first to Jerusalem, than to Judea," etc. 3d. By recognition of the importance of such definition and distribution of christian work as will suggest and secure employment to every character of capacity. So that Timoty the younger, as well as Paul the aged; so that the prophetess Anna, and Simeon the just; so that the servant, one Sevius, as well as Philemon, his master, may disburden his soul of the responsibility of a dying world.

The committee on the topic, "How can the people in rural districts be reached by gospel influences," reported as follows: In general, by such a revival of apostolic zeal as will call out the entire energies of the church: 1st. More particularly in remembering that people in the rural districts are much like people everywhere else. They are to be reached by churches, Sunday-schools, christian associations, Bible readers, tract distributors, district prayer-meetings, and, in a word, by all the agencies of aggressive christianity. 2d. More especially by churches made so attractive in the sanctuaries, services, and societies as to constrain the attendance of all people religiously inclined. 3d. By an efficient day school in every neighborhood where even two or three believers can be found to assist it, and who through Bible instruction, and christian literature shall bring the great salvation directly to the pupils, and through them, indirectly, to their friends and relatives. And, 4th, by the volunteer itinerant efforts of christian associations for the evangelization of communities utterly destitute of living witnesses for Jesus. The third topic, "How and by whom can open air services be most profitably held?" was thus reported on. 1st. As the Lord Jesus has called his people especially to the work of witness-bearing, all who are truly the subjects of Divine grace may profitably testify to others of their experience, and especially to those of the same occupation or position in life with themselves. "Come ye that fear the Lord and hear what he hath done for my soul." 2d. For large audiences, and especially in cities and towns, the best talent as to both gifts and graces should be secured, as our Lord has taught in his educating by a long discipline of the fishermen he called to his service, and in his subsidizing to his work the logic and learning of the great apostle of the Gentiles. 3d. Such services should be modeled after those of Christ and his disciples. They should be composed almost exclusively of preaching—short and simple, affectionate and inviting—to which may be added lively, familiar singing. 4th. Such services, moreover, should be so conducted as not to interfere with the stated services of the sanctuary in the community where they are held. The first topic yesterday, "Woman's Work in the Church," was opened by the Rev. George Washburn of Constantinople. The theory that woman has no place in the church, said he, deprives America of about two-thirds of its christian force. If any one doubts this, let him ask the Christian Commission. Ask the soldiers and the thousands of the poor and despised people who have been raised up to man and womanhood by our mothers and sisters. Wherever there is a work that woman can do better than man, that work is hers. The work of a deaconess is one of much importance, whether the office exists or not. Such an office existed in the apostolic church, which letters still extant plainly show. The work of a deaconess in the primitive church is to care for the poor and the orphans, and to bring to bear the influence of a woman's love. Another department of woman's work is among the inmates of jails and hospitals. It is a shame that in this age the offices belonging to woman are not restored to her. There should be fifty women in the field where now there is one.

In the East the greatest obstacle to the missionary efforts are the women. They weave influences about the hearts of the young, so that it is almost impossible to uproot the seed planted in early life. These women cannot be reached by men, and only the work of a christian woman can have the desired effect. We need trained women in the church; we want a place where they can be educated for this field. The churches should open recruiting offices for them. A home should also be established, so that when our sisters return from foreign or domestic mission work they may find a place of welcome and of rest. Suppose we open in this city a "House" under the care of the church. Here all women who desire to enlist in the service of the Lord can be trained and educated. Mr. McDougall highly eulogized the labors of the nuns in Canada. He said the strength of the Catholic church lay in the sisterhood which it had established. We should adopt all the advantages of the female department of the Catholic church, leaving out the disadvantages. Mr. Trask of Massachusetts, said that notwithstanding the words of Paul, the orthodox folks were beginning to believe that a woman had a right to breathe, sing, and even speak in church. If they are not to talk they should not be allowed to sing. Mr. Canfield of Syracuse, gave up his time for the discussion of this question by other gentlemen. The Rev. Mr. Blair of New York, said he was glad to see that so many were in favor of adopting this element of strength. The great want of Protestantism is the aid of woman. We are weak because we have rejected the noblest of mankind from the work which Christ gave us to do. Mr. Dyer of New York said that he belonged to a church where the prayers of women had formerly been ignored, but at last, when they were recognized, the church attained a mighty power,—one of the greatest powers in this land. Dr. Cora spoke of female Bible classes in England, and the wonderful work they are doing. The speaker called particular attention to the effectiveness of females at prayer-meetings.

The second topic: "Why do so many churches fail to reach the poor?" was opened by the Rev. Cyrus D. Foss. He said those agencies aimed directly at the poor were ineffectual on account of the prejudices which the poor themselves entertained against such societies. The principal reason why the poor are not reached is because the churches have no particular desire to touch this class. The most they do is to plant their batteries inside of stone edifices, whence they expect to shoot the grace of God into the poor districts of the city. When a poor man goes to church he receives no welcome, and is only met at the door by the usher who informs him that the pews are to let. The poor cannot be reached until they are received as brothers and sisters. The style of preaching which we have now-a-days does much to drive away these people. The gospel was made for promiscuous assemblages and not for a few of the select. When the great priest came the priesthood ended, and to-day we are all ministers in the Lord Jesus Christ. The great want of the church is impulse and fewer doctrines and methods. Many churches are an offense to God and a joy to the devil. We want to get at the central ideas of christianity, and not run after details. We want more heroic workers. Dr. Van Doren of New Jersey said that Christ, the greatest of all preachers, was heard by the poor gladly. Yet theologians study Him who said, "When thou makest a feast, call in the poor, the maimed, and the blind." Mr. Adams, of Connecticut, denounced the renting of pews. He knew very well that churches must be supported, but let him pay who is able, and let the rich pay the burdens of the poor. He closed by hoping that the time would come when pew rent would be abolished.

Dr. Waterbury of Brooklyn said, the keynote of Christianity was free religion, and he hoped the Free Church system would finally prevail. Christ set an example, which the Christians of this age would do well to follow. As ministers of the gospel, we must go out ourselves and preach to the poor. One good sermon is enough on a Sabbath, and the rest of the day should be devoted to those who cannot go to church. Dr. Crosby said that in our anxiety for the poor, we must not forget the rich; the rich of New York are worse heathens than the poor. We want to get at the rich. The only way to solve this question is, have the pew rents reduced to a small sum. In my church, said he, all come, both the rich and the poor. Dr. Blair said amen to what Dr. Crosby advocated. Dr. Trumble of the Chapel of the Ascension, N. Y., said that the idea of building chapels and calling them mission chapels was a disgrace. We want to blot out this stigma which has been put on Christ's churches. The line of demarcation should be obliterated, and the poor made to feel that they are brothers and sisters in Christ Jesus. Mr. Reynolds of Kingston heartily indorsed the sentiments just uttered. Mr. Moody of Chicago said many churches do not want the poor, they are too expensive; you can't get the poor to take the gospel in pewter spoons while the rich are fed from golden ladles. Christians should not receive men as paupers. We can reach the poor if we do as Christ did. Mr. Banvard of New Jersey, Mr. Parish of Pittsburgh, and Mr. Parvin of Philadelphia followed. The report of the business was then read, and the topic resumed. Mr. Broadman of Rome urged that the poor be visited more frequently. He did not believe in the plan of making broad distinctions between the rich and the poor. They should treat each other as belonging to one common brotherhood. Mr. Harkness of Jersey City reviewed the plan formerly practiced by the Church of England in relation to the question under discussion. Mr. McMillan said the women made our churches theatres of fashion, thus driving the common people away from the house of God. The speaker alluded to a certain rich lady in Cincinnati, who wore only one dress during the winter. Mr. Petruvett of this State said the great want of the people is sympathy. The Convention then took a recess uneil 2 o'clock. . . .

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The next topic—"By what means can we reach those who do not come to our churches?" was opened by D. L. Moody, Esq., who said: We have divided our city (Chicago) into fifty-two districts, and, by the help of the churches, we visit every family once in thirty days. Instead of using tracts, we circulate papers. We have more Sunday school scholars, in proportion to the size of the city, than can be found in any other place in the Union. Our churches, many of them, are too fine. You can never reach the masses with operatic singing. Three or four unconverted people singing in a gallery are enough to make any one keep away from church. A man who knows how to preach can draw a crowd, and where there is a crowd poor folks will come. When Mr. Spurgeon preached at Agricultural Hall in London, men came barefooted to hear him preach. In Chicago we send out men with cheap handbills, inviting the people to come to church. I had rather preach to those who hang around billiard saloons, said he, than to hardened sinners who have heard theology for fifteen or twenty years. Let William E. Dodge go down to Cooper Institute and preach, and the people will be sure to come. Mr. Moody gave a touching and interesting description of the meetings held in the drinking saloons of Chicago, during the recital of which many were affected to tears. Mr. McDougall, of Montreal, spoke of the great influence wielded by the press. This power should be more sought after by the church. Religious newspapers will soon get a large circulation if they are only good for any thing. The people are tired of dry weekly religious reading. We want live Christian daily papers. Mr. Hastings, of Boston, said the only way to catch fish was to go where the fish are. The press is too little appreciated by the church. The trouble is, we are waiting for the pastors, the women, or some one beside ourselves. We want good business common sense at work for God. Mr. House of Cincinnati followed with interesting facts on this subject. Opera singing and poor preaching are doing much to keep people from church. Christianity means business, and it should be conducted in a business manner. Out of the thirty-nine Protestant churches in Cincinnaii, but very few of them are filled on Sunday. Mr. Grant, of Boston, said: We want men baptized with the spirit of God and with the work in which they are engaged. Open air meetings will do much to extend the gospel among those who never go to church. People feel at home on common grounds, as our parks, commons, etc. When we go to work in earnest, infidels will begin to tremble. Fashionable religion and written sermons will not make people christians. Mr. Morse said the gospel was made for promiscuous assemblages. We must therefore make our congregations promiscuous, and not aristocratic and exclusive. Mr. Trumbull, of Boston, said any fool could sell goods to those who were anxious to buy. The question is, can we give the gospel to those who don't want it? The way to do this is to make it acceptable to everybody. Mr. Blair, of New York, believed in carrying the gospel into the business of the week. He advocated a religious newspaper that would compare with the best secular sheets, and sell for two cents a copy. A resolution was here passed congratulating the convention that steps had been taken to organize a liberal Christian Convention in London.

The next topic, "What is the work of Young Men's Christian Associations?" was opened by Mr. Cephas Brainard. He said that it seemed almost impossible to present any thing new on this subject. The gathering and training of young men for christian work was of great importance. A young man can do more toward converting his companion than an older person. A band of well-trained young men can do almost any thing they may undertake, if they go to work in the right spirit. The training up of the young is a noble work, and more noble when it is for a christian purpose. Mr. Moody said that the great work of the Young Men's Christian Association was to sweep off from the face of the earth sectarianism, [Great and loud applause, and cries of "Amen."] What we want to do is, to fuse, to gather, not freeze. When I first joined the church, said he, I thought all the religion in the world was in my church or denomination, but now I begin to find out that there is some christianity even in the Presbyterian church.

EARTHQUAKES AND TIDAL WAVES.

Daily papers are being loaded with accounts and opinions concerning earthquakes and tidal waves in various parts of the world. The tidal waves are becoming truly alarming. This looks some like fulfilling the prophecy of Jesus concerning the roaring of the sea and waves. This is named as one of the last signs to be seen before the coming of Christ. This, with other things, is to cause men's hearts to fail "them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth." Luke 21: 25-26.

The following articles from different papers will give some idea of the feeling that is being awakened in the hearts of careless men:

The following is an account of a tidal wave in New Zealand:—

"A letter from New Zealand, Aug. 28th, speaks of an extraordinary tidal wave at several points. At Wellington the tide kept rising and falling two or three times an hour, from low water to extreme high water. It caused immense excitement in the town. Every one expected a great earthquake; and when a shock came, the people darted out of their houses like rabbits out of their burrows. At Oamaru the tide rose and fell fifteen feet in fifteen minutes; and at Lyttleton it receded suddenly to six feet below extreme low water level, and then came in with such a rush that it tore all the shipping away from the wharves, and caused tremendous confusion and considerable damage. The tidal wave fell on the island of Hawaii, destroying a number of houses, and causing much loss of property."

Says the New York Herald of Nov. 19th, 1868:—

"We have the intelligence, by way of San Francisco, that destructive storms of wind and rain, had swept over Northwestern Mexico, doing immense damage and causing great suffering and loss of life; that the city of Alamos, in the State of Sonora, with a population of seven thousand, had been destroyed by floods and whirlwinds; that Loreto and some smaller towns in the peninsula of Lower California were entirely demolished; that whole herds of cattle had been swept away, and groves of oranges and other crops totally ruined, and that the Yaqui and Mayo rivers in Sonora were swollen to a height of forty feet—rivers which, during their long dry summer, in their course to the California Gulf, are absorbed in the intervening desert sands. In other parts of Mexico, meantime, the inhabitants of towns and villages had been frightened from their houses by earthquakes, thus showing the elements under the earth, as well as the elements above it to be in dreadful commotion.

In both hemispheres, but especially upon this Continent and among the adjacent islands, these visitations of tornadoes, floods and earthquakes, with their tidal waves and fissures emitting gas, fire, smoke steam and boiling water, are becoming alarmingly frequent. Last autumn they had them all in high revelry at St. Thomas and the neighboring islands, and such terrific hurricanes of rattling hail along the southern frontier of Texas as were never known there before back to the first occupation of the country by the Spaniards. This year the line of operations of these celestial and subterranean phenomena, appears to be (with the recurrence of the meteors) along the Pacific side of the Continent, and may be traced to the late disastrous convulsions of the dry land and the sea along the western coast of South America. Violent storms follow in the track of earthquakes, and such storms doubtless result from the derangement of the atmospheric equilibrium by the disturbing gases and electrical forces arising from these subterranean outbreaks.

It is so remarkable, at all events, that this year, as last year, we have an eruption of Vesuvious simultaneously with these shakings of the earth in the West Indian latitudes, and near the time of the earth's collision with that strange nebulous formation in the heavens which gives us those wonderful meteoric showers—it is so remarkable we say, that all these things should come together, that we cannot resist the conclusion that these meteors. earthquakes and volcanoes, have much to do with the unparalleled hurricanes and inundations all over the world of these latter days."

Says the New York Sun of Nov. 19th:

"THE UNIVERSAL EARTHQUAKES.—When the world was coming to an end a little while ago, the Rev. Dr. CUMMING, desirous of economizing his income, and expecting every day that there would be something too much of fire upon his hearthstone without troubling him to find fuel for it, used to buy his coal by the bushel. We hear that he had slightly increased the quantity as his daily allowance, and was beginning to lose faith somewhat in his own prophecies, when the weary old earth, enraged at his apostasy, began to tumble about its inner fires, and shake its ancient shore and seas, and the mushroom cities of men, to bring him back to reason and pious prognostication. If this is not the reason why the earth is so mad just now, we don't know what is. Such a universal pother in the bowels of the planet was never known before in human experience. Wicked men of science have, it is true, been profane enough to say that the primeval hell beneath earth's ribs was fast cooling, when it wasn't; and this may have led to the late demonstrations, although one is sorry to attribute vindictive feeling to so august, wise, and venerable a body astronomic.

Certain it is that a great rebellion has taken place for some cause or other, and that the earth has been shaken from centre to circumference. So far from there being any decrease of vigor in the igneous energies, they are more active than ever. Etna and Vesuvious, and Hecla, that pretty toy of the Icelanders, are henceforth to be set down as among the prettiest fireworks of the creation, and have been completely shorn of what used to be considered their grandeur and sublimity, by the tremendous rock-rendings, and oceanic fires which have made the Pacific islands so famous and so terrible. All over the globe, as by a general conspiracy and premeditated simultaneous movement, there has been a regular Walpurgis hellabaloo, and fiery dance of destruction and death. Vesuvious and the Tahitian volcanoes roared to each other at the same moment in voices of primeval thunder, across the immeasurable brine, which writhed with a new and unheard of agony, wrecking great ships in its wrath, and swallowing their ruins like so many grains of sand.

This dreadful outburst is hardly over before a mighty wave of earthquake sweeps over New Zealand, and at the same time the volcanoes of Peru were most active, and San Francisco shook through all her bones at the rumbling, tumbling, shaking, and roaring of the earthquakes in California. Even those countries which for ages have grown corn and wine upon the surface of extinct volcanoes have been subjected to the terrors of this fiery visitation. Nature seems to have renewed her youth and vigor, and reannounces herself upon this large scale to justify her pretensions. The wise old grandfathers of Ireland and England laughed at the idea of an earthquake troubling such old and respectable countries as those, and insisted upon it, that the more rabid and furious energies of the earth had long since expended their strength in those parts, and left the laboring peasant to toil in peace on twelve shillings a week, and pay house-rent and fuel, and keep his average family of five children. And yet Ireland came in for its shake that made Paddy tremble in his bogs, and pray lustily for whiskey to keep his courage up. Then England came in its share of the hubbub, and the cathedral town of Worcester, and the beautiful watering place of Leamington tottered and reeled like a drunken man. What is the meaning of it all? Perhaps some Copperhead Convention has had a sitting "between decks," and the Cyclops have kicked them out."

Says the New York Tribune of Nov. 12th, 1868:—

EARTHQUAKES AND TIDAL WAVES.—Later and fuller details are every day increasing the interest with which scientific observers regard the recent earthquakes and tidal disturbances, and confirming our first impression that these convulsions of nature would prove to be among the most remarkable and extensive of which there is any written record. They have been experienced at short intervals during the last three months, and there is no reason to suppose that we have yet felt the last of them. the latest having been reported only a week ago. The shocks have followed no particular direction, and been confined to no particular quarter of the earth. Beginning in the middle of the Pacific Ocean, they seem to have affected all its eastern shores and southern and western islands, and then, skipping the whole breadth of the North American Continent and the Atlantic Ocean to have broken out in Ireland. We may yet learn that the remoter countries of Asia have likewise been shaken. The first of this great series of convulsions, so far as our intelligence now extends, occured in the Sandwich Islands, eleven days before the terrible disaster in Peru. Violent shocks were felt in different parts of the groups from the 3d to the 9th of August, accompanied by heavy storms of thunder and lightning. The western coast of South America was devastated by awful earthquakes from the 13th to the 16th of August, and at the same time the shocks were felt again in the Sandwich Islands, though less severely than before. On the 17th there were shocks in New Zealand. About the middle of September shocks were felt by vessels in the Eastern Pacific. On or about the 1st of October they were experienced again in the Sandwich Islands. In California they were felt from the 21st to the 25th, with considerable severity, and were repeated slightly up to the 6th of November. On the 23d of October we hear of earthquakes in Ireland. On the 4th of November there was one at Vancouver Island.

The tidal waves which have accompanied all the most serious of these convulsions are peculiarly interesting subjects of study. It has been remarked, as an evidence of the rapidity with which they travel, that they reached the California coast as early as the morning of the 14th of August, having moved over a distance of 4,000 miles in a little more than 14 hours; but it now appears that their speed is even greater than this, for they were felt in the Sandwich Islands, nearly an equal distance, on the evening of the 13th, only four hours after the earthquake in Peru, lasting through the night and obtaining their greatest force the next morning, almost simultaneously with their appearance on the opposite California coast. This would give them a velocity of about a thousand miles an hour. They seem, however, not to have driven in more than one direction at a time. The Sandwich Islands lie north-west of the place of disturbance in Peru. Toward the west and southwest, we have no record of tidal phenomena earlier than the 15th of August, when the waters of Japan and Australia were simultaneously agitated in the same manner. These waves may have been either propagated by fresh convulsions on the South American coast, or revulsions from the disturbances at the Sandwich Islands. We have no sufficient data as yet for determining in what direction the waves traveled, or what was their size or their velocity. We trust that the attention of competent observers may have been drawn to these points; for by means of them it would help to determine the depth of the Pacific Ocean, the size and velocity of waves bearing, as is well known, a fixed ratio to the depth of the water.

A great tidal wave fell upon Hawaii, one of the Sandwich Islands, on the 15th of October, destroying a great many houses and other property. Accepting the generally received theory that these phenomena are caused by earthquakes, we may expect intelligence of another great calamity about that date in some country bordering on the Pacific from which we have yet received no advices. But the disturbances may have arisen in the bed of the ocean, in which case, unless a stray sailing vessel chanced to be within reach of it, no account of the phenomena may ever reach us.

INFORMATION.—Bro. George Needham, the "Irish Evangelist," wishes us to say that we were mistaken in saying he was employed in Chicago by the Young Men's Christian Association. We are glad he can say—

"I have never from my first preaching tour been employed by any church, or society, by any man, or committee, to preach the gospel. I am simply an Evangelist, preaching as the Lord opens doors, and looking to him only for food and raiment."

SARATOGA.—Bro. J. L. Knapp, Saratoga, Nov. 7th, writes:—"The tent-meeting was a good success. The seed sown will bring forth fruit. Some told me that the weather and business kept them away from the tent; but they would not again."

We learn that Bro. Knapp has baptized three since the tent-meeting, which was closed Sept. 20th. He says the people are anxious to hear more.

"ADVENT KEEPSAKE,"

Is the title of a very pretty book of 136 pp., size of a small Testament, containing a text for each day of the year, on the subjects of Christ's second coming, the resurrection of the dead, the new earth, promises for the time of trouble, etc., compiled by a believer. It is a pretty present for a friend.

BOSTON.

The church in this city, worshiping at Lowell street, some two years ago was made up of members from South Boston, Chelsea, Charlestown, and other adjoining towns. Now they have churches in all the above named places, and still Lowell Street church is as full as ever. Another company from the hive are gathering at Hyde Park, and soon we may expect another in Cambridge. Thus we see the Lord has been blowing, or breathing upon his vineyard in Boston, and spices are flowing out. Bro. Adams and Piper, with others, are untiring in their efforts to keep this gospel of the kingdom before the people, and their labor is not in vain. The Sabbath school is flourishing in the right direction. We have spent two Sabbaths with them, and have been filled with their company. They worship in simplicity, and are unreserved in their fellowship.

Yesterday morning's prayer meeting was one of the best I ever attended. That old-fashioned shouting Methodist, Blackman, whom I find in Albany, Southbridge, and every where in meetings, could hardly recover from weeping. God bless him and his, and all the loved ones in Boston, and may their prayers be heard in heaven for us as we return to the vine of the Lord in Rochester. We rejoice to learn from our Elders there that it is still bringing forth much fruit.

Brethren, pray for us. H. PRATT.

THE MOST DIRECT ARGUMENT.

While laboring with the Mission tent, we hung up a canvass in the rear of the desk, on which is painted in large type,—"For the hour is coming, in the which all that are in the graves shall come forth; they that have done good, unto the resurrection of life; and they that have done evil, unto the resurrection of damnation." John 5: 28, 29.

This text is seen and read by every one who visits the tent. Many read and then ponder and re-read it; their eyes are often upon it; after service, some will come and ask where this text is to be found, and are informed.

Thus the facts that there are two classes of mankind, with a great contrast in the destiny of each, and that each must have a resurrection from death to get their reward, are constantly before the Universalist, Spiritualist, and all who deny the resurrection of the dead, either all, or a part. This is one direct argument. There is another.

In several instances persons have come to talk with me about this text, and to cavil, and to evade its clear statements concerning them "that have done evil," and have closed up with, "Well, I don't believe it." This is direct, and more honest than all their other efforts.

INTRODUCTION.

Having become acquainted with Bro. A. A. Phelps, of this city, and feeling it to be a christian duty to introduce him as a worthy servant of Jesus Christ to the churches of God in New England, I cheerfully embrace this opportunity to do so. Bro. P. has labored among the Methodists as an efficient and highly-esteemed preacher of the gospel for the last fifteen years. He has received from his brethren of that church frequent testimonials of respect, by promotion to places of trust and confidence. He, having an honest heart, and esteeming the truth above place and name in society, when he heard the gospel of the kingdom preached, embraced it joyfully, although he expected that the confession of it would deprive him of friends, place, reputation, and financial interests, all of which were dear to him.

His confession of faith in the great judgment message, and associated truths, was made with the spirit of decision and firmness, and also of meekness which becometh a true christian. His confession is made upon the housetop to his former brethren, and those who are waiting for Jesus' return alike; also to Pharisee and infidel, and all the world, as opportunity is afforded. The bold stand which Bro. P. has taken on the side of truth has resulted in his withdrawal from his former church relations, and to accept invitations to labor with the churches who are waiting for God's Son from heaven. The sacrificing change which he made necessarily resulted in a great trial to him. His former friends have forsaken him; nearly all, excepting Jesus. His prospects of support are all gone, excepting God's promise. He is pecuniarily involved, but has succeeded in procuring a safe backer. He is thrust out into a new field of labor, with new tools put into his hands, which makes it seem as if he was doing the work of an apprentice; but the Master Workman has promised to give him skill and understanding, and to accept the work of an honest effort at his hands. Therefore Bro. P.'s trial is ending in victory, for his experience is like that of a bird relieved from its cage; or a king from the perils of a bloody war. He has a family to support, and is a little involved in debt. There is an opening for him to go into business, which would give him support and the privilege of preaching occasionally; but I think that he has talents which should yield greater interest to the Lord than can be obtained in that way.

Take the muzzle off from him, and let him eat while treading out the corn. The brethren at Springfield, Mass., have given Bro. P. a kind invitation to labor through the month of January with them, and he has consented to go to S. and commence his labors the second Sabbath in January, and could remain in New England two or three months if duty required it. I propose (and this is all voluntary on my part) that he remain in N. E. long enough to visit a number of our churches, which I think would result in a mutual benefit to him and to the brethren. I can heartily recommend him as worthy of confidence, both as a preacher and christian. Brethren who wish to write to him can do so by addressing Eld. A. A. Phelps, Rochester, N. Y.

SHALL MAINE HAVE ANOTHER TENT?

We do not now inquire whether there is room enough to work two tents, means enough to buy a second, or faithful and competent men enough in Maine to manage two tents; we are fully convinced that there is room, means, and that there are the men. We are also fully satisfied that the demand for energetic, faithful and increased effort to save men by publishing the gospel of the grace of God, the good news of his coming kingdom, and the signs of Christ's immediate appearing, were never so great as now. A pure gospel, a living, active, working, self-denying, godly church will acomplish much through the indwelling of the Holy Spirit, in bringing men to Christ. But it must be done now, for Jesus is soon coming, and then this work ceases. Men are fast dying and their probation ending. Experience has shown that mission tents call out thousands to hear the truths they do not hear elsewhere; and from living men, who are not too proud to take the stand, the stump, or the way-side, to preach Christ; and not too indolent to go into the high-ways, and hedges after sinners, and erect tents, seat them, and toil in doing it, if by all means they may save some. This work convinces many that some are in earnest, and believe what they preach, and live and work without hire.

The larger denominations are becoming more and more worldly, proud, lazy and blind. Thousands are famishing for lack of the word of life. Many realize the cause of the famine, who have not spoken out. Thank God some are not afraid to. Let us act well our part in the Lord's vineyard. Now is the time to canvass for another tent during this winter, that it may be made and ready for service, if spring opens. If it does not, we shall not need the money expended for it. If it does, we shall need the tent to publish salvation in. Shall we have it? I can say to you that one of the Lord's stewards will furnish ONE HUNDRED DOLLARS towards it, and he is not as able as hundreds of you. He earned it with his own hands. Who will wake up fully and WORK for Christ much more and TALK about it less. Do not think there is not talent in Maine to conduct two tents. There is enough to conduct six. During the time I have been with the tent the past season, I have had the help of Brn. Baker, York, Damman, Lombard, H. S. Mitchell, Hall, S. K. Partridge, Haggett, Goud, Sevey, and others. There are others capable of working a tent, and they should be ready to sacrifice the comforts of home and society to work in tents.

AGAIN AT HOME.

Our western tour has been a very pleasant one. Having had good health, and no loss or accident befallen us, we first of all render thanks to our Father in heaven for his watchful care over us. We made the acquaintance of many new and excellent friends of Christ and his cause. Their kindness and generosity to us will be held in grateful remembrance. That part of the West which we visited, we very much like; and if it shall so please our heavenly Father, we may yet find a home somewhere in the West. It may be in Illinois, or Wisconsin,—not now decided.

During our journey, I preached in the States of New York, Michigan, Illinois, Iowa, and Wisconsin. Our meetings were holden in Methodist, Baptist, Congregationalist, Presbyterian, and Universalist meeting-houses; in Advent chapels; in halls, tents, school-houses, etc.; and in all I gave fifty-one discourses, besides holding a discussion one evening with a seventh-day brother upon the Sabbath question.

In all our labors few were found to oppose; but many rejoiced to hear the truth, and we hope to see some souls saved in the kingdom of God, as the result of our labors in the West. May we understand our duty, and go where and when the Lord will be pleased to have us. Those tearful eyes and warm-hearted requests from both saint and sinner for us to come and labor with them in various parts of the West, are strikingly vivid before my mind. May the Lord send them more holy and faithful ministers of Christ, who will "show themselves approved unto God," workmen "that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth." Such preachers are greatly needed in these days, when there are so many selfish, lying, corrupt, and hypocritical men, who pretend to be the ministers of Christ; when indeed they are only wolves in sheep's clothing. May the will of God soon "be done in earth as it is in heaven." T. M. PREBLE.

STAR OF HOPE MISSION.

BRO. GRANT:—I suppose by this time the readers of the Crisis, who are interested in the Star-of-Hope Mission, would like to hear how the work is prospering in our midst. The Lord is with us truly; and although there has not been as many conversions for the past two or three weeks as at some time, yet the work seems to be among the church. The Lord is fitting up the church for great usefulness. There seems to be a hungering and thirsting after righteousness, an earnest desire for holiness of heart and purity of life. The Lord is hearing and answering the prayers of his people, and is pouring out his Spirit. Praise his holy name.

There are a good many sick in our midst. We have calls about every day to visit and pray with some one, and we have had the pleasure of seeing some of late find the Savior in the sick room; and some, too, who have led very wicked lives. One case I will mention; that of a young woman, who sent last summer for some of us to visit her. She was sick in consumption, and knowing in all probability that she could not live long, desired to find the Savior before she passed away. I, with another sister, went to see her. She was indeed a sad picture, all wasted away with disease. Death, as it were, was staring her in the face, and she was without any hope in Christ. She seemed to be desirous to become a christian, but there was not all that earnestness manifested that we could have desired to see. We talked to her, tried to point out the way; prayed and sung with her, and left her some tracts. I visited her several times afterwards, and each time she seemed to be less in earnest. There seemed to be something she was not willing to give up. Finally, I took another sister with me to see her. She was in another room, and would not see us; so I did not think it worth while to go again; and did not hear anything from her until a few weeks since, when she sent again for us to come and see her. This time she seemed deeply convicted, confessed her sins, renounced her former evil companions, and made up her mind to lead a different life. She confessed she had been living with a man who was not her husband for four years, her lawful husband being yet alive. She made up her mind to give him up, and sent for his wife, and begged her forgiveness, and other matters which were wrong. She settled up as far as lay in her power, and began in earnest to seek her soul's salvation. She plead earnestly for some time, but did not seem to get the blessing she desired.

Finally, one evening, a dear sister and myself went to see her again. We tried to point out the way to approach the Lord by faith, prayed and sung, and before we left the house had the pleasure of seeing her rejoice in the God of her salvation; and since that time she has not been troubled with doubts and fears. Now, when we visit her, we find her with a countenance all radiant with the love of God; and, weak and feeble as she is, she most always has some good hymn to sing to us, and tells us how good the Lord is to her.

Now these things really compensate and encourage us, as we go from place to place, from garret to cellar, among the vilest of the vile, when we can see one soul changed from nature's darkness into the marvelous light of the gospel. I say it richly repays us for all our toil and hard labor in this work. Pray for us, that the Lord may go with us, clothe us with his mighty power, that we may be the humble instruments in his hands of leading many to Christ. Your sister in the highways and hedges, M. E. DOW.

P. S.—Bro. Grant: Please state in connection with this piece that the receipts for the past month will be acknowledged the first of December. M. E. D.

—The mourner over a wasted life may yet be shown that he was fruitful of good when he knew it not. From him there may be going sweet influences like the fragrance of flowers.

Correspondence.

From Bro. J. Bray.

Bro. Grant:—Will you be so good as to put the enclosed letter in the Crisis? My reason for wishing this is, it came to me with no other geographical definitions than what you see,—"Groveland"; and I see by reference to my P. O. Directory that this may be in Michigan, Illinois, Indiana, New York, or Massachusetts. I wish, on behalf of our little church, to thank the good sister, and also to say that we do intend, D. V., to build the Lord a house in this city of fashionable vices and false doctrines. We also purpose to get it up, if possible, ready for plastering by the spring; and we wish to obtain all monies subscribed as soon as we can, to pay for our lot. According to this sister's suggestion, which we think is a good one, Will you not favor us with a small space for a time, to be headed—"List of contributions to aid in building a small house of worship in the city of Washington"? We have raised among ourselves about $200. But what is this? Also a widow sends us $1; then this good sister $15. Are there not several who both could and cheerfully would give us help, if the matter was actually brought to their notice by somebody they know? Will not Bro. Grant please speak a word for us? We feel sure it would do us much good. Nobody knows us, or who we are, whence we are, or what we do.

On account of differences in doctrines from popular churches of this city, we expect little or no help from them; yet "the Lord of hosts is with us, and the God of Jacob is our refuge." We have been in existence one year come next month (Dec.); and "what has God wrought?" Our enemies prophesied that we should all "be dead, buried and forgotten in six months," but blessed be God we never were more alive and in better heart than now. We also are growing stronger daily. We commenced with nothing—nothing but God. We formed our church in April with eighteen members, and now we number twenty-seven. We are to baptize another, an excellent lady, on next Lord's day, D. V. O for about $2000! Will not the friends of a pure gospel aid us? Every thing sent to John Bray, Washington, D. C., will be duly accredited in the Crisis. May God bless us, and prosper much more abundantly our humble but honest efforts to honor his word and glorify his name. We seek not ours. We do all we can, and give all we can to build up this beloved little interest. Besides which, we have our families to support, as well as others. Our personal means also are very limited, considering that we live in this "city of magnificent prices." Dear Bro., HELP US IF YOU POSSIBLY CAN. We are yours in love and truth, J. Bray.

Washington, D. C., Nov. 18th, 1868.

P. S.—Will the sister please send me another letter, to inform me of her full address, so I can write to her? J. B.

"Dear Bro. Bray:—Some of us in this vicinity, who are interested in the cause of the Coming One, have read with a great deal of interest your proposition to build a house of worship, where the good news of the coming kingdom could be proclaimed in the Capital of our nation; and have been hoping that a column for subscriptions would be opened in the Crisis; but as that is not done, we will pledge to send you $15.00 if you decide to build. I will enclose a stamp for you to write what your prospects are, and if you want the money, and when. I think there are many who would give a dollar, more or less, if there was an earnest, systematic effort made.

Yours in Christ, M. A. H."

From Bro. A. B. Swanesburg.

Bro. Grant:—It is something over a year since Bro. Hook was here and organized a church in this place; and since that time I have been doing all that I could for the advancement of the cause of my blessed Master. The good Lord has blessed my efforts thus far. Sinners are coming to Jesus, and backsliders are returning to Father's house. The little church in this place is holding fast and advancing. By the help of the Lord, we mean to keep moving forward. I baptized three in this place, who were added to the church. The light of the blessed gospel of the kingdom is shining, and truth is being disseminated through the land. I have been laboring in the midst of opposition and persecution, but by the help of our great, illustrious Leader, we have taken strong hold of the enemy, and since last April have baptized sixteen happy believers, who are now rejoicing in the blessed hope of Jesus' soon coming, to give life and immortality to his children. There are more to go forward soon. The Lord is with us. All praise be to his dear name. I expect to form a church there soon, by adopting the article called "Our Covenant," published in the Crisis, Sept. 16th, which I think is worthy of the notice of every sect, and lover of God and his word.

I have just returned home with health somewhat impaired. I have visited the little church at Charlesville, at Pubmico Beach, that has just been organized at that place by Bro. I. A. Purdy. Bro. P. is a faithful laborer, although his health is failing fast. He needs the prayers of all God's children. This church is increasing in numbers every week. Quite a number were added to the church while I was there. Two were baptized, and two more will go forward the Sabbath following. The Lord is at work with the people in this place. Glory to God that the light of the glorious gospel of the kingdom is shining upon Nova Scotia. I ask the prayers of all God's dear children, that I may be sustained by his all-sufficient grace, until Jesus comes in glory. Yours looking for redemption soon,

A. B. Swanesburg.

Shelburne, N. S., Oct. 6th, 1868.

From Bro. J. B. Wadsworth.

Bro. Grant:—I come to the Crisis again, but nothing good to bring, unless rioting suits the ear of a Christian. That seems to be the topic of this place. These are "perilous times." Why should not Christians rejoice, when there are indications of speedy redemption. The red horse is taking peace from the earth. The country is in great rage politically. Soon that awful cry will be heard from "the kings of the earth, and the great men, and the chief captains, and the mighty men," and both bond and free men,—"Mountains and rocks, fall on us, and hide us from the face of him that sitteth on the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb." These are they who are covetous, laying up earthly treasures, giving themselves over unto fornication and going after strange flesh; "raging waves of the sea, foaming out their own shame; wandering stars, to whom is reserved the blackness of darkness for ever."—Behold, the Lord cometh with ten thousands of his saints, to execute judgment upon all; and to convince all that are ungodly among them of all their ungodly deeds which they have ungodly committed, and of all their hard speeches which ungodly sinners have spoken against him. . . . But, beloved, remember ye the words which were spoken before of the apostles of our Lord Jesus Christ; how that they told you there should be mockers in the last time, who should walk after their own ungodly lusts. . . But ye, beloved, building up yourselves on your most holy faith, praying in the Holy Ghost, keep yourselves in the love of God, looking for the mercy of our Lord Jesus Christ unto eternal life."

Mercy unto you, and peace and love be multiplied, though we may live in different houses, and also in different countries, some rich, some poor; still we may be at peace, and love one another. I meet with christians in my walks, who differ with me in regard to points of doctrine; still I love them, for I feel that they live up to the best light they have, building as we are upon our most holy faith. O let us put on the bond of perfection, that universal love; and there is liberty indeed. There is no condemnation if we walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit. Brn. and Srs., is not this love sweet?

I still feel it best to remain here until Jan. 1st, after which time I go to Texas, if the Lord is willing. So if there be any who have a few words of printed messages to give to the sinner, or a line of encouragement to your Bro. in the Lord, delay not in sending it. I do not know of any other place where I shall make another stop. Probably I may have an opening to detain me a week or two. I want to scatter a good many tracts here, if I can get them. They can go out to regions far beyond these, and result in much good. My intention is to go through Texas, round by Arkansas, up to Memphis again. Brn. and Srs., will you remember me at the throne of grace? And remember, too, without faith and holiness we cannot enter through the gates into the city of God. Yours in hope,

New Orleans, La. J. B. Wadsworth.

P. S.—Remember my P. O. box is 1587.

From Bro. A. N. Seymour.

Bro. Grant:—The 23d and 24th of Sept. found me at the Ohio State Fair, held in Toledo. Here I fell in company with Bro. H. A. King, of Nevada. By his request, I accompanied him to Paulding county, where he has been laboring since last spring to good acceptance. The Lord has signally blessed his labors in that region, and a good, healthy church has been raised up, rejoicing in the hope of soon seeing Jesus. They are building a pleasant and commodious house in which to worship the true and living God. It is to be dedicated about Dec. 1st, when we hope to see many precious souls added to this church, such as shall be saved. Bro. King is highly esteemed among the people, as he is a very excellent brother, whose heart is ever in sympathy with truth and righteousness, and who is fully consecrated to the glorious work of saving perishing souls. We had the pleasure of speaking to his congregations five times, and we hope some good seed was sown, that will ere long spring up and bear fruit to the praise and glory of God.

At the close of our meetings, Bro. King, by my request, accompanied me to Montpelier, to fill my regular appointments. He preached to three different congregations, and five times in all. His discourses were good, timely, and instructive, and the many who turned out to hear felt that it was not a lost opportunity. May the Lord abundantly bless the word preached, and bring many souls to Christ as the result of our brother's labors. On Sunday evening, at the close of the meeting, we bade each other good bye, with the blessing of the Lord,—he to return to Paulding, and I to my own dear home, hoping soon to meet where sorrows, trials, and farewells will be known no more forever.

Yours in hope of eternal life when Jesus comes, A. N. Seymour.

Reading, Mich.

From Bro. & Sr. McKinstry.

Dear Brn. and Srs.:—Thinking that you might be desirous of knowing our present situation, and believing that you would sympathize with and pray for us, if you did know, we take this method of informing you that on coming last week to Concord, N. H., where Mother McKinstry resides, we found her so ill as to require our closest attention; and hence have been obliged to withdraw all appointments, and remain here for the present. Mother has been an invalid for ten years, a sufferer from the effects of paralysis, and unable to do any thing for her own support; and hence has been dependent on us, or on the Lord through us. She has not seemed to require our constant attendance until now. We are weary and sad, and can find no consolation except in Christ, or in sadly awakening our "Pilgrim Harp," to sing something of comfort, and blessed be the name of the Lord, he is not unmindful of us. He hears and comforts our tried, waiting hearts. Our appointments are all withdrawn, and we wait here, shut in and dependent on the Lord for means of subsistence. Pray for us. Our P. O. address is Concord, N. H., for the present,

L. C. & M. McKinstry.

PUNSHON ON PREACHING.

Rev. Morley W. Punshon, while presiding at the Canada Wesleyan Conference delivered an address to preachers, in which we find the following excellent suggestions:

Take heed to your preaching. This is, after all, the main thing. If you are no preacher, you are nothing. Let the pulpit be your throne. Who says that the pulpit has become effete? or that it has lost its power? God himself has put the pulpit on the throne. The preacher is not the lecturer, nor the philosopher, nor the critic, but the lifter up of the cross of the Savior. This is your work. O, if you fail here, you miss your way.

If there be any thing in our ministry that does not lead to Christ, it is a strange doctrine; God himself will destroy it; it is a blemish which disfigures the whole; it is but a meteor of the marsh, which may beguile but cannot dissipate the darkness. It suggests the idea of darkness in the blaze of day, like the glare of the city gass light kindled in mockery of the noon. Then preach Christ. You ask me how to preach Christ? In your own style. If you have the imagination of the poet, use it; if you have the eloquence of a Cicero, use it; if you have a quiet style of your own, then be yourself. If you have the polish in the grain, bring it out; don't let the pine grain sneer at the mahogany grain. Don't let us have the class of revival and non-revival brethren. Be lucid as Matthew, if you can, logical as Paul, poetic as Isaiah, tender and melting as John the beloved, and fiery as Ezekiel, only let us feel the power! You need power—power over the conscience. If you speak to the imagination, the poet will beat you; if you speak to the disputer, you will be worsted; but speak to the conscience, and no man can rival you there. You are a Czar of many lands.

Above all be in earnest. Preach wisely; aim at the fifth rib; let there be no affectation; not the bursting of a volcano, but the gentle dawning of the light, that, while it would not wake the slumbering babe, would fill the world with glory.

Aim at success. God's word promises it; "As I live,' saith the Lord, 'my word shall not return void unto me." Trust God. The husbandman patiently waiteth, believeth, for the precious fruit of the earth; so may you. Expect success. You have the power, and you have the promise. May God save us from invoking excuses for want of success, when our barrenness should drive us to our knees! Let us dread, above all things, the curse of an unfaithful ministry. Preach the gospel. Don't fear because of the pride of rank or of wealth; don't be afraid of them, lest you have the guilt of souls on your hands.

Let not the blood of souls be on your skirts. "Deliver me from blood-guiltiness, O God, thou God of my salvation." He who labors for God will get souls. O, that you all may invoke the baptism of the Holy Ghost upon these young brethren. "And let all the people say amen."

For the World's Crisis.

FOLLOW THE LORD.

O that we may learn to trust wholly in the Lord for his direction in all things, and be very careful how we allow ourselves to slide into any form, or practice, outside of the direction of the Holy Spirit of God. In order to be directed by the Spirit of God, we must place ourselves in a position where God can use us to his glory; and the only way to get into that position is to obey the Lord in all of his commandments. Have all of his ministers placed themselves in that position? Do we treat every body just as we would like them to treat us? Do we say anything against any one that we would not like them to say against us? In a word, are we governed by the Spirit of Christ in all we do and say?

My dear brother, can you look back in the past and see anything that you may have said or done that has hurt the feelings of some brother or sister? Can you not remember of saying some hard things about some brother in the ministry, because he preached some things a little different from what you see? If so, was it treating him as you would that he should treat you under like circumstances? O may the good Lord search us out. We must be pure in heart. The word of the Lord is the rule. Do unto others as you would that others should do unto you; then, when we have followed the Lord fully, we shall have placed ourselves in a position where the Lord can use us to his glory.

Dansville, N. Y. D. Cogswell.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

Cable News.

Naples, Nov. 17. The streams of lava ejected by the eruption of Vesuvius have filled and overflowed the Fosse Vetrana and are still following the course of the eruption of 1855. Last night the upper cone discharged columns of ashes, occasionally illuminated by flashes of flame. The spectacle is magnificent and many persons are going to Naples to witness it.

Nov. 19. The eruption of Mount Vesuvius is still very imposing and threatening. All the cones of the volcano emit rumbling sounds and eject large quantities of lava. The lava has set a whole forest of chestnut trees on fire, causing immense devastation. Houses, farms and land are overwhelmed with ruin, and the population of the nearer villages are leaving their houses in great destitution.

A trembling of the earth was felt on the 3d and 6th inst. at Iturbide, fourteen leagues from San Luis Potosi. Many of the inhabitants were frightened and left.

Inundations had caused much damage at San Juan, Bantiala and Tabasco.

DOMESTIC.

St. Louis, Nov. 21. A Salt Lake special to the Democrat says that the hanging of the "roughs" at Bear River city, on the 11th inst., previously reported, created great excitement, and yesterday a mob of some two hundred men burned the Frontier Index office and jail. The citizens armed themselves and fired on the mob, killing ten and wounding others. It was feared that the whole town would be burned, and the women and children are fleeing for safety. Bear River city is eighty miles east of Salt Lake.

San Francisco, Nov. 17. A terrible wind and rain storm raged over the country from Oct. 15th to the 18th, doing immense damage and causing great suffering and loss of life. The City of Alamos, in the State of Sonora, with a population of seven thousand, was destroyed by floods and whirlwinds. Loreto, Lower California, and several other small towns, were entirely demolished. Herds of cattle were swept away, and orange groves and crops were in some instances totally ruined. The Yaqui and Mayo rivers rose forty feet.

The National Christian Convention, which has closed its three days' session in this city, concluded as the result of its deliberation on the question, "How to reach the masses?" that the principal reason why the gospel has not been more universally diffused was the lack of effort on the part of wealthy churches, and influential christians. As a remedy for this shortcoming, it was urged that there be good congregational singing, free churches, better preaching, shorter sermons, more enthusiasm, less show, attention to the poor, education of women for the church and for the missionary field, daily religious newspapers, and first-class religious literature.—Tribune.

An Important Railroad Decision.—An important railroad decision has just been rendered by the Supreme Court of Illinois involving a question of great interest to agriculturists whose lands bound or adjoin any of our railroads. The question arose in several Circuit Courts some years since, and has been litigated with varied fortune, until at last the court of dernier resort has heard and determined it forever. Thus it runs: Farms lying contiguous to railroads, whose corner grounds are kept clear of grass, and whose grain fields or stacks take fire from locomotives can recover damage. But where there is negligence on the part of both railroads and farmers in permitting grass and weeds to grow on the railroad land adjoining the tract, and in the fence corners belonging to the farm, so that fire takes on the farm from the railroad, there can be no recovery. Mutual negligence forbids action for damage.

The opinion of the court in the case of the Ohio and Mississippi Railway Company against Samuel Shanifelt, has just been filed at Mt. Vernon, and decides a number of cases on the same question. The subject has been before the courts for years. The decision bears hardly on our farmers, but it is seemingly founded on principle. H. B. Buxton, Esq., counsel for the road, perceived the point distinctly long ago; pressed it before the courts without success, and was advised by eminent lawyers that he must ultimately fail; he has succeeded. The settlement of so important a question is a palpable service to the running roads, and no less to the farmers who lose.

☞ The number of meteors counted at the Cambridge Observatory on the night of the 13th and 14th inst, by three observers, was 4,641. Great care was taken that the number should not be exaggerated by counting the same meteors several times by different observers, so that the number visible was probably somewhat greater than the number counted.

Appointments.

☞ We would say to our preaching Brethren that it is necessary we should receive their appointments as early as Tuesday Morning, as our paper goes to press about noon; otherwise they will not be inserted till the week following.

Information.

It has come to my knowledge within a few days that there was a cloth tent left at Alton Bay Depot, at campmeeting time, and also a cashmere shawl, found in the Farmington tent, left the year before. The tent was directed to Mr. Piper, Alton Bay Campmeeting, by Niles' Express. The owner can have it by describing the tent and poles, and sending to Mr. David Lawrence, Expressman, Dover, N. H., and paying charges. The shawl can be had by sending to me. Describe. J. G. Smith.

New Durham, N. H., Nov. 18th, 1868.

Notice.

The Second Advent Chapel at Locustville, Hopkinton, R. I., will be dedicated to the worship of God, on Thursday, Nov. 26th, 1868. The meetings are to be protracted over the following Sabbath, and longer if the interest demands. Brethren and preachers from abroad are invited to attend. Come, brethren and sisters, with a mind to work for God, and the salvation of dying men.

For the church, A. Durfee.

Notice.

The next session of the Maine Central Quarterly Conference will be held at the Town House, in Rome, commencing Nov. 26th, at 7 o'clock P. M., and holding over the following Sunday. Brethren and sisters are invited to attend and unite in the worship of the Lord and the work of saving souls.

William A. Knight, Sec.

Advent Chris. Conf. of N. Y. State.

The Quarterly Advent Christian Conference of New York State will meet at Honeoye, Ontario Co., N. Y., Dec. 17th, 1868. Those who attend the conference will stop at Livonia Station, on the New York and Erie R. R., where teams will probably be in attendance to convey them to Honeoye. It is hoped there will be a full attendance.

J. R. Cooper, Secretary.

General Ministerial Conference.

The Western General Ministerial Advent Christian Conference will meet at Buchanan, Mich., Thursday, Nov. 26th (in connection with the Social Conference), as decided by a vote of the General Conference at its last session. This meeting is not to be regarded as a special meeting, but as a continuation of our unfinished meeting at De Kalb; hence, all ministers having a good standing in any of the Western Advent Christian Conferences can take part in our deliberations, as specified in the primary call. Let the watchmen rally. We represent a noble cause. Let us honor it n earnest efforts for its promotion.

Wm. Sheldon, Secretary.

Conference.

The next regular quarterly meeting in Ohio, for the Norwalk and Fairfield districts, will be held at the latter place, in the Advent Chapel, on Saturday, at 1½ o'clock P. M., and Sunday at 10.30 A. M., of Dec. 5th and 6th. A full attendance is desired.

G. W. Stetson, Pastor.

Thanksgiving Meeting.

If the Lord will, there will be a meeting at Carr's Corner, Dexter, Me., Thanksgiving day, Nov. 26th. Brethren and sisters are invited to come and give thanks with us, praying that the blessing of the Lord may attend. O. G. Trundy.

Notice.

The first quarterly meeting with the church at Woodhull, N. Y., will commence Friday evening, Nov. 27th, and continue over the Sunday following. All are invited to attend. J. W. Taylor.

Notice.

Will the person who sent 25 cts. for a copy of "Christian Baptism," dating their order from Williamsport, Ind., please send their name, as the book cannot be sent until it is known who orders it. I. C. Wellcome, Yarmouth, Me.

CHANGE.

Change, with its dread palsying hand,
Its sere and deathly shade, is found
Resting at length upon each good
Reared on a mortal base. Around,
O'er and into our hopes and joys the poison creeps
Ever, and marks them for decay; and we,
Cling with tenacious grasp, while nature weeps
Each passing good, as fleeting as we see.
Come, then, O sorrow doomed, and let us flee,
Ere yet the canker blights, those richer joys,
Existing and pure, and of immortal mould,
In which we lose our taste for earthly toys,
And from each change that springs draw purest gold.

Firm as the Eternal then our joys shall be,
Rock-founded, deeper than the unfathomed depths;
Mid tempests firm, mid earth's last throes shall be
Our bliss supreme, our greatest, highest good,
Safe anchored in the vail, beyond time's wasting flood.

THE KINGDOM OF GOD.

"But when they believed Philip preaching the things concerning the kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ, they were baptized, both men and women."—Acts 8:12.

Now it is necessary for us to know the things concerning the kingdom, and where it will be. In Christ's sermon on the mount, he said, "Blessed are the meek, for they shall inherit the earth."—Matt. 5:5. What did Christ speak only of the meek for, if he was speaking only of this life, and that they were blest? What! blest in a place where there are murderers and robbers committing all kinds of depredations? What kind of a blessing would that be? None at all. If anything, it would be a curse to them. Now let us see if we can find any place where it says the wicked shall be cut off. (See Ps. 37:9, 11, 22, 29.) "For evil doers shall be cut off; but those that wait upon the Lord, they shall inherit the earth." "But the meek shall inherit the earth." Then, at that time, there will be no wicked to disturb the righteous, and then they are blest. "The meek shall inherit the earth, and shall delight themselves in the abundance of peace." That is, when the wicked are destroyed. Then there will be no wicked ones to make war with the righteous. Then the saints can "delight themselves in the abundance of peace"; "for such as be blest of him shall inherit the earth; but they that be cursed of him shall be cut off." Surely this must be in the kingdom of God. "The righteous shall inherit the land, and dwell therein forever." In every one of these passages, it says earth or land, and that the righteous shall inherit it. That shows that the kingdom was not set up on the day of Pentecost, for if it was, the Scripture has failed; for the destruction of the wicked has never taken place.

Again, this gives us no chance for a kingdom in the skies, for it does not once say sky in the passages quoted; but earth and land. In order to have a kingdom, there must be people there. The Bible plainly teaches that "no man hath ascended up to heaven, but the Son of man that came down from heaven."—John 3:13. Now if no one has gone to heaven but the Son, it would be impossible for a kingdom to be there. And if we do not go to heaven, we must remain on the earth and "never be removed," as Solomon says in Prov. 10:30. "But as truly as I live, all the earth shall be filled with the glory of the Lord."—Num. 14:21. Has that ever been fulfilled? Has the glory of the Lord ever filled the whole earth? In all the events that have taken place since the beginning of time, this cannot be found. "Behold, the righteous shall be recompensed in the earth; much more the wicked and the sinner."—Prov. 11:31. If they are recompensed in the earth, this is where their reward will be. Their reward is not an inheritance in a kingdom in the skies, but in the land that was promised to Abraham, Isaac and Jacob.

This promise is unfulfilled to this day. "These all died in faith, not having received the promises, but having seen them afar off; and were persuaded of them, and embraced them, and confessed that they were strangers and pilgrims on the earth."—Heb. 11:13. They must be resurrected, and the land given to them. And "at that time they shall call Jerusalem the throne of the Lord; and all the nations shall be gathered unto it, to the name of the Lord, to Jerusalem; neither shall they walk after the imagination of their evil hearts."—Jer. 3:17. Is not Jerusalem on the earth? Is it in the skies? "In those days the house of Judah shall walk with the house of Israel, and they shall come together out of the land of the north to the land that I have given for an inheritance unto your fathers."—ver. 18. The house of Judah and the house of Israel were at war with each other, and never have to this day walked together in peace.

"Behold I come quickly; hold fast that thou hast, that no man take thy crown. Him that overcometh will I make a pillar in the temple of my God; and he shall go no more out; and I will write upon him the name of my God, which is New Jerusalem, which cometh down out of heaven from my God; and I will write upon him my new name."—Rev. 3:11, 12. Do we have any account of its going up into heaven again? "And I will give unto thee, and to thy seed after thee, the land wherein thou art a stranger, all the land of Canaan, for an everlasting possession; and I will be their God."—Gen. 17:8. Is Abraham now inheriting the land of Canaan? No; but will be resurrected, and the land given to him. God could not mean a land of Canaan in the skies; for he said, "Unto thy seed have I given this land" (Gen. 15:18); not a land above, but this land, "from the river of Egypt unto the great river Euphrates." We all know that these rivers are on the earth.

A kingdom requires land, people to rule over, officers to help rule, a king, territory, capital, and laws by which the people are ruled. If this is all spiritual, then how vain it is for us to seek for a place where there is nothing; for if it is spiritual, it is nothing; but if it is literal, it is something. "And thine house and thy kingdom shall be established forever before thee; thy throne shall be established for ever."—2 Sam. 7:16. If the kingdom is to be established before David, he must see it established. It cannot be established in the skies, for David is not there; "for David is not ascended into the heavens."—Acts 2:34. David must be raised from the dead, before we can expect to inherit the kingdom, for it must be set up before him.

Some say the church is the kingdom. Ekklesia is the Greek word for church, and is not once translated kingdom. For what did Christ teach his disciples to pray, "Our Father who art in heaven, hallowed be thy name; thy kingdom come; thy will be done on earth as it is done in heaven"? Was not this a kingdom to come to them? Were they to fly away to it? "Sojourn in this land, and I will be with thee, and will bless thee; for unto thee, and unto thy seed, I will give all these countries, and I will perform the oath which I sware unto Abraham thy father."—Gen. 26:3. In every place where the inheritance of the saints is spoken of, it says "this land," "earth," or "the promised land." It does not say anything about any other land in the Bible. The only place where it can be found is in some of the orthodox books. Christ says, "I will not drink any more of the fruit of this vine, until that day when I drink it new with you in my Father's kingdom." In order to have wine there must be grape-vines in the kingdom, which could not be if it were spiritual. Would not a literal kingdom be better than a spiritual one? It makes us rejoice to think of receiving immortality and a home on the earth where there is something to comfort us. Let us try and gain the literal kingdom. There we shall be blest for ever.

POLITICS.

The excitement of another political campaign is subsiding, and there is time now to draw a full breath and give expression to a sober thought. The presidential question has been warmly contested, and the result is such that the better portion of the community are highly gratified. At all events it seems to be the "least of two evils." The relations of christians to civil government, and their corresponding duty to vote on every political issue that arises have been variously interpreted. The prevailing sentiment is, that christians ought to vote to create civil governments, and then fight to sustain them. And this has been the general practice of church members for many centuries.

If, however, the privilege of using the ballot imposes the obligation of using the bullet, it is clear to my mind that christians ought to stand aloof from both. Nothing is more certain than that the spirit and precepts of the New Testament are flatly opposed to war. Said Jesus: "My kingdom is not of this world; if my kingdom were of this world, then would my servants fight." Worldly kingdoms have always been sustained by the power of the sword. The ethical philosophy of this perverted world is, "might makes right." Not so with our holy religion. The peaceable principles of the gospel were clearly understood by the primitive church, and for the first three centuries they were faithfully carried out. Christianity and war were regarded as antagonisms. Nor was there any effort to reconcile them, until the spirit of compromise began to diffuse itself through the church of Christ. Worldly emoluments dazzled and blinded the eyes that had formerly viewed only the glory of God, and policy was ruinously substituted for piety. The church ceased to rely alone upon God's omnipotent arm, and went "down to Egypt for help." Her members were no longer a "peculiar people." They adopted the philosophy, conformed to the fashions, indulged in the practices of a guilty and godless world. The conscience was terribly corrupted. The plain precepts of Jesus Christ were disregarded. A religion of retaliation was henceforth promulgated, and the dreadful perversion has been perpetuated along the line of succeeding ages. Thousands of men engage in war without having examined its moral bearings. Many soldiers are perfectly honest in their course, and hence God pities their ignorance and saves them despite their unscriptural practice.

But there are some whose light is too clear on this subject to allow them to engage in warlike exploits. Some of these may possibly feel free to vote, though they would utterly refuse to fight. With others, the connection between the two is so natural and logical, that they conscientiously abstain from both. Nor are such persons to be scouted as fools or fanatics. They "fear God and work righteousness." For myself, I think there is some difference between the existing political parties, but there is so much policy and corruption in both, that I have very little heart to act with either. Indeed, I feel that my dearest affections and interests are associated with that glorious "kingdom to come," from which all caste, cruelty, and corruption will be forever excluded. With such feelings and preferences, I ventured, on the third of November, to put up a third candidate, and vote an independent ticket. Accordingly I deposited at the polls in this city the following:

MY VOTE.

I was once a guilty rebel against the best government in the universe, but I have been fully pardoned. I was also an alien from God and the Commonwealth of Israel, but have been brought nigh by the blood of Jesus, and am now a fellow citizen with the saints. For several years my name has been "registered" in the "Lamb's book of Life." I hereby vote for Jesus Christ to come back to this revolted realm, ascend his majestic throne, overturn the kingdom of darkness, destroy the works of the devil, gather his scattered people, and reign as King of the saints—not for years merely—but forever and ever!

Rochester, N. Y. A. A. PHELPS.

WORDS OF WARNING.

The Alliance and Visitor truly remarks:—"The events of centuries have been crowded into a year. The hand of God should be recognized in these remarkable events."

The Living Age has said: "Old things are about to pass away, and we know not what shall be the new. All faces gather blackness, and men's hearts fail them for fear of what is coming on the earth."

The Christian Luminary says: "Signs are seen in the heavens and on earth, which plainly teach us the fact that the coming of the Son of man draweth nigh." Another journal has stated, "The world is now just about six thousand years old; it is well to be ready for whatever event may occur."

The Christian Review has recorded as follows: "A silent, rapid, irresistible preparation has been making—what will it be? The battle of Armageddon? The Millennium, preceded by the coming of the Son of man in the clouds of heaven? Nothing in the prophecies withholds his coming, that I have seen, if I have read Peter and Daniel and John aright."

Rev. Charles Beecher, referring the present vast "Pneumatic or spiritual movement" to the category of Rev. 16:14, says: "They incur the almost certain stigma of false Christs which should precede his coming."

Prof. George Bush has said: "If we take the ground of good reason, we must believe that the present age is one expressly foretold in prophecy, and that it is just opening upon the crowning consummation of all prophetic declaration."

Dr. Edward Beecher writes: "The point of prophetic chronology at which the world has now arrived is the interval between the sounding of the sixth and seventh trumpets."

Archdeacon Brown, of England, has said, "That he was strongly impressed with the conviction that our lot had fallen under the solemn period emphatically designated by Daniel as 'the time of the end.'"

President Hitchcock, of Amherst, has stated, "In a very short time, far shorter than we imagine, all the scenes of futurity will be to us a thrilling reality!"

Daniel Eddy, of Lowell, has also said:—"Time has grown old; six thousand years encircle its weary brow, and with inconceivable rapidity it rushes on to its eternal sepulchre. The great events connected with the winding up of all things are near, are but a step before us, even 'when the Son of man shall come in his glory, and every eye shall see him'!"

O, all ye lukewarm churches, followers of the world and its fashions, how is it that ye do not discern the "signs of the times," nor take heed to the "sure word of prophecy"? for, truly, you all "shall see him"!

Vain worldling, heedless youth, profane swearer, sensual, groveling pleasure-seekers, you, also, "shall see him"! Proud, haughty man of ambition or of wealth, covetous lovers of this world, heaping up treasures for the last days, you, too, "shall see him"! Vain and giddy triflers, followers of the fashions and frivolities of the day, you, also, "shall see him"! Ye who turn aside from Christ, from truth and duty, from mercy and humanity's calls, you, also, "shall see him"!

Careless, worldly-minded professor, having a form of godliness, turning your back on Christ, and absorbed in earth's pursuits, take heed, for you also "shall see him"! for all betoken, as in the days of Noah and Lot,—in striking fulfillment of prophecy,—the sad condition of a ruined world, and its hastening doom!

Yes, reader, you too "shall see him"! the living, and the righteous dead "shall see him"! the wise and foolish virgins "shall see him"! those who put far away the evil day "shall see him"!—Scribes, Pharisees, hypocrites, "shall see him"! all perverters of God's word "shall see him"! and "all kindreds of the earth shall wail because of him"! "for sudden destruction cometh upon them, and they shall not escape." REPENT! "Behold, I come quickly."—Voice of the Prophets.

NO MATTER WHAT A MAN BELIEVES, IF HE IS ONLY SINCERE.

This maxim, applied to the weighty concerns of religion, is wonderfully adapted to its end. It saves the trouble of investigation, and allows the utmost license with the Bible. If it is unessential what a man believes, why be at the toil of examining for one's self? Surely he who is sincere in the adoption of such a rule of faith, is a fool for spending an hour of his joyous existence in humble inquiry into the revealed will of God. Besides, it helps men when they come to a stopping place where they are pressed with the truths of the Bible. Apply this rule, and all is right. Mistake is impossible; or if committed, is perfectly safe.

It helps too, amazingly, in blotting out from the Sacred Oracles some knotty sentences, that declare unwelcome truth. All a man has to do, is sincerely to believe that he may discard the record of Inspiration, till his mutilated Bible ceases to annoy his conscience.

But let us test this false principle a little. No matter what a man believes, provided he does believe it. One man believes that future punishment is eternal, without end,—another that there is no future punishment for one of God's creatures, and a third, that men will be punished a limited time, without troubling himself with the puzzling questions how long or how much. It is well to know that the maxim above stated, prevails the most among such as are most bitter against the Orthodox. And, pray, what is the height of their offending? What the ground of the amazing difference between themselves and their opponents? Why, merely this; that the Orthordox believe in future punishment, without end. If they are hypocritical in their belief, then surely the doctrine can do no harm; and if sincere it is no matter, on their own principles.

But let us test this maxim a little further. A man believes that fire will not burn. A child sincerely believes it, and thrusts his hand into the blaze of a candle. Does the sincerity of the child prevent his burning? A man, acquainted with the article, believes that arsenic will not poison. He takes it on the sincerity of his belief. Is it no matter? Will his blind sincerity save him from death?

On this principle, (for I wish to confine my remarks to faith in serious things,) a minister can console himself, in view of the effect of his preaching upon his hearers. If he has preached error, it is no matter, it is all the same. It is sincerely preached, and sincerely believed, and does no injury.

The followers of the false prophet believe in a heaven of sensual bliss, and revel in licentious pleasures as preparation for eternal felicities. It is all the same as though the object of their faith was the heaven of the christian, into which, without holiness, none shall enter. They are sincere, and sincerity is the darling quality of belief.

It is a truth of high standing, that a man is no better than his principles. But the maxim we are considering annihilates this truth by sanctioning the admissiont hat men, however diverse in sentiment, may be equally good if equally sincere.

I have several things to add by way of inquiry and reply. How is it that sincerity in belief profits? I can conceive of but two ways in which it can possibly profit. And

1st. It either operates to bring what is believed to pass, or it does not.

Suppose that it does operate to make the thing believed a validity. Then it happens that if a man belives that future punishment is eternal, it is eternal. If a man believes that it is limited, it is limited. If a man believes that there is none at all after death, then there is none. So that it turns out that all the contradictory suppositions imaginable are equally true, and may safely be believed to be true. It is no matter, for there is no difference. One religion is as good as another. Virtue and vice are one—right and wrong are names without realities.

Believing a thing to be, either makes it so, or it does not. If it makes it so, then it destroys the reality of things. There is no certainty that a thing that is, will be a moment longer. A man believes there is no God, and there is no longer any God. He has ceased to be a reality, and his name and character and attributes have no influence any more than a poetical fiction. A man believes there is no hell, and immediately there is none. He believes that man will never die, and inhabits the earth forever. This upsets the world without ceremony. Mingles heaven and hell, the righteous and the wicked, with the utmost ease conceivable. You will not allow that sincerity of belief operates thus to blot out the reality of things.

2d. But if this sincerity does not alter the nature of things, how does it profit? A man believes he is treading on safe ground when a precipice is before him. He goes on, plunges off, and is dashed to pieces; how does his belief profit? A man believes it is safe to drink ardent spirit when the pestilence is raging about him, he drinks, and almost as sure as fate, dies. Thousands have tried it, and what is the profit? Berkely taught, and thousands have believed, that the world is made up of ideas; but what has it profited? Has his theory ever clothed the naked, fed the hungry, or enriched the poor?

A man believes it is safe to go on board a crazy steamboat; he goes, is scalded to death, and where is the profit?

Apply now this subject to the case in hand. A man believes God will adapt him to the end for which he has made him, in the other world. He is reckless about his destiny, lives and dies an infidel, and wakes up to shame and everlasting contempt in eternity; and what does it profit? A man believes that God will accept him at the judgment without repentance; he neglects to repent, and is lost; and what is his profit? He might as well not believe it, for his misery will be aggravated by his unexpected disappointment. Is it no matter what a man believes? Is not truth the reality of things remaining a reality aside from belief or disbelief?—Christian Soldier.

— God rains his goodness and mercy as wide spread as the dew, and if we lack them, it is because we will not open our hearts to receive them.

— Beware of evil thoughts. Oh the mischief they have done in the world. Bad thoughts come first, bad words follow, and bad deeds bring up the rear. Pray against them. They prepare the way for the enemy.

— The sun may shine, the rain and dew may fall, but that large, crooked tree will never be straight. So it is with bad habits, when once fixed—they are hard things to root out.

— Our homes are like instruments of music. The strings that give melody or discord are the members. If each is rightly attuned they will vibrate in harmony; but a single discordant string jars through the instrument and destroys its sweetness.

— Some old quaint writer has said, "Dead fish go down stream. It is only live ones that can swim against it." Let all christians head up against "all ungodliness and worldly lusts," and live "soberly, righteously, and godly" in this present world.

— It is a very indiscreet and troublesome ambition which cares so much about fame; about what the world says of us; to be always looking in the face of others for approval; to be always anxious about the effect of what we do or say; always to be shouting, to hear the echoes of our own voices.

— The pleasure of a religious man is an easy and portable pleasure, such a one as he carries about in his bosom, without alarming either the eye or the envy of the world. A man putting all his pleasures into this one, is like a traveler putting all his goods into one jewel; the value is the same, and the convenience greater.

— Be reserved, says William Penn, but not sour; grave, but not formal; bold, but not rash; humble, but not servile; patient, but not insensible; constant, but not obstinate; cheerful, but not light; rather be sweet tempered than familiar; familiar rather than intimate, and intimate with very few, and upon good grounds.

To make Cows give Milk.—A Wisconsin farmer says: "If you wish to get a large yield of rich milk, give your cow, three times a day, water slightly warm, slightly salted, in which bran has been stirred at the rate of one quart to two gallons of water. A cow will gain immediately under the effects of it, and will become so much attached to it as to refuse clear water unless very thirsty, but this mess she will drink almost any time, and ask for more. The amount of this drink is an ordinary water-pail full three times daily. The cow will then do her best in return."

To make Vinegar.—To nine gallons of water add one gallon of molasses, and let the mixture stand for six weeks in an open barrel, over which a cloth is laid to prevent the admission of impurities. Excellent vinegar will be the result after the lapse of the time indicated.

Tar Stains.—Rub the stain well with salt butter, and then wash the garment, and the stain will disappear.

A COURTEOUS MOTHER.

During the whole of one of last summer's hottest days, I had the good fortune to be seated in a railway car near a mother and four children, whose relations with each other were so rarely beautiful, that the pleasure of watching them was quite enough to make one forget the discomforts of the journey.

It was plain that they were poor; their clothes were coarse and old, and had been made by inexperienced hands. The mother's bonnet alone, would have been enough to have condemned the whole party on any of the world's thoroughfares. I remembered afterwards with shame, that I myself had smiled at the antiquated ugliness; but her face was one which it gave you a sense of rest to look upon—it was so earnest true and strong. It had little comeliness of shape or color in it, it was thin and pale, and livid; she was not young; had worked hard; she had evidently been very ill; but I have seen few faces which gave me such pleasure. I think that she was the wife of a poor clergyman; and I think that clergyman must be one of the Lord's best watchmen of souls. The children—two boys and two girls—were all under the age of twelve, and the youngest one could not speak plainly. They had had a rare treat; they had been visiting the mountains, and they were talking over all the wonders they had seen, with a glow of enthusiastic delight which was to be envied. Only a word-for-word record would do justice to their conversation; no description of it—so free, so pleasant, so genial, no interruptions, no contradictions; and the mother's part borne all the while with such equal interest and eagerness, that no one not seeing her face would dream that she was any other than an elder sister. In the course of the day there were many occasions when it was necessary for her to deny requests, and to ask services, especially from the eldest boy; but no young girl anxious to please a lover could have done either with a more tender courtesy. She had her reward; for no lover could have been more tender and manly than was this boy of twelve. Their lunch was simple and scanty; but it had the grace of a royal banquet. At the last, the mother produced with much glee, three apples and an orange, of which the children had not known. All eyes fastened on the orange. It was evidently a great rarity. I watched to see if this test would bring out selfishness. There was a little silence; just the shade of a cloud. The mother said: "How shall I divide this? There is one for each of you; and I shall be best off of all, for I expect big tastes from each of you."

"O, give Annie the orange. Annie loves oranges," spoke out the eldest boy, with the sudden air of a conquerer, and at the same time taking the smallest and worst apple himself.

"O yes, let Annie have the orange," echoed the second boy, nine years old.

"Yes, Annie may have the orange, because that is nicer than the apple, and she is a lady, and her brothers are gentlemen," said the mother, quietly. Then there was a merry contest as to who should feed the mother with the largest and most frequent mouthfuls; and so the feast went on. Then Annie pretended to want apple, and exchanged thin golden strips of orange for bites out of the cheeks of Baldwins; and as I sat watching her intently, she suddenly fancied she saw longing in my face, and sprang over to me, holding out a quarter of her orange, and saying, "Don't you want a taste too?" The mother smiled understandingly, when I said, "No, I thank you, you dear, generous little girl; I don't care about oranges."

At noon we had a tedious interval of waiting at a dreary station. We sat for two hours on a narrow platform, which the sun had scorched till it smelled of heat. The oldest boy—the little lover—held the youngest child and talked to her, while the tired mother closed her eyes and rested. Now and then he looked over at her, and then back at the baby; and at last he said confidentially to me (for we had become fast friends by this time): "Isn't it funny, to think that I was ever so small as this baby? And papa says mamma was almost a little girl herself."

The two other children were toiling up and down the banks of the rail-road track, picking ox-eye daisies, buttercups and sorrel. They worked like beavers, and soon the bunches were almost too big for their little hands. Then they came running to give them to their mother. "O dear," thought I, "how that poor tired woman will hate to open her eyes; and she never can take those great bunches of wilting, worthless flowers, in addition to all her bundles and bags." I was mistaken.

"O thank you, my darlings! How kind you were! Poor, hot, tired little flowers, how thirsty they look! If they will only try and keep alive till we get home, we will make them very happy in some water; won't we? And you shall put one bunch by papa's plate, and one by mine."

Sweet and happy, the weary flushed little children stood looking up in her face while she talked, their hearts thrilling with compassion for the drooping flowers, and with delight in the giving of their gift. Then she took great trouble to get a string and tie up the flowers, and then the train came, and we were whirling along again. Soon it grew dark, and little Annie's head nodded. Then I heard the mother say to the oldest boy, "Dear, are you too tired to let little Annie put her head on your shoulder and take a nap? We shall get her home in much better case to see papa if we can manage to give her a little sleep." How many boys of twelve hear such words as these from tired, overburdened mothers?

Soon came the city, the final station, with bustle and noise. I lingered to watch my happy family, hoping to see the father. "Why, papa isn't here!" exclaimed one disappointed little voice after another. "Never mind," said the mother, with a still deeper disappointment in her own tone; "perhaps he had to go to see some poor body who is sick." In the hurry of picking up all the parcels, and the sleepy babies, the poor daises and buttercups were left forgotten in a corner of the rack. I wondered if the mother had not intended this. May I be forgiven the injustice! A few minutes after I passed the little group, standing still just outside of the station, and heard the mother say, "O my darlings, I have forgotten your pretty boquets. I am so sorry! I wonder if I could find them if I went back. Will you all stand still, and not stir from this spot if I go?"

"O, mamma, don't go, don't go. We will get you some more. Don't go," cried all the children.

"Here are your flowers, madam," said I. "I saw that you had forgotten them, and I took them as mementoes of you and your sweet children." She blushed and looked disconcerted. She was evidently unused to people, and shy with all but her children. However she thanked me sweetly, and said:

"I was very sorry about them. The children took such trouble to get them; and I think they will revive in water. They cannot be quite dead."

"They will never die!" said I, with an emphasis which went from my heart to hers. Then all her shyness fled. She knew me; and we shook hands, and smiled into each other's eyes with the smile of kindred as we parted.

As I followed on, I heard the two children, who were walking behind, saying to each other: "Wouldn't that have been too bad. Mamma liked them so much, and we never could have got so many all at once again."

"Yes, we could too, next summer," said the boy sturdily.

They are sure of their "next summers." I think all six of those souls—children and mother and father. They may never again raise so many ox-eyed daisies and buttercups "all at once." Perhaps some of the little hands have already picked their last flowers. Nevertheless their summers are certain. To such souls as these, all are trees, either here or in God's larger country, are Trees of Life, with twelve manner of fruit and leaves for healing; and it is but little change from the summers here, whose suns burn and make weary, to the summers there, of which "the Lamb is the light."—Independent.

INTEMPERANCE.—That intemperance is fearfully on the increase in this country must be apparent to every one who reads the papers, or who has his eyes open when he walks the streets of our cities. Young men, without fear of losing respectability or position in society, are daily and nightly seen visiting saloons, restaurants, etc., and partaking freely of brandy, wine and other liquors. Unless the friends of temperance put forth more vigorous and united efforts, the evil must go on increasing.

PHYSIOLOGICAL LETTERS.—No. 9.

The modus operandi of opium, and other narcotics in producing sleep, is two-fold.

1st. They have a specific effect upon the brain, altering its nutrition and suspending its functions.

2nd. They indirectly act upon the heart and blood vessels; in this respect differing from a class of medicines known as sedatives, which directly influence the circulation, and have no primary action on the nervous system.

In the operation of narcotics (from narke, stupor,) we observe two stages—(1) that of exhilaration of spirits and increased mental activity. The circulation is accelerated; more blood flows to the brain now—there is a quickening of the intellect and sensibilities, as rapidly among the cerebral thought-cells courses the red oxygen stream. (2.) A stage of depression ensues, corresponding to the previous exaltation. The mental activity languishes, because the life current is retarded. The larger the dose of the poison, the more quickly its sedative effect is produced. The same causes which make the blood circulate slowly toward the brain, make it return slowly from the brain, and hence the liability to apoplexy in this stage from passive congestion.

Less blood going to the brain diminishes the supply of oxygen to the cerebral cells, and so does a slackened arterial circulation, although the blood-vessels may be more than usually full. In both of these ways (i. e., by determining less blood to the brain, and by retarding the blood current) narcotics act, and thus by withholding from the mental cerebral centres, their usual supplies, the inertia of sleep is induced. (a.)

The view just given of the mode of action of narcotics is in accordance with the hypothesis of Headland, (b.) This eminent writer believes that they act by being attracted to the brain cells and separated by them along with their proper nutritious fluids; they then so affect nutrition and chemical transformations in the cells as to suspend the brain functions. The delirium which attends opium, henbane, etc., is evidence of this commencing perverted action in the nerve centres. The poison has rendered the blood unfit for the purpose of nourishing them; hence these nerve-centres practically say to the heart and arteries, send us no more of that bad blood, it will destroy us. Hence the depression and the retarded circulation, of which I have before spoken. The person by and by awakes from his sleep in a great measure unrefreshed, for the simple reason that a healthy nutrition of the brain has not been effected during the sleep. Therefore, we see how irrational it is for the insomnious to resort to narcotics.

I cannot dismiss this abstruse subject in which occurs so much that is apparently theoretical, without relating the following facts in substantiation of my views. Sir. Astley Cooper had a patient who had lost a portion of his skull. His brain could be distinctly seen beating through the opening of the skull, and whenever he was irritated by any opposition, the pulsation was much more violent, and it became more quiet when he was calm, and the mind was easy," (c.)

Dr. Pierquin reports the following case:—A girl in Montpelier had lost a large portion of her scalp and scull. Her brain could be seen for a considerable extent of surface. When she was in a dreamless sleep, her brain was motionless, and low within the cranium; but when her sleep was imperfect and she was agitated with dreams, her brain moved and beat; more blood was sent to it, the arteries expanded, and the brain protruded through the hole in the bone. This protrusion was greater in active than in calm dreams; and when she was awake the same difference was observed, consequent upon the activity and quiescence of her mind. If she was in vigorous thought, the brain swelled, and protrusion was very observable, (d.)

(a) It will be seen that the phenomena of insensibility is ascribed to two opposite conditions—first, the insensibility from too much blood, as exemplified in apoplexy; and second, that which arises from too little blood, as exemplified in fainting. True sleep holds the mean between the two.

CURE FOR CANCER.

The following remedy for a cancer, we clipped from one of our exchanges. It is worthy of a trial. If any use the remedy, we wish they would report the result.

"A Milwaukee paper states that some eight months ago Mr. T. B. Mason of that city ascertained that he had a cancer on his face the size of a pin. It was cut out by a doctor and the wound partially healed. Subsequently it grew again, and, while he was at Cincinnati on business, it attained the size of a hickory nut. He remained there since Christmas under treatment, and is now perfectly cured. The process is this: A piece of sticking plaster was put over the cancer, with a circular piece cut out of the centre a little larger than the cancer, and a small circular rim of the healthy skin next to it were exposed. Then a plaster made of chloride of zinc, blood root and wheat flour was spread on a piece of muslin the size of this circular opening, and applied to the cancer for twenty-four hours. On removing it, the cancer will be found burned into, and appear of the color and hardness of an old shoe sole, and the circular rim outside of it will appear white and parboiled, as if scalded by hot steam. The wound is now dressed, and the outside rim soon separates, and the cancer comes out in a hard lump, and the place heals up. The plaster kills the cancer, so that it sloughs out like dead flesh and never grows in again. The remedy was discovered by Dr. Fell of London, and has been used by him for six or eight years with unfailing success, and not a case has been known of the reappearance of the cancer when this remedy has been applied."

CURE FOR HYDROPHOBIA.

Mr. Dunbar Moodie, late sheriff of the county of Hastings, writes to the Montreal News recommending vinegar and water as a cure for this disease. He tells of a Captain Paul who was bitten by a mad dog on the finger, which soon commenced to swell and gradually increased, extending to the whole arm. A broad red streak extended on each side of the bitten finger up to the shoulder on the outside, and to near the armpit on the inside. He at once took a sharp pen-knife and scarified the finger all around the wound, which bled plentifully. He then moistened some common salt with vinegar, and rubbed it into the wound perseveringly. Gradually the red streaks disappeared until they were confined to the hand. The application of the salt and vinegar produced a copious discharge of watery fluid from the wounds in the hand. He then applied a common flour poultice for some time, until he thought the danger was past.

Several days ago an English lady, on a visit to a friend at Gosport, opposite Portsmouth, was severely bitten by a rabid dog in one of her hands, just as she was about returning in the ferry-boat to Portsmouth. The hand gave her great pain, but on immersing it in salt water the pain gradually abated. In this manner she kept the hand in the salt water all the way back to Portsmouth, which is about a mile from Gosport. By this means the salt water proved an effectual antidote to the poison of the wound from the dog's teeth. Immediately after biting the lady, the dog bit a coachman and a boy, both of whom died of hydrophobia.

TOBACCO AND DISEASE.

It is the nicotine in the stronger tobacco used in England, France and the United States, which proves so pernicious, and the French physicians hold that paralysis is making rapid advance under the abuse of alcohol and tobacco. There has been an enormous increase of insanity and of diseases of the nervous centres in France, chiefly among men; and whenever the history of such cases has been examined, in asylums and hospitals, their connection with tobacco has been obvious. Soldiers and sailors, whose abuse of tobacco is most flagrant, are the most numerous classes in these hospitals, and their cases are the most incurable. The reform of veteran smokers is almost hopeless; but possibly some may be deterred from falling into bad habits by a knowledge of these fatal tendencies. Nervous diseases have increased rapidly in this country, as in France, and paralytic shocks are frequent. If these are owing largely to the use of tobacco, young men will do well to flee temptation and escape the penalty.—Providence Journal.

BURYING ALIVE.

Great efforts have been made by scientific men to discover some rule by which death may be infallibly indicated. For years the French government has held out a standing reward of a large amount of money to any one who would discover and communicate a satisfactory test, other than that of actual decomposition, indicated by the skin turning to be black and blue and green, which is conclusive on the subject; but in cold weather this may not take place in many weeks, and to "keep the body" so long would be inconvenient and objectionable on several accounts. A method has recently been given to the French government which will probably take the prize. Hold a lighted candle to any portion of the a body a blister will soon rise; if on puncture it gives out a fluid substance, death has not taken place; if it emits air only, it is perfectly certain that life has become entirely extinct, for which we offer but one reason among others: in case of actual death the blood is congealed—in a sense, there is no moisture, simply a little air; this, being rarified under a flame, raises up the skin: if there is life, the flame causes an inflammation, and nature, in her alarm, sends increased material there for repairs, a kind of glairy fluid, and this, being sent there in excess, causes the skin to rise. Inability to feel the pulse or heart beat, cold skin, or dew on a bit of glass, none of these are conclusive, as there has been life when none of these were observed.—Hall's Journal of Health.

EFFECT OF TOBACCO ON BOYS. Dr. Decaisne, while engaged in investigating the influence of tobacco on the circulatory system, had his attention called to the large number of boys between the ages of nine and fifteen years who were addicted to smoking. Of thirty-eight boys who smoked, twenty-seven showed symptoms of disease; thirty-two had various disorders of circulation; bruit de souffle in the neck, disordered digestion, palpitation, slowness of intelect, and more or less taste for strong drinks. Eight showed a diminution of the red corpuscles of the blood; three had intermittent pulse; twelve quite frequent epitaxis; ten disordered sleep; and four ulceration of mucous membrane of the mouth.

A CURE FOR DRUNKENNESS.—It is said that a mixture made up as follows, and taken in quantities equal to an ordinary dram, and as often as the desire for strong drink returns, will cure the worst case of drunkeness: Sulphate of iron, five grains; peppermint water, eleven drachms; spirits of nutmeg, one drachm. This preparation acts as a tonic and stimulant, and so partially supplies the place of the accustomed liquor, and prevents the absolute physical and moral prostration that follows a sudden breaking off from the use of stimulating drinks.—Hall's Journal of Health.

HYMN.

Salvation! O the charming sound,
So full of bliss, so quickly found;
'Tis music to the sinner's ears,
When in despair and filled with fears.

Of millions who have heard the sound,
A few the pardoning God have found;
While millions turn their ears away,
And never hear, and never pray.

In that frequented awful road
Are sinners traveling from their God;
How dark and gloomy is their state—
How sad and sure will be their fate.

Salvation! as its echoes roll
From east to west, from pole to pole,
May sinners hear the joyful sound,
And then with faith and love abound.

The Savior shed his blood for thee,
And died to make salvation free;
O sinner, hear his pleading voice,
In love he waits, now make your choice.

O choose before he shuts the door,
Or fire shall purge his threshing-floor;
Then all your cries will be in vain,
He comes to judge, and comes to reign.

"ADVENTISM CONSIDERED."

A Review of Rev. W. Post's Work purporting to expose the Errors of "Adventism."

V.—A THEOLOGICAL CONTRAST.

A class of theologians,—of which Mr. Post is a representative man,—assert that the wicked possess a deathless soul which shall exist in torment as long as the throne of God shall endure, notwithstanding God says, "The soul that sinneth, it shall die"; and again, "He which converteth a sinner from the error of his ways, shall save a soul from death." They contend that the nature of the soul is indestructible; but Jesus says, "Fear him which is able to DESTROY both soul and body in hell." Again, they claim that when the righteous die they immediately sing praises in heaven; but the word says, "In the grave who shall give thee thanks?" "the dead praise not the Lord"; and the grave cannot give thee thanks; "death cannot celebrate thee; they that go down into the pit cannot hope for truth. The living, the living, he shall praise thee, as I do this day." They say that the righteous at death go immediately to their reward; but Jesus comforted his disciples by telling them that if he went away, he would come again to receive them unto himself, but "whither I go ye cannot come." In reference to his return he says, Lo, I come; "and my reward is with me." Hence, none are rewarded or punished until the Royal Judge shall come to decide who are entitled to reward or who deserve punishment. Look at these facts, and then decide on which side are the "perversions," the oft-repeated charge brought against the Adventists. Do not the facts that we have already adduced show that modern theology and the doctrine of the Scriptures are opposite systems? We can not compromise God's truth. We must cling to it and believe it, in preference to all the theological theories of Christendom. When we place God's word upon a system of guess work, one has just as good a right to guess its meaning as another; hence arises the multitude of religious sects of the present age.

Before we leave the examination of Mr. Post's theology, we will look at another point, which will show that, as well as his theology being opposite to the Scriptures, it is also far from being harmonious with philosophy.

VI.—THE THEORY OF ENDLESS TORMENT INVOLVES MORAL IMPOSSIBILITIES.

It is doubtless generally understood that there are two opinions, embraced in the popular view, respecting the nature of future punishment. One theory is that the instrument of eternal torture is literal fire; and the other opinion is that it consists in remorse of conscience, induced by former wickedness. But we should like to have them tell us how material fire can produce pain upon an immaterial thing. It is a philosophic absurdity. And again, material fire, as the tormenting agent, must have a material foundation; and as they claim the world is to be "burned up," will they tell us where the location of this material fire is? Punishment upon this principle is impossible; for if the fire produced the least pain it would prove that they are composed of matter; as such they must of necessity consume away under the effects of this fire. But they deny that the fire has any consuming effect upon them, as they are immortal, and immaterial beings; therefore we will suppose that other material is furnished to keep the fire in being, yet it would be harmless to them, for it is claimed they are immaterial, and material fire can only affect material substances. Fire is of a consuming nature, and can only be kept in existence when carrying on the work of decomposition; and it must change those things upon which it preys into other formations, or simple elements. If the fire could have any effect upon the wicked, when cast into it, it would consume them until they were turned into the elements from which they were made, which would make their eternal conscious existence an impossibility; and this conclusion is in accordance with the decree of Jehovah, that they shall be "burned up root and branch." Mal. 4: 1.

The species of punishment we will now examine is that called remorse of conscience. Upon this point we will add the testimony of a writer of learning and ability:—"While we consider this argument, we wish it to be distinctly borne in mind that those who hold to this idea of eternal torments, also hold that those beings upon whom it is inflicted are vastly superior in wisdom, when in the future state, to what they were while living upon earth; and that those things brought to view in the Scriptures, which they were obliged while here to receive as mere matter of faith, are then all realities and all knowledge. Another circumstance connected with this state, according to their theory, is that death to them is a conquered foe; they can never die. Now we must remember that it is not from the location of the place, or from the existence of any external circumstances or things, which constitutes this form of punishment; but is wholly internal remorse, and one eternal sense of guilt that horrifies their minds.

"Now we will admit, for the sake of argument, that there is a place where these immortal sinners go, and that their punishment consists in a remembrance of their past conduct toward God. It is immaterial now where they are placed, and we will suppose that they are all transported back again to the earth, and also that there are no other inhabitants upon it but themselves, and the probability is that they could not be placed in any other department of God's universe where there is greater derangement, and so little to satisfy their mental and physical wants, as at present exists upon this planet. . . . . . The question is, What is to be done? The first thing proposed in this vast congregation of gigantic minds thus assembled is to consider the nature of their condition. Various are the subjects of discussion, we will suppose, one of which is the superior blessedness of the saints, of which they now have a full view. They are also now fully aware of their eternal exclusion from that abode, and for ever shut out from the presence of Jehovah; the Son of God they never shall behold more; the sounds of angelic voices shall never salute their ears. These facts necessarily create sorrow and regret at their past folly; and they conclude that, were they permitted, they would all be christians. But now the question is, 'What is to be done?'

"Now supposing these beings only to be endowed with common sense; what would be the conclusion to which their investigations would lead? Can it be supposed that they would sit down and mourn and lament their loss to all eternity, at the same time knowing that the things were unalterably fixed; and notwithstanding what their conduct should be in reference to God, they could never be admitted into the society of those who had been righteous while on probation, or at least sufficiently so to have obtained the better place? This idea would be abandoned at once, and philosophy declares that they could never be tormented from any such consideration. They must now make the best of their condition, which indeed they find to be much better than when they were on earth before; and although they must forever be surrounded with hardships, yet they will be nothing in comparison with those once suffered. Then they were in perpetual danger of dying, and could not from the nature of things live but a few years at most, and even the apprehension of that event created a great many evils with which they cannot now be tormented; and also for a great portion of their former lives they were sick, but they now shall never be thus afflicted, for sickness implies death, and where there is no death there can be no sickness. Then also there can be no anxiety in relation to their future state; this now is for ever banished—they understand all about their future condition, and know that they shall die no more. Eternity lies before them! . . . .

"From these considerations, is it not absolutely certain that there could be no punishment arising from such a cause of penal offenses; but on the contrary, place such beings anywhere in the universe, where the punishment was to arise only from internal guilt, and they would indeed be in a happier state than any of which we are at present capable of forming the least conception. Some of the elements composing this future state are superior wisdom, the possession of eternal life; for this theory confers this upon the wicked as well as upon the righteous; hence they are eternally exempt from sickness or death. Now, what if our world, and all its inhabitants, should be changed into such a state as this, would it not be a consummation devoutly to be desired, and would there be a dissenting voice heard, if the proposition should be made for the immediate change? And yet, this would be all the hell this system philosophically admits of, as an eternal habitation."

If this theory of future punishment were true, it shows that there could be no future punishment possible in such a condition, for it proposes absolute reward. This would be true of the most abandoned wretch that ever lived, placed in such a condition of unending existence, with nothing but the remembrance of past conduct to upbraid and torment him. Therefore this theory establishes universal salvation. According to these principles of future punishment, in consideration of the nature and constitution of things, instead of eternal punishment, no punishment whatever would be inflicted.

We do not, however admit these principles to be true, as they plainly contradict both Scripture and philosophy; and we consider the truths of nature to be as infallible as those of Revelation, as they have originated from the same source. But we have previously introduced a principle of future punishment which is truth, not only philosophical but Scriptural. This principle assumes that the agent for the accomplishment of Jehovah's purpose is "consuming fire"; that the wicked, having passed through the "resurrection of damnation," as material, organized beings, are "cast into the lake of fire." Rev. 20: 15. As they have had no part in the resurrection which is unto life, not a pulsation of immortality shall ever throb their pulse; therefore as material beings they are susceptible of being acted upon by material fire, and are utterly consumed by its powers.

VII.—A MORAL CONTRAST.

Speaking of the punishment of the wicked, as held by Adventists, Mr. Post makes these remarks:—"What is gained by believing it? Suppose the vain, non-immortal theory to be received as truth; what is gained by it? Believing a truth will not save one. To believe that I am not immortal will not save me, any sooner than believing I am will. 'DEVILS BELIEVE AND TREMBLE.' What good, therefore, is effected to the human family by such a belief? It certainly has no tendency to dissuade from crime, but rather to lull sinners to sleep in their wretched condition, for 'surely' it will soon be over, for 'as the brute dieth so DIE they.'"

In reply to Mr. P., I might ask, What was the design of God in revealing truth to the human family? Surely, if there is nothing "gained by believing it," then is it non-essential, and God is chargeable with the greatest INJUSTICE in punishing man for unbelief. God's truth is either essential, or it is not. And that principle, or theory, which makes it non-essential, would annihilate the whole system of christian religion. That theory which would make some truths essential and others not, would bring the whole into discredit, for no two religious sects could agree; and who is divinely inspired to divide the non-essential from the essential? But the apostle sets the matter in its true light. "BE SANCTIFIED THROUGH THE TRUTH." Therefore the different classes of truths are to have their sanctifying influence upon the christian's life, and thus they become "sanctified wholly," that they may be presented "blameless" before Christ at his appearing.

Did error ever sanctify any one? Has not the slanderous error of the endless torture of the lost made more skeptics and infidels than any other error that ever crept into the church?

What were the strong points of argument brought against inspiration and christianity by Voltaire, Volney, Tom Paine, and others of the same fraternity, but heathen philosophy which had been adopted by Romanism and defended by Protestantism. The land is full of infidels; and what is the cause? Is it not true that it can be traced to the fact that they have been brought up to look upon the character of God and christianity by the doctrines of the religious sentiment of an apostate church adopted by Protestantism, which is so unreasonable and unphilosophical that they repudiated both? The tendency of those mystified and unreasonable doctrines are not only seen in those who honestly avow their disbelief in the Bible, but in the wide-spread lack of confidence in the Scriptures which is every where manifested, and the tenacity with which all sectarians stick to their theories in preference to even the Scriptures. This is in substance infidelity.

Mr. Post holds forth the doctrine of endless misery as the greatest motive for the conversion of sinners. But does it have this effect? No! The tendency of the doctrine is the reverse. It creates hard and repulsive feelings towards God, which can not be denied. And again, it comes in direct conflict with our views of righteousness and justice, and does create insubordination instead of veneration and obedience to God. It fails to produce upon the mind a reasonable conviction, being so extremely incomprehensible and inconsistent with the nature of things as to cause reason to totter on her throne; thus fails to convince the judgment, and hence presents no motive for repentance.

But how different is the other system of future punishment. (1.) It is harmonious with both Scripture and philosophy. (2.) It is comprehensible even to the common mind, and can not fail to produce a powerful and lasting impression upon the unprejudiced mind, with both the justice of God's character and even a dread of the consequences of sin. Therefore this sentiment does present the strongest motive to repentance; let him but understand that the time is near at hand when the sinner, sin, and the author of sin will be blotted from existence; when God's universe will be ridded of every vestige of evil; and an eternal existence with God, his Son, and the combined hosts of heaven in the Paradise of Deity, is the strongest motive that can presented to flee from so awful a fate. (3.) This system of future punishment demolishes infidelity at a blow, and leaves the Romish system of future punishment resting upon a "sandy foundation." (4.) It is practical, as well as being eternal truth. These are facts that no sophistry can obliterate. Christ was manifested that "whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have eternal life."—John 3: 15, 16.

"Oh, seize this moment, mortal man,
And thus avert the final storm,
Nor fear results if it's God's plan;
Bow submissive to his shrine,
For swiftly flies the hours of time.
This offer canst thou, wilt thou spurn?
Canst thou his fearful thunders turn?
Then come before the quenchless fire
Is kindled by Jehovah's ire;
Life, eternal life receive,
It shall thyself from death retrieve.
Haste, thou victim, doomed to death,
How canst thou in yon flames be left,
Be cast to wither, waste, and die?
To groan among the damned; oh! why,
Why will ye thus forever die?"

Rochester, N. Y. WM. H. SPENCER.

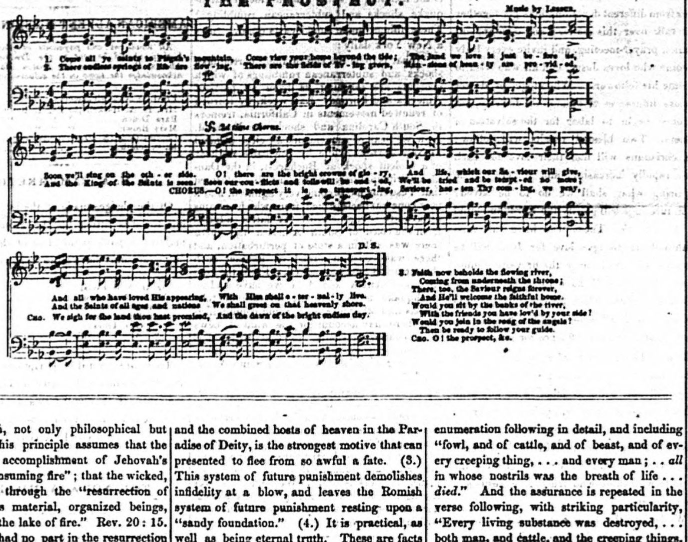
THE PROSPECT.



For the World's Crisis.

THOUGHTS ON A FEW THINGS.

A LITTLE MORE ON DEATH BY DROWNING.

As the precipitation of the wicked is in the lake of fire, so the immersion (and death by immersion) is in this element. And taking the heat and fierceness into view together with the combustibility of the deposit, we may be sure the evil-doers, as fuel, will be not only drowned, but forthwith consumed. Whatever is drowned in the ocean may be devoured by sharks, or hurled on the sea-beach, or slowly decomposed; and that which is drowned in the "perdition of ungodly men," will be as certainly destroyed. No bellows will re-inflate the breathing-cells, no galvanism re-animate the body, no therapeutics restore warmth or circulation, for naught but ashes can remain after the conflagration of the day of perdition. There will be no occasional victim, of such astounding vitality as to buffet and battle for myriads of ages with the mighty sea of flame; no solitary swimmer here and there resisting the fury of the flood. For there is provision made, or necessity made known, that the wicked shall die. The very lusts that prove their ruin, ensure their inundation in the ocean to which they are consigned. Why, indeed, should the wicked live? That period of duration, that state of earth, that special term of lenity or allowance allotted, is gone, never to return. It was a provisional arrangement in God's government. No such special arrangement can recur for them. No stay of proceedings, no proclamation of reprieve any more. Must not the wicked die, then? If not, where can they live? Surely not in heaven, for that is a place of holiness. Surely not on earth, for that is the inheritance of the meek. Surely not in some other world, for wickedness must, to say the least, be hedged in, and not suffered to diffuse abroad and contaminate other regions in the universe of God. Surely not in hell, for nothing human and mortal can survive the devouring vehemence of heat intensified there. Surely there will be found no place for the wicked to live, but there will be a place and time for them to die.

But again, why should they live? They can do no good. They can promote the welfare of no being in all the realms of creation. Neither can they enjoy good while possessed of qualities and propensities inimical to peace. The heart unrectified can be no habitation of happiness. But on the other hand, it is a haunt of vicious feeling, and the theatre of an activity ever baneful. A thousand derangements forbid either rest or delight. The moral reconstruction, through repentance and the grace of God, having been neglected, there is wanting the condition necessary to life. For it would be a strange and pernicious proceeding to immortalize the wicked and thus perpetuate their misery; and their capacity to do evil. Why should the wicked live, when having in them only at best the conditions of a disjointed, disordered, agonized, and odious life? Why should they live, when pressed down with the awful weight of a crushing condemnation? Why live, when shrunk and dismayed at the retrospect of a wasted and forfeited life, and when dismally conscious of incurable pride, hate, and all the diversified working of internal evil?

But suppose we take a Bible precedent or two, and see if the drowned in Scripture were actually drowned or not. How was it in the flood? Says Moses in the Pentateuch of the effect of the deluge, "And all flesh died," the enumeration following in detail, and including "fowl, and of cattle, and of beast, and of every creeping thing, . . . and every man; . . all in whose nostrils was the breath of life . . . died." And the assurance is repeated in the verse following, with striking particularity, "Every living substance was destroyed, . . . both man, and cattle, and the creeping things, and the fowl of the heaven." Depend upon it, there were no fugitive "immortalities" surviving the mighty judgment,—no "deathless souls" with mercurial evasiveness escaping, either amid, or after the desolating catastrophe. There were no "disembodied identities" rising and ascending through the broken bubbles that for a moment specked the flood and vanished. Nor have we the slightest intimation of these lost intelligences being pressed hopelessly down through rifts in the ocean bottom into a hades of fire. No! the wicked scoffers of Noah's warning and God's mercy died, and died by drowning. And be sure, they are dead yet.

How was it, again, with the impetuous horde of Pharaoh, pressing in hot haste after Israel? Did the parted banks of Red Sea brine close over the crowded, floundering host? Did the dreadful surge souse and strangle the headstrong king and his army? Certainly it did, and there was not one straggler spared; not a man of them lived to get back. Gazing over the route they had traversed, Israel saw not one swimmer alive and afloat, although they "saw the Egyptians dead upon the seashore." Moses, exulting on the Arabian coast, in his anthem to that God who had rescued Israel, declared that Pharaoh's "chosen captains also are drowned in the Red Sea." It would be the silliest perversion of the history, and of common sense, to construe this account into a narrative of cavalry platoons thousands of years strangling, struggling, splashing, and managing to live, and doomed to suffer for an eternity of agony, and forbidden and unable to perish! If they did perish, methinks the "drowning in perdition" to come will be no less complete. It will be an act accomplished, and not an infinite failure.

Or take the case suggested by our Lord, of the man with the millstone around his neck, as an alternative preferable to the malicous misleading of the feeblest christian. A case in which the fate of "drowning" in the operation of the alternative is made a dead certainty, by the appendage to his neck, that draws him down to a depth reached by no dredging hook. Think of a man living at the sea-bottom, chained to the ooze with this necklace of granite. Why, the most terrible marine leviathan would die if thus pinioned, and how long must homage of a foul tradition keep the mind in bondage? How long must Christendom wear the millstone of error around its neck, or go on contending with the friendly hand that would detach the dreadful weight, and give liberty to breathe and walk in the dignity and joy of the truth?

For the World's Crisis.

"I GO A FISHING."

These were the words of Peter after his Lord was put to death; and he, in his disappointment and sorrow, thought he might as well stop talking about Christ's coming, and go to his former occupation; for he knew not what else to do, for he had trusted that he would have redeemed Israel; but now he was dead, his hope was gone; for, as yet, he did not understand the Scripture, that he must rise from the dead. Now I imagine there are many whose feelings resemble Peter's, who have long been looking for their absent Lord. Times have passed when they expected his return, and they in their disappointment feel that they must "go a fishing," or go West, or go into something, for their hope has tarried so long that faith begins to grow weak. Their families, too, must be supported, and so off they go, some to one thing and some to another. "Take heed to yourselves, lest at any time your hearts be overcharged with surfeiting and drunkenness, and cares of this life, and so that day come upon you unawares."—Luke 21: 31. Now, do remember this caution is to us, even us, who do understand the signs of the times, to whom Christ speaks. Now if he tarry, let us wait for him; for he says he will surely come, he will not tarry. God's time has not tarried, for the day is appointed and fixed by God, and when that time arrives, he will surely come. It is our time alone that tarries. So let us keep on the watch tower, remembering "the life is more than meat, and the body than raiment," and if we must fish a little longer for the sake of the mortal, let us also fish to gather to the immortal.

Plainfield. LAURA ANN WHEELER.

ENDLESS SUFFERINGS NOT THE DOCTRINE OF SCRIPTURE.

By Thomas Davis, M. A., Incumbent of Roundhay, Yorkshire.

"Enter ye in at the strait gate: for wide is the gate, and broad is the way, that leadeth to destruction, and many there be which go in thereat: because strait is the gate, and narrow is the way, which leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it."—MATT. 7: 13, 14.

(Concluded.)

The great Teacher who came down from heaven did on no single occasion address men as naturally imperishable; neither did any one of his apostles. How could they consistently with the doctrine which is the very burden of the gospel, that through faith we live forever; that he that hath the Son hath life; he that hath not the Son of God hath not life? How could they, and preach at the same time that only those who believed in Christ should not perish but have everlasting life? If to perish is to be immortal, words have no certain meaning; and if to die is to live forever, whether in suffering or in bliss, no language can be confidently construed. It is worthy, I think, of especial remark, that the apostle Paul, who pre-eminently, after his Lord's ascension to heaven, and the ampler effusion of the Spirit which succeeded that great event, wrote very copiously on the doctrines of the gospel, never adverts to eternal suffering. Numerous as are his invaluable epistles, various as are the topics of which they treat, frequently as his arguments and earnest exhortations must have suggested a notice of the doctrine, if it had formed part of his faith, no one can point out a single sentence which either expressly or implicitly contains it. Supposing that he held it, he kept it back; he thought it better to be silent regarding it; he counted it needless, and not to be disclosed till men should discover it when their destiny was fixed. But who will believe this of him who, as he would be pure from the blood of all men, made it his purpose honestly and fearlessly to declare all the counsel of God? No one, surely, will affirm that Paul was a man of reticence or cautious reserve regarding sacred truth; and that he was this respecting a doctrine which, if he knew it, and counted it true, it would have been recklessly cruel to withhold, is, we presume, too extravagant a thought to need that a moment should be spent in its refutation. This, however, is not all. Again and again Paul uses the common language, death, destruction, perish, and so forth. Indeed a careless reader of his words, looking too much to one class of passages, might even suppose that he did not hold that the wicked would so much as know a resurrection; but that this would be a destiny peculiar to the righteous, who like himself watched and strove, if by any means they might attain unto the resurrection of the dead.

Such a conclusion, however, would doubtless be erroneous. For another class of passages teach plainly that "every one of us shall give an account of himself to God;" that "we must all appear before the judgment seat of Christ, that every one may receive the things done in his body, according to that he hath done, whether it be good or bad."

All that we assert of Paul's doctrine regarding the wicked hereafter is, that it was perfectly consistent with that of the other sacred writers, and knew nothing of eternal misery. As for such language as we find in Tertullian and others, some of which I shall adduce in a subsequent discourse, there is nothing to be found in his writings or addresses that bears even a remote resemblance to it; the difference, be it always remembered, between temporary and eternal anguish being in strictest speech infinite.

Now I think that if the argument rested here, if I could simply establish the fact, that the vast body of Scripture passages teach the ultimate destruction or absolute death of the wicked, consistently with its doctrine that Satan is a destroyer, a murderer, and Jesus a Savior, a Life-giver, the conclusion would be easy to a sound reasoner, not misled by early education. Be it that in a large volume, like the Bible, transmitted to us through strange and amazing vicissitudes, there may be found two or three sentences that seem out of harmony with its general teaching, and, more than this, seem to contain doctrines that represent God as immeasurably severe—are the hundreds of texts to yield to the two or three, or the two or three to yield to the hundreds? Say if you will that they are absolutely contrary, that they cannot in any way be reconciled, what is the wise course, what is the reasonable course, for those who still hold to the Bible as a whole? Surely it must be to accept the many, and wait for a future explanation of the few.

But to my view there is no certain contradiction. The two or three texts in question may perhaps be reconciled with the multitude. And to those I shall soon ask your attention. I will only notice, at the present time, one or two passages that are usually quoted for the common doctrine; but which, however, I do not regard as really presenting much difficulty.

One is the representatation in the second chapter of Genesis, that man became a living soul. "God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life, and man became a living soul."

Now we need not spend much time on this. Turn either here or at your homes to a Bible containing the marginal readings, and look at the thirtieth verse of the first chapter of the same book of Genesis. You will there read, "To every beast of the earth, and to every fowl of the air, and every thing that creepeth upon the earth wherein there is life, I have given every green herb for meat." Now the margin will show you that "every thing that creepeth upon the earth wherein there is life," might have been translated "everything that creepeth upon the earth wherein there is a living soul." Then, for the phrase "the breath of life," you will not need any help from the margin. In the sixth chapter, at the seventeenth verse, you may read, "Behold I, even I, do bring a flood of waters upon the earth, to destroy all flesh" (not simply man, but all flesh ("wherein is the breath of life;" and the same language is used in the seventh chapter, at the twenty-second verse, in reference, along with man, to fowl, cattle, and creeping thing.

There is another argument about as common, and hardly, I think, stronger, derived from the same book. In order to prove that all men, wicked and good, are immortal, the one immortal for misery, the other immortal for bliss, we are reminded that "God made man in his own image."

The argument of course is this: God made man in his own image. God is immortal; therefore man is immortal. Now, if that argument be good, this also is good, as every competent reasoner will admit. God made man in his own image; God is almighty, therefore man is almighty; or this, God made man in his own image; God is omniscient, therefore man is omniscient.

Those who feel not the force of this answer, perhaps would not be brought to feel it by any more lengthened or elaborate expression of it. But for a moment let us suppose that man was made constitutionally immortal. Would this imply that God gave man eternal life, to be held thenceforth independently of him; and that, let it be used as it might? Was the gift of life absolute; totally unconditional? This were inconsistent with the sovereignty of Omnipotence.

We turn however to the language of Scripture. To man, though made in God's image, death is threatened in case of transgression. The well-known penalty for eating of the forbidden tree is thus expressed: "In the day that thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die;" or, as it is in the Hebrew, and as the margin shows you, "dying thou shalt die," words of the most emphatic character. Now these words are interpreted to mean dying thou shalt never die. Just as destruction is taken to signify eternal preservation in woe; and being burnt up like chaff is taken to signify being kept unconsumed, like the bush in the flames, and that, unlike the bush, forever; so, as I have said, "dying thou shalt die," is construed as meaning dying thou shalt never die. Death indeed is threatened, but then it is a "living death;" or, as a recent writer has called it, "a deathless death."

Where do we read of "a living death" or of a "deathless death" in Scripture? Nowhere—nor of anything like it. In strictness, the words have no meaning. You might as well speak of a light darkness, or a white blackness, or a straight crookedness. True, in a kind of bold rhetoric, you may speak of a living death with a meaning which would be well understood. It is the language of hyperbole, or of figurative exaggeration. But to use such a phrase in close argument, or to construe after this manner the words of the Almighty in the original threatening to man, is in the highest degree unreasonable. "Dying thou shalt die," could not have signified either thou shalt never die, or thou shalt endure a living death.

You will naturally ask how it comes to pass that men can so interpret Scripture? They do it, however unintentionally, by what I must term a species of Rationalism. It is a new word, but I suppose it has some meaning; and, if it means anything, it must be reasoning against revelation; not of course reasoning itself, for it is through reasoning that the mind is satisfied that it must bow to the authority of Scripture; but reasoning against what Scripture says, and, confining our attention to the points before us, what it says plainly in numerous passages.

They first reach by a process of reasoning, provably as I think unsound, the dogma of the absolute immortality of all men (of which Scripture says not a word;) and then, by a further process, they arrive at the doctrine of eternal misery for all who shall fail of eternal happiness.

The strongest among the natural proofs of the immortality of the human soul, is, as it appears to me, the aspiration to it, which is common to the race. But then, to what do we aspire? Not, assuredly, to an immortality of woe, but to an immortality of bliss; and that this latter is attainable the aspiration itself is a most powerful evidence. It could not have been given us to delude and disappoint. There would seem to be a falsehood branded in our nature if we may not acquire eternal blessedness.

I must now, brethren, hasten to a close, although there is much to be said.

Again, every one amongst us may choose between life and death. Once more the Savior says to us, "Enter ye in at the strait gate; for wide is the gate, and broad is the way, that leadeth to destruction, and many there be that go in thereat; because strait is the gate, and narrow is the way, that leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it."

Now, I say, take these words in their natural sense. Do not deal irreverently with Scripture, and reason away its plain import. They come from him who is alike the way, the truth, and the life; who is willing to quicken us with that life which he has in himself; that life which alone is eternal, and without which we have no life in us; that is, no life which, compared with that, is worthy of the name. True, his words are very solemn, but the strait gate is as yet open; true, there is a broad way, but the broad way may still be shunned. Why will we refuse immortal life?

May the author and giver of all good incline us to take the narrow way. It is lit by the rays of divine goodness; it runs by the river of life; the sweet flowers of hope and love bloom, and never wither, beside it; and if there be here and there some thorns and tangling briers, the bright prospect is still before us, and soon there is the paradise of bliss.—Bible Repository.

WOULD IT NOT BE WELL

To send the Crisis as a present to some friend who does not now take it? Send it for six months, and then perhaps that friend will be pleased to continue it, and send the pay himself for another volume. Many have done this and seen very happy results. It will make a nice New Year's present, and may be the means of their salvation. We think this would be one of the best means to reach the friends we love, who are not now the friends of Jesus. Try it. It can do no harm, and may do great good. Indeed, is it not our duty to do all in our power to lead as many as possible to the Savior?

IS IT RIGHT?

Is it right to send for poor preachers to hold meetings, and after they have labored faithfully for a number of days, not give them more that two-thirds enough to pay their traveling expenses? How can they pay rent, clothe and feed their families? Will any one take the affirmative of the question at the head of this article? "My brethren, these things ought not so to be." It makes our heart sad when we hear of such things.

It should be remembered that two dollars now will not go much further in a family than one before the war. If the preacher receives ten dollars a Sabbath now, it is about the same as five ten years ago.

Some may reason, that ten dollars for one day is large pay; but what the preacher receives for that one Sabbath day is all he gets for the week to pay traveling expenses and support his family.

Dear Brn., do you wish to send your minister away to his home with a sad heart? If not, do not keep him down to starving point, but make him comfortable like yourselves. This matter needs attention. Think of these things.

WORCESTER.

We enjoyed the privilege of spending the Sabbath, Nov. 22nd, with the church in Worcester, Mass. We have been acquainted with that church for some fourteen years, and we think we never saw it in a better state than the present time. The great reason, we think, is because its members are devising ways and means to spread the truth, and to help the poor and needy. They are doing much to aid in mission work in different parts of the country; while at the same time they are actively engaged in home work. They have prayer-meetings about every evening in the week; and several of the brethren go out and hold meetings in the adjoining districts and towns. They meet in their chapel at nine o'clock Sabbath morning for a prayer and conference meeting, and continue it till time for preaching. We noticed that they prayed much for the one who is to preach to them. This is as it should be; and not to do as is done in some places, come late to meeting, and then watch the preacher for the purpose of finding something in him to criticise.

Their pleasant and commodious chapel was crowded with attentive hearers, many of whom were well known for their intelligence and good report in society. The truth and light are spreading in the city, and new ones are continually becoming interested. Three were baptized at noon, and received sweet peace from the Lord.

During the past few Sabbaths, a Methodist minister has been examining our views of the Scripture, and his sermons have been reported by Bro. E. P. Woodward. We have consented to review them in December, in the Washburn Hall, which has been engaged for that purpose. The review is to begin Dec. 22nd.

GIVE AND RECEIVE.

It is well to give to the poor." He that hath pity upon the poor lendeth unto the Lord; and that which he hath given will he pay him again." Who is willing to lend a little to the Lord? He may be sure of pay.

The following is to the point:—

"A year last November," says a missionary agent, "I preached a missionary sermon in the town of ——, and took a subscription. A physician subscribed and paid $5.00. A gentleman standing by told me that the $5.00 was all he had or was worth; that he had lost his property and paid up his debts and moved into town to commence practice, with no other resource than that five dollar bill. He and his wife were obliged to board out, as he was not able to keep house. I resolved at once I would keep watch of that man and see what the Lord would do with him. About a year after this interview I visited the place again, and put up with this physician. I found him keeping house in good style. In conversation with him I brought up the duty of christian benevolence, and spoke of God's faithfulness to fulfil his promises to the liberal. He told me he knew a physician who, the last year, gave away the last five dollars he had in the world, resolving to trust the Lord for the future. During the next summer, while the cholera raged in the country, by a series of events guided, as he believed, by the providence of God, most of the practice was thrown into the hands of this physician, and he had taken in more than $2,500.

I told him I knew him to be the man referred to, and that I had been keeping watch to see what the Lord would do with him. We might speak of numerous instances that have come under our own observation; but the following instance must suffice. Last summer we heard Joseph Mackey, of New York city, relate something of his experience upon this point. He stated that in the three years since he had been converted, he supposed he had given away to religious and benevolent purposes over $12,000, and so far from becoming poorer thereby, his business had increased in value unprecedently, and that his property was then worth immensely more than at the time of his conversion."

THE NATIONAL CHRISTIAN CONVENTION.

We wish to say a word more about the late National Christian Convention, held in New York, Nov. 17th, 18th, and 19th, some report of which was in the last Crisis. So far as we could judge, we think it was a move in the right direction. It was not a sectarian gathering of some particular denomination, to devise means to spread the views of their denomination; but a meeting composed of christians from all denominations who feel anxious to see some more effective means adopted for the salvation of the people, than those now in operation among the popular churches. There was much plain talk about the low state of nominal christendom, and an honest inquiry into the cause of the cold formality that now prevails. There appeared to be a union of feeling on the subject, and a deep impression that something must be done immediately, or the people would soon drift into infidelity beyond the reach of christianity as now exhibited in the churches. Able men were present from England, France and Italy; men who seemed in earnest to have something more done to save sinners than has been for the past few years. There were those who could relate rich experiences, and very encouraging results from extra efforts to save the most abandoned in the highways and hedges, in the most degraded streets and lanes of the great cities. There were men who have a faith that shows itself by works, accompanied by the blessing of the Lord in the conversion of wicked men and women. It was a pleasing sight thus to see the active men and women from the different churches uniting in love to labor for the salvation of the unconverted.

It is now purposed to have a WORLD'S CONVENTION in New York next year, to which all christians will be invited; and especially all who are called to preach the everlasting gospel. This will be a very important meeting. Noble-minded men are beginning to see that sectarianism is miserably wrong, and is in direct opposition to the prayer of Jesus for his children, "that they all may be ONE, as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be one in us; that the world may believe that thou hast sent me."

It has been one of Satan's special efforts to divide up the church of Christ into a multitude of sects, in order to cripple their influence, and cause the world to disbelieve in the christian religion, because of the strong sectarian, or party feeling manifested by the professed followers of the Savior. Satan has had great success in this direction, and nearly destroyed the vitality in all the sectarian bodies. Many are now waking up to see the devices of the seducer, and are inquiring what can be done to remedy the evil? But one answer can be given,—break down the sectarian walls, and let all the true disciples of Jesus come together in each town, village, and city, and unite as the church of CHRIST; not as a Baptist, Methodist, Congregationalist, Adventist, or Presbyterian church; and let the church in each place have no creed but the BIBLE, and no test of fellowship but christian character. Of course, those who have sectarian bigotry will oppose such a movement, but the Spirit of the Most High will be upon those who engage in the glorious work.

In thus uniting in Christ, no true believer gives up his peculiar views on doctrinal points, which may have caused him to unite with some particular sect; but in the union he says I love Jesus and his true children more than my peculiar views, and will allow my brother to think as he pleases on disputed points of doctrine concerning which good men differ.

We should think it very strange to see a loving, happy family divide and scatter to the four winds, because some of its members happened to think differently from the others. We should say that the family ties and interests, and their love and union, should never be severed by such petty things; how much more reason for undivided union in the family of Christ.

It is often truthfully remarked that all real christians love each other, though they may think differently on some doctrinal points. They are not the ones who create sects; but they are those who become lukewarm in the service of Christ, and then have just religion enough to contend about doctrines, and cause divisions, and consequent ruin of the life and power of religion in the hearts of all who partake of that contentious spirit. This results in a division, a new meeting, and the true followers of Jesus are left to mourn in sadness over the desolations that follow. All will admit these facts. Now what shall be done? Shall we assist the Devil any longer in such work? We are sure that every real lover of Jesus will say no with emphasis. But the inquiry comes, How can this evil be remedied? It cannot be done by one denomination or sect, but by a union of all the christians in the various sects. We do not expect they will do it till they are made to feel the necessity of it, and to see that all sectarianism is opposed to the spirit and teaching of Jesus.

The National Christian Convention was a step in the right direction. The necessity is being felt. The Lord is stirring up his children in all parts of the world on this subject; and dear brethren who are looking for the speedy coming of Jesus, let us not be backward in this important work. We are sorry to be obliged to say that we have seen some of the most rigid sectarianism among those who believe just as we advocate. Much of our influence for good has been lost in consequence. Will not the past suffice? Let us be willing to take the front rank in helping to pull down sectarian walls, by showing that we can unite and labor with all who love Jesus. This work can be carried forward only in kindness to all; with long-suffering, gentleness, meekness, and much patience and forbearance. But whoever engages in this work may be sure of the blessing of the Lord upon his efforts.

How shall we begin? First, let some christians from different denominations get together and talk over this matter; and then appoint a union prayer-meeting, and invite every body to come who loves Jesus, and all who wish to become his followers. When together, do not discuss differences of opinion on doctrine, but at once begin to labor for the salvation of sinners. Two blessed results will follow: the christians will find their love for each other rapidly increasing, and sinners will be inquiring what shall we do to be saved? Such meetings will glorify the Lord, and build up his church. Those who have the most truth and the strongest love for Jesus will be the ones who will carry the prevailing influence. No one will have to make any compromise of truth, when he consents to unite and labor with all who love the Savior; he is only extending his influence for good.

It may be inquired what will become of those who are so sectarian and bigoted, that they will not unite to labor with any who differ from them on certain points of doctrine, no matter how much they love the dear Savior? Such must remain as they are till they freeze up entirely, or consent to come to unite with those who truly love Jesus and his appearing.

We believe the time has come for all true christians to unite in love, and prepare for "the marriage supper of the Lamb." They are not ready so long as they are divided and separated by the spirit of sectarianism. Such a spirit is carnal. It savors not of Christ. Satan knows it well, and will do all in his power to prevent christian union. He will whisper, "You will lose your identity." "You will be making a compromise with error." Not a bit of it. Get behind me Satan, should be the response of every true disciple of Jesus. Let us take a bold position on this important subject, and made a grand rally for the King of kings. Let us set good examples. Where there are two or three congregations in one city or village with hardly means enough to sustain one meeting, let the true friends of the Lord take this matter into immediate consideration, and unite together in a union prayer-meeting, and ask the Lord to revive his work, and bring all his children into happy communion with each other. If any stay away because of sectarian feeling, treat them with much kindness and love, and thus soften and melt away their prejudice.

Our King is coming soon, but how few seem ready to meet him, Something must be done to remove sectarian walls before we can expect to see the bride ready to meet the heavenly Bridegroom. Come, let us all be willing to unite with every one who truly loves Jesus, if he does not think just as we do about all doctrtnal points. We cannot convince them we are right by pushing off from their company. Let us show a good spirit as well as a good doctrine; for if we have not the Spirit of Christ, we are none of his.

"THE RELIGION OF RESPECTABILITY."

In the Advance of Oct. 25th, we find a sad and truthful statement of facts as to the condition of religion in New York city. The same progress is noticable in all other large cities. Unless something is done soon to assist the common people, they will be beyond the reach of the present religious organizations. Most of the church interest is now confined to the few members of their respective associations, rather than in seeking to save poor, lost sinners. The prayer is common, "O Lord, bless our church." Satan has made special efforts to make each church so sectarian, that it only seeks to build up a party interest, that shall cause it to excel in wealth and power. Whenever this is the case, a church must let go of the arm of her Beloved, and sink into a cold, dead formality.

Under the head of "THE RELIGION OF RESPECTABILITY, the Advance takes the following from the New York Church Union:—

"Something is the matter with the christianity of New York. It does not do the work for which it was established. True, it builds costly temples, and is clothed in purple and fine linen, and fares sumptuously every day. True, it numbers some three hundred congregations all told, and has two thousand clergymen as ministers in New York. True, it gives bountifully. Madison Square congregation over $100,000 last year. True, there are many schools of the prophets supported by the church in New York, and Sabbath schools abound. True, there is no lack of prayer. Fulton street pours forth its refreshing and never-failing fountain these eleven years, and there are 60,000 enlisted soldiers in the army of the church in New York. The church in New York is a failure, because respectability is the god of the same church. The aim of every young clergyman seems to be to get as near to the most respectable point in the city, to get his church on Fifth Avenue if possible, or on some fashionable square, and not to rest day or night till it be accomplished. We do not deny that the ministers of the church in New York have many an hour of enjoyment in humble duty among the poor, but the main thing seems to be to get as far from Water street and the Five Points as possible, and to cluster, if possible around Zion's Hill. One after the other of evangelical clergymen have prevailed upon their people to move up town out of the miserable infected districts.

It is almost universally claimed by those who have deserted the lower wards of the city, that they might have allowed all these costly churches to have stood to this day and remained open as churches for worship each Sunday, but the people would not come to church. For ten years John Allen has been selling bad rum and worse souls to perdition, and the church bell has sounded in his ears every Sunday. Half the people that attend down-town churches now are strangers, and a majority of the remnant are from another part of the city. The people in the lower wards are wretched enough. They are poor, blind and naked; they want christianity in all its primitive healing qualities badly enough, but they don't want the christianity of Fifth Avenue, or of up-town. Take two hundred such jail-birds as Tommy Hadden and Kit Burns and empty them down in any up-town fashionable church, and lo! what a scamper there would be."

WHAT DOES IT MEAN?

The inquiry is being seriously made, What is the meaning of such a multitude of earthquake shocks and subterranean rumblings? These things make stout hearts quail. Says a New York daily:

"What is to be the end of these earthquake shocks and subterranean rumblings of which accounts are reaching us from all parts of America and Europe? Last week, we learned of renewed movements in California, tremors in South Carolina and shocks in England. Now we hear of movements as close at hand as New Jersey; while by the cable we hear of a violent shock at Bucharest, in the Danubian Principalities, and we are also informed that Vesuvius has become very agitated, and a new cone has been formed, from which streams of lava are being ejected. At latest advices from the coast of South America the earth there was still in a state of perturbation, and there was constant dread of another such shattering as lately occurred. From the continents of Africa and Asia we have had no earthquake news, but the absence of telegraphs and other means of rapid communication there may account for the want of news of a character similar to that which has reached us from various parts of the continents of Europe and North and South America. No speculations about these extensive and ominous movements of the earth's crust are of any value. If they do not show that the world is coming to an end, they certainly show that it is being shaken by some force possessed of a power sufficiently tremendous to shatter its solid structure in a way altogether beyond human calculation. But puny man is helpless before it. We cannot discover the agency at whose mercy we are placed, nor could we in any way control it if it were within our knowledge."

ROCHESTER.

BRO. GRANT:—We returned to this place after an absence of six weeks, and found the church still prospering and rejoicing in hope. The congregation is increased, and the Sabbath school is especially flourishing, though we could not enjoy it with them, as we were called to administer the ordinance of baptism. The church is fully awake to the necessity of having a church building, and we hope they may succeed. Missionary labor seems to be the especial call of those converted here, either at home or abroad; and this is just as it should be every where. One was baptized a few weeks ago, and has started; another goes this week to Michigan; another with his wife to Florida; and so the good seed sown in Rochester, is being scattered by persons, by paper, and tracts, in all lands. May the Lord give the increase. And yet they keep coming. How blessed the proclamation, "Whosoever will, let him take the waters of life freely."

ANTICHRIST.

"Straws show which way," etc.

BRO. GRANT:—I send you the following from Dr. Robinson's Calmet, pp. 71, 72.

G. W. S.

"The council of Florence (A. D. 1105.) condemned Fluentius, bishop of that city, for maintaining that antichrist was then born. Abbot Joachim, who lived in the twelfth century, pretended that antichrist was to appear in the sixtieth year of his time. Arnaud de Vileneuve said, antichrist would come A. D. 1326; Francis Melet said, in A. D. 1530, or 1540; John of Paris, A. D. 1560; Cardinal de Cusa, A. D. 1730, or 1734; Peter Daille was of opinion, that, according to his calculations, he must appear in A. D. 1789; Jerome Cardan in A. D. 1800; John Pico, of Mirandola, in A. D. 1994. Events have already confuted the generality of these predictions; and we may affirm, without rashness, that the rest are not superior in certainty.

A tradition seems to have been received among the ancients, that antichrist should be born of some Jewish family, and of the tribe of Dan. The most ancient commentators on the Revelation were of opinion that John's ommission of the name of Dan, in his enumeration of the tribes of Israel, Rev. 7: 5, proceeded from his foreknowledge that antichrist should arise from this tribe, since the Jews are no longer in Judea, or, at least, no longer masters of that country. Why, he will come, say these fathers, from the other side of the Euphrates, from Babylonia, where some suppose that the remainder of the ten tribes (and in particular of the tribe of Dan,) subsists still. This opinion is followed by almost all who have written since Jerome, in whose time it was common.

As to the parents of antichrist, interpreters are not agreed. Some think his father will be a devil, and his mother some corrupt woman; others think that antichrist will be himself a devil incarnate. Hilary thought that Satan would appear in the person of antichrist, and endeavor to persuade the world that he is God, by working false miracles. As our Lord was born of a virgin, says Hippolytus, so will antichrist boast of having derived his birth from a virgin also; but whereas the Son of God took upon him REAL FLESH, antichrist, says the author, will assume only the appearance, the image, or phantom of flesh."

THE NORWAY MISSION.

FROM BRO. BENDIXON.

BRO. GRANT:—As I am yet living, struggling for the light, I will not delay of writing to you a few lines, and inform you how I am getting along, as often as I have time and opportunity. I bless the Lord, dear Bro., for his abundant grace to me. Although almost in a barren land, he leads me in green pastures very often; also through many trials, sorrows and difficulties; through evil and good reports, and much evil speaking. I am wonderfully sustained and strengthened by divine power. I can say truly, of my own precious experience, that my Lord is faithful to his promise: "Lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world." This, dear Bro., I have experienced, and my heart is moved with gratitude to my Father, whiie I am writing, O how confident should we be, in the midst of all the trials and sorrows of this miserable and sinful world, if our faith could be more child-like, to trust in our dear Savior. What cause have we to fear? Alas, what does all our fear and faithlessness issue from? Is it not because our love is so little and waxes so cold? Is it not because we do too little for our Master, that we love him so little? O, dear Bro., let me tell you of my own experience; the more we do for our beloved Master, the more our love grows warm and perfect. The more we love, the more we labor; and the more we labor, the more we love. I am confident, dear Bro., the more the sweat runs from our brow, in our Master's work, the more that heavenly dew from him shall flow into our hearts, and we shall be like the trees planted by the water brooks.

Concerning my mission, I can speak with the deepest feeling, and with the loudest praise to the Lord, when I look back on the few months since I came out here. What was my prospect then? Enemies on every side; all were afraid of me. There was all manner of speaking against me. Letters were sent abroad to warn the people to keep away from me, a backslider and a false prophet; and the people looked at me as a dangerous foe; but through all this, how the Lord kept me and blessed me wherever I went; and now, up to this day, I have been able, through the grace of God, to go through the storms and whirlwind that encompassed me about, and to proclaim the glad tidings of our soon returning King, and the fulfillment of our blessed hope. What have been the results? O praise the Lord. I can truly say, the Lord has been with me. The enemy that arose in such fury against me has fallen back in the rear, and it is only now and then that I hear his voice above the walls. The best of all is, souls have been converted, and not a few. In Drobak (a little town about twenty-six miles from Christiana, where I now have taken up my abode), where they first sent letters to warn the people against me, and some Laodicean christians came to preach and give advice; how does it look now? Praise the Lord, we are a little, healthy looking flock, gathered together, and waiting for the Lord; and some of these were half-dead professors when I came here, who were made afraid by what they heard about me. They nearly lost their breath and died; but look at them now. Come now and tell them anything about that false prophet and backslider, Bendixon, and let me tell you, Bro., that they are ready to give a reason for their hope which is in them, as well as in me. And so it goes on wherever I have been. Souls have been awakened, and in the regions where I have traveled, the people are stirred up, and many have become earnest for their soul's salvation. In Drobak we had no place for our meetings. The schoolrooms were closed against us, and the magistrates did all they could to hinder me; but I laid the matter before the Lord, and told the brethren that if we would pray in faith, and live in love, the Lord would give us a meeting-room; and he has done so already. Praise his holy name. He knew that we were poor, and had nothing but what he gives us each day; and so he went and knocked at a man's door, to whom he had given the loan of some property, and told him that he needed some of it for a short time, because he had some poor children walking about, without a house over their heads; and this man, although a great lover of the things of this world, and a total backslider from God, did not shut his door against the Lord, but obedient to the Master's calling he became converted, and when he gave his heart to the Lord, he gave what he had to the Lord's disposition, and then soon after he was convinced that he was to open his house to the Lord's servant. In his house he had two large rooms, for which he had a nice income; but he was the Lord's, and the rooms too. The Lord has given us these rooms, the man, his wife, two of his servant girls, one of the working men, and the others are under conviction. Praise the Lord. These two rooms will hold about two hundred persons, and when we have preaching they are filled to overflowing, and many stand outside. So the Lord prospers us here in this barren, dark, death-shadowed land. The Lord pour out his Spirit upon us, is my constant prayer.

But one thing, dear Bro., grieves me; and that is that I am alone, so far as I know, to proclaim these precious truths. The chief-priest in Christiana has lately begun to preach on the speedy coming of Christ; but what is this, where the Bible truth is mixed up with so much error? What am I to do? It burdens me every day, when I see the people groping in darkness, and the children growing up worse than living devils. What am I to do here, where I am almost alone, as it seems to me? This is the question that goes up from my heart, when I see my inability to travel all over the country. The Lord has told me—One thing more you can do, you can write; and how glad I am that I can. As soon as I get any means, if time lasts, I will commence to publish a paper, and some tracts, based on Bible truth, and send these silent preachers far and wide, as the Lord may please to open the way. O that the Lord may bless this our united effort for his own glory and kingdom.

One thing more we can do besides; we can begin a Sunday School, and this I intend to commence next Sunday, if the Lord please; for the children in this town are worse than I ever saw them in New York. The Lord help, is the sigh of my heart. I have bought testaments and tracts with the money I could spare, and sell them for the same price I pay for them, or give them away where they have no money. Last Wednesday I had a meeting for children. I trust that the seed sown will not be without fruit.

Yesterday (Sunday) a great number of children came again to attend the service. God bless his own truth, is my prayer. The brethren and sisters are all willing to take hold of the work.

This is, in short, the true state of things at present. I have a great deal more to write to you about, but have not time now. I am willing to be hungry for the Lord's sake, to bear an evil name, to be called a fool and a fanatic; in short, to be all that the world and the devil hate. O glory to God for such a glorious and high calling. Do not forget us in Norway. The brethren and sisters send you their heartiest greeting, as fellow heirs to the same glorious kingdom; my family likewise; and, lastly, receive my greeting, as one in the blessed hope of the speedy coming of Christ. O. BENDIXON.

Drobak, Norway, Nov. 11th, 1868.

P. S.—Has Sister Pearson, 97 Monroe St., New York, received my letter? Has Bro. Brown, Rahway, N. J., received my letter? Has Bro. Raymond, Fair Haven, received my letter? or any other? Has Bro. J. V. Himes received my letter, where I asked him for my papers? Please answer through the Crisis, or write to me, and I shall be very glad.

ARE INFANTS SAVED?

Who that has ever stood by the grave of a little child, has not in his sadness remembered the beautiful teachings of the loving Savior, that "of such is the kingdom of heaven." And again the consoling declaration of the prophet, thy children "shall come again from the land of the enemy."

There is a class of theologians of the present day who take a position that virtually denies the resurrection of children. If the position that none will be raised except believers, be a correct one, it must be apparent to all that children being incapable of exercising faith must be left in the grave. While some have accepted the above conclusion, others have been startled by a view of the consequences, and have said they must be raised, because God has said in passages above quoted, that it shall be so. But we ask under what law? for God has never said that he would raise any in opposition to any established law. The law of death was fixed by God himself, while the law of life was revealed by Jesus Christ. The operation of either of these laws must be universal, unless there is a suspension or change in them; and if such is the case, we ask where is it recorded? We think the law governing the salvation of man is laid down in the apostolic declaration, found in 1 Tim. 4: 10, "For therefore we both labor and suffer reproach, because we trust in the living God, (God the Savior,) who is the Savior of all men, specially of those that believe." Bloomfield translates thus: "Because our hope and trust is in the promises of God."

We understand the apostle to teach, that all men in Adam lost their right to life, and consequently are the subjects of death, and would remain forever dead, were not some way devised, by which God could be just and the justifier of him that believeth in Jesus.

The law of life was revealed in Christ Jesus, and by his death he became the Savior of all men from the Adamic penalty, and in the all are comprehended the children. Now exempted from all claims for the violation of the Adamic laws, every person is placed on the same merit or demerit of his own acts; or, in short, as Adam was before he sinned. Who then shall suffer a penalty? Surely none but those, who, as free moral agents, have violated the law; and as children are innocent before God, they shall come forth "from the land of the enmy," under this law; viz., "the law of the spirit of life in Christ Jesus," which "hath made" us "free from the law of sin and death."

In regard to those who have by their own acts become sinners, and have not accepted Christ, there can be no eternal life; but to those who do accept him, the special salvation becomes applicable, and they are saved from effect of personal transgression, and receive eternal life. Thus the law of God is honored, children are saved, and we may say to bereaved parents, "Refrain thy voice from weeping, and thine eyes from tears, for thy . . . . children shall come again to their own border."

☞ A physician attributes much of the sickness in winter to the bad effects of coal gas. He says in nine out of ten houses that he enters he notices coal gas in the air they breathe. Many times he finds the damper in the stove pipe closed to save coal, and the result is a room full of gas, not noticed by the inmates, perhaps, but by those who come in from the fresh air.

TRUTH ONWARDS.

DEAR BRN.:—This is a favored time for the lovers of Christ and his word. I have never seen a time when I thought so much more could be done by faith and corresponding effort as the present. Open doors and hearts are to be found everywhere. There seems to be a growing desire, a hungering for the living word; and our work, under God, is to convert men. This is the time to improve every opportunity to teach, preach, exhort, and use every possible means to reach the people.

I have recently visited some towns in Conn., a number in a Mass., and have just returned after two weeks spent in Maine. The solicitations for labor are urgent. "Come over and help us," "come you must stay," is the continual cry from every quarter. Some among all denominations are becoming interested in our exposition of the Bible. Tradition yields and gives way, truth triumphs gloriously, and has free course. Some are brought to the experimental knowledge of the truth, and angels, with all the good, rejoice together. Amen. Glory to God in the highest.

Then we can add to this the signs that glory will soon be revealed, that redemption will soon be consummated, with the door of Paradise thrown wide open, and all the good bid a hearty welcome, with the sweet words, "Come home."

The certainty is indicated by the earthquakes which are so terrific in their visits, which without a moment's warning, level cities, villages, and buildings to the earth. The tidal waves with their roaring, the upheaving of the moral elements, all, all speak the judgment coming. Then let us all arise in the majesty of the word of God, which is mighty to the saving of all who can be induced to believe it.

Thine, L. BOUTELL.

MASS. STATE QUARTERLY CONF. REPORT.

Conference met pursuant to the call of the Pres., in Library Hall, Chelsea, Tuesday evening, Oct. 20th. We enjoyed an excellent prayer-meeting. Adjourned to meet at 2 P. M. to-morrow.

Wendesday, 2 P. M. After spending an hour in prayer and conference, Bro. J. W. Brittan preached. In the evening met for prayer and preaching.

Thursday, 9 A. M. Met for business. The Clerk being absent, Bro. C. Goodrich was chosen to act in that capacity.

Voted, That a committee of three be chosen by the Chair to prepare business for the conference. The following Brn. were chosen as that committee: C. Goodrich, S. W. Thurber, and E. G. Kingsbury, who soon reported the following:

1st. To hear the reports of preachers and delegates. 2nd. To consider the propriety of adopting some system whereby we may bring the forces into the field, so as to work more efficiently to build up the cause of Christ. 3d. To transact such other business as may legitimately be brought before the conference.

The following preachers reported their labors:—L. Boutell, S. W. Thurber, Geo. A. Streeter, J. S. White, J. W. Brittan, C. H. Sweet, G. A. Brown, L. C. McKinstry, E. Morrell, M. Batchelor, J. T. Dixon, Jas. A. Young, C. Goodrich, G. L. Coburn, Jas. A. Libby, H. Munger, J. Couch, A. P. Moore, Elam Burnham.

Lest we take up too much space in our paper, I pass over these reports, with the exception of Bro. Burnham's, by saying that they were all encouraging. It has been reported that Bro. Burnham believed in the doctrine of the non-resurrection of the wicked dead; therefore I give his report. He said he felt "that the great truth of the soon coming of Jesus should be kept prominent; and we should labor to get ready and get people ready to meet that event. He never had said that he believed the wicked dead would not be raised. If Jesus had said all the dead saints should hear his voice and come forth, then he should preach it; but as Jesus did not say that, but did say 'all that are in the graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth,' he had to believe what Jesus said about it."

The following Brn., some of them delegates sent by the churches which they represented. (some were not sent, but being called upon) reported: Bro. Bradford reported Springfield church. Were prospering. Eight or nine converted since campmeeting. Fifty joined since the church was organized. All now in good condition. J. Kingsbury reported church at Charlestown. They had started a church there, and their prospects were good. The people seemed to be interested. E. G. Kingsbury reported Chelsea church. Church united and in working order. Had endeavored to get such men to preach to them as would build up the church. Quite a number of preachers lived in Chelsea, but there was no jealousy existing between them, and they get along well. The church had grown up amidst all opposition, and the Lord had been with them.

Bro. Field reported Westfield church:—Thought the church in that place was rising. Had been somewhat disturbed by the preaching of the non-resurrection of the wicked. Had come out from it, and God was blessing them. Had some conversions recently.

Bro. Lee reported Salem church. No evil report to bring. Bro. J. W. White labored with them some time last winter, and sowed good seed, which had sprung up and was bearing good fruit. Bro. Richardson reported New Market, N. H. Great change in that place. The people formerly were very much opposed to the truth. Now they seem to be convicted that we have got the truth.

Bro. Adams reported Lowell St. church. The church prospering. The Lord was with them, and some were coming in and receiving the truth of the Bible. Adjourned to meet Friday, at 9 A. M.

Friday, 9 A. M. Met pursuant to adjournment. After prayer by Bro. Streeter, a resolution was introduced, disapproving of the preaching of the non-reliving of the wicked dead, which was discussed by Brn. White, Thurber, Munger, Boutell, Goodrich, McKinstry and Streeter, which occupied the forenoon, and, on motion of Bro. Thurber, was referred to the following committee: J. S. White, H. Munger, and C. Goodrich. Adjourned to Saturday, 9 A. M.

Saturday, 9 A. M. Met pursuant to adjournment. Prayer by Bro. Couch. The following brethren were admitted as members of the conference: C. H. Sweet, J. S. White, J. A. Young, E. Morrill, A. P. Moore.

The committee offered the following preamble and resolution:—

"Whereas the preaching of the doctrine that there will be no resurrection to life of those who have done evil is a cause of discord, and is deadly in its influence on the spirituality of the church, therefore Resolved, That this conference disapproves of the preaching of this doctrine to the distraction and division of the church of God, and that we have no fellowship with such a course."

The resolution was discussed at length by Brn. White, Wendell, and others, when it passed by the following vote, the yeas and nays being called. Yeas, 14: Boutell, Couch, Sweet, Thurber, White, Munger, Goodrich, Moore, Morrill, Young,—preachers; Adams, Field, Kingsbury, Maress,—delegates. Nays, 3: Wendell and Burnham (preachers); Lee (delegate). Present, but not voting, L. C. McKinstry. Adjourned till 2 P. M.

2 P. M. Met pursuant to adjournment. Conference opened by prayer, after which the following resolution was presented and passed without discussion:—

"Resolved, That it is our duty to carry the glorious truth of the coming of the Lord and the resurrection of the dead into places where it has not been preached, so far as we are able, and that we proceed to raise funds for this purpose." Nearly fifty dollars were raised to give vitality to the first part of the resolution. Conference passed a vote of thanks to the church in Chelsea, for the hospitality extended to them during their sojourn.

Voted, To adjourn to the call of the President and Secretary.

The preaching during the conference, as a whole, was good; and although questions were discussed upon which the Brn. did not all agree, yet the best of feeling was manifested. The following Brn. preached: J. W. Brittan, Ira Morgan, of Ct., C. H. Sweet, M. Batchelor, J. Couch, H. Munger, and J. T. Dixon. The prayer-meetings were excellent, and all felt as though they could go forth with new courage to "fight the good fight of faith." Saturday evening some ten or more came forward, asking the prayers of the children of God. We trust that some seed was sown that will spring up and bear fruit to the glory of God.

Letters were received from Brn. E. Owen, L. T. Cunningham, and E. McCullock. We had no visitors at the conference, and this was very gratifying. All, whether preachers or people, were willing to take hold and work, and were interested in forwarding the work.

Voted, That a copy of the minutes of the conference be sent to the "World's Crisis" for publication.

C. Goodrich, Acting Secretary.

LONG SERMONS.

Something has been said in the Crisis of late concerning long sermons. Those who have written upon the subject seem to think that many of our preachers are too lengthy, and they advise us to be short. Not long since, I had the pleasure of listening to one of these writers, and to my surprise, he occupied considerably more than an hour. Brethren, would it not be well to practice in the pulpit what you preach through the Crisis?

Correspondence.

From Bro. A. N. Seymour.

Bro. Grant:—I have just returned from Argos, Ind., where by request of many friends I have been to preach the "word of life"; and the good seed sown among the friends, and others who came out to hear, I trust will bear much fruit, and shed a savory influence over all. We had a faithful hearing. The church here and in the surrounding country number about one hundred, and many of them are men of ability and means. They have built them a new and neat church, forty by sixty feet, in which they meet to worship God, Brn. Corberly, Barnhill, and Carter, who live among them, preach for them more or less. They are men of ability, and of good report. Bro. S. A. Chaplin, of Pierceton, Ind., preaches to them also once a month, and has done nearly twenty years past. He is a good soldier, and wears well. They love him now as at the beginning. Such are the men we love and admire, and the cause needs more of the same pattern. For a time past some influences have come among them detrimental to their peace and prosperity; but we trust that those noble hearts, which have been united so long in the bonds of love and christian sympathy, will not allow differences of opinion on minor points, at this late hour, to disadjust their confidence in each other, or cause any alienation of feeling. "Let brotherly love continue," says Paul. Perfect love is the bond of union; and so long as that element of christianity is sought for and ardently sustained, it is hard for the Devil to sow discord, and cause division, coldness, and feelings of discontent.

We enjoyed our visit among these dear friends much; and the meeting, as one Bro. remarked, was the best they had enjoyed for years. May the good Lord greatly multiply such blessed seasons in their midst, for they are the life of the church, and the means that produce conviction upon lost sinners, and lead them to Christ. Should all the members of this church love, admire, and sympathise with each other, as our dear Bro. and Sr. Railsback and family do, who reside in Argos, I am quite sure there would be no schism in the body. They have a family of eight children, seven sons and one daughter. Six of the sons are married and settled near by, and all these children and their wives are rejoicing in the blessed hope. May they continue sowing to the Spirit, that all may be saved when Jesus comes to make up his jewels. May God's blessing attend and extend its sanctifying influence over all the dear saints in that church. May the Lord bless them for their liberality in meeting our necessities. We left them, praying that God's mercy and love might protect them, and that soon we might all meet in the kingdom, where love and friendship know no reverses or separation. Praise the Lord for such a precious hope.

Upon our return home, we visited Assumption Prairie, Lakeville, and Middlebury, Ind., preaching to them, and enjoyed a refresing visit. All appear to be stedfast, watching opportunities to spread abroad the knowledge of salvation. Well, Bro. Grant, I will close by saying that my heart is bound up in the things of the kingdom, and more and more do I love and admire the great plan of salvation proffered to the world by the benevolence and love of our heavenly Father. Yours in expectation of soon seeing Jesus,

Reading, Mich. A. N. Seymour.

Bro. C. C. Ramsey, Chicago, Nov. 16th, writes:—"I received a line from you this morning, and hasten to reply. You inquire, 'How goes the battle?' I reply, It is in our favor. Some of Satan's ranks are continually deserting and joining the army of the Lord. One young man, who has been a traveling agent for some of the first houses, lost his place because he fell into bad habits, and became intemperate and vile; but now he has turned to the Lord, and found peace. Others are seeking. We do not have preaching every night, but we have meetings in three parts of the city, one in the South, one on Blue Island Avenue, and one at my house. All report glorious results. Thursday evening, we have a grand rally of all at the chapel; Friday evening also, at the same places in different parts of the city. Yesterday was a blessed day. I buried seven in baptism. I have no one with me. Bro. Clark went the next week after you did."

Bro. Chas. Lowe, Rochester, N. H., Nov. 20th, writes:—"I write to let you know that I have come into the blessed hope. It is now about three weeks since I came across two brothers in the same hope, in South Paris, Me., and there the Lord opened my eyes to see, and my heart to receive the truth. All glory to God.—Amen. I was babtized in the river at Rochester, N. H., a week last Tuesday. I am now on my way down South on foot, as I can not go any other way just now. I desire to be remembered to all the dear brothers and sisters, with many thanks for their kindness to me. I ask them to pray much for me, that God would grant me grace to continue his faithful servant unto the end, and that he may bless my labors among the people, and that I may speak the whole truth as it is in Jesus."

Obituaries.

Winchester. Died very suddenly, Nov. 11th, in the depot at Rutland, Vt., while on his way to Cleaveland Ohio, Bro. Elhanan Winchester, of Westmoreland, N. H., aged seventy-six years and eleven months.

He was a nephew of the Rev. Elhanan Winchester, of some note as a preacher and writer on the prophecies, whose name he bore. He was a member of the Christian Church in this place for many years; but for a number of years past he has been in full sympathy with the Advent people. He was deeply interested in the doctrine as advocated in the Crisis, which was the only paper he cared to read for several years. He hoped for immortality only through Christ at the resurrection of the just. Discourse at the funeral by the writer, from Luke 12: 40. Jehiel Claflin.

Blaisdell. Died in Laconia, N. H., Sept. 26th, 1868, of quick consumption, Sr. Susan Blaisdell, aged ninety-five years and five months.

This aged pilgrim and christian mother, although blind, retained her mental faculties to the last, and could converse intelligently of the dark day, which she could distinctly remember. It may be said of her, as she lived the life, so she died the death of the righteous. She leaves a daughter and several grandchildren, who truly mourn for one who was lovely in her life, and whose place at their fireside is now empty. May they choose her God for their portion. M. S. Horne.

Watson. Died in Natick, R. I., August 10th, 1868, Mary B. Watson, aged thirty-nine years and ten days.

She bore her sickness with christian fortitude and patience. Her hope was in the resurrection of the dead at the coming of Christ, and this was a theme of great interest to her during her mortal pilgrimage. Her relatives, neighbors, and the little band of believers here, all feel her loss; but we expect to soon meet her in the paradise of God. The funeral services were conducted by Eld. A. Durfee. C. H. Sweet.

Smith. Died in Osage county, Kansas, on the Maraisdes Cygnes river, August 18th, 1868, Sherburne S. Smith, aged sixty-three years.

We have buried him in sadness, on one of nature's terraces in Kansas, in a lonely grave, resting under the benediction of those who die in the Lord, leaving twelve children orphans; but we cherish (in unison with him) the faith that Jesus has the only restorative power; and that soon his earthly repose shall be disturbed for a reliving with all the Lord's dead; and we earnestly cry, Great Life-Giver, speedily restore our dear parents from the embrace of death, and bring the sinless, painless, beautiful land of life. Susie H. Smith.

Clark. Died in Vernon, Vt., Aug. 19th, 1868, Bro. Samuel Clark, aged sixty-six years.

Bro. Clark was converted in Chicopee, some thirty years since, and joined the Baptist church. Some twenty years since he moved to Vernon, Vt., and became a believer in the blessed hope of soon seeing Jesus. He died in the hope of an early birth from the dead. He leaves a wife and five children to mourn their loss. Sumner Titus.

Harrington. Died in Blandford, Sept. 21st, infant daughter of Thomas and Lucelia Harrington.

A discourse from Isa. 65: 20.

Also, Nov. 10th, of quick consumption, Lucelia, third wife of Thomas Harrington, aged eighteen years.

A discourse from Eccl. 9: 5, by her request. They rest in hope. S. S. Brazee.

Cooke. Died in Hydeville, Vt., Nov. 17th, 1868, of consumption, Sally M., wife of Wm. Cooke, aged seventy years and seven months.

S. G. Mathewson.

☞ The strongest and cheapest boots and shoes sometimes fail, owing to the shrinking of the wooden pegs. A very simple remedy is to rub petroleum along the line where the upper leather is joined to the sole. When the pegs are saturated with this oil they resist the action of wet and dry weather.

☞ A convenient method of cleaning a jar, bucket, tub or barrel is to place a small quantity of lime on the bottom, and then slacken it with hot water in which as much salt has been dissolved as it will take up. It will purify it like a charm. The vessel should be covered to keep the steam in.

☞ The death penalty was abolished in Belgium by King Leopold. Recently the King of Sweden has refused to sign the death warrant of a woman guilty of poisoning, and announces his determination not to sign another.

☞ Louis Napoleon is buying war material right and left. The granaries, warehouses and arsenals of the empire are filled to overflowing; still the work goes on.

☞ Letters from Rome report that the Roman Government has come to a favorable understanding with the Emperor Napoleon in regard to Italy.

☞ President Grant will have in his gift 53,000 offices, with $30,000,000 annual salaries, and an indefinite amount of "pickings."

☞ A financial panic is prevailing in St. John, N. B. The agent of the St. Stephens Bank is bankrupt and in jail, and the bank suspended yesterday, after standing the run upon it till noon.

☞ There were slight evidences of an earthquake observed at Middleboro, a few days ago, according to a correspondent of the New Bedford Standard.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

Cable News.

London, Nov. 29. Apprehensions of bloodshed in Spain are increasing. It is thought that a collision between the Monarchists and Republicans will be an inevitable result of the excited political contest now in progress. Meantime the patriotic fervor of the nation is unabated.

Florence, Nov. 29. Quite a serious outbreak had occurred at Bologna, and new troubles were feared. The disturbance originated through the refusal of the peasants to pay their taxes. Two persons have been killed and seven badly wounded.

Dispatches have been received announcing that Mt. Etna, in Sicily, is in a state of eruption.

London, Nov. 30. It is creditably stated that the Emperor Napoleon is suffering from an attack of diabetus, that he cannot give his full attention to business, and that the Empress daily takes a large share in the details of administration, relieving the Emperor of many of his burdens.

Iron Fortifications and Great Guns.—A letter from Berlin says: "The success which attended the experiments of last summer has induced the Prussian government to employ large blocks of hard cast-metal for the purposes of fortification. A foundry has been established with this object on the artillery experimental ground, by which arrangement it is not necessary to move its ponderous productions any very great distance, whenever it is thought advisable to give Mr. Krupp an opportunity of knocking them to pieces, or endeavoring to do so. A colossal casting, weighing ninety tons, was made there last Friday, in the presence of the Minister of War and numerous military and naval officers, and is unquestionably by far the greatest that has ever been attempted on the Continent. What is considered still more remarkable than the size of this casting was the very short time required for the process. The metal was melted in three large furnaces in the short space of three hours, but the actual casting was completed in forty-five seconds.

The report adds, by way of comparison, that the casting of a steam hammer weighing one hundred tons required in England forty-eight hours.

A hydraulic crane is used for moving these large masses, and does its work so easily that a shield weighing forty tons has been moved several hundred yards and placed on the framework intended to receive it in half an hour. The plates are not fastened together by bolts or screws, but cast in such a shape as to dovetail into each other. It is intended to employ a combination of iron, earthwork and masonry in the new forts, and to adopt the improved methods in the coast defences first, as they are exposed to the heaviest fire.

The Woolwich gun, which has been competing at Berlin with Mr. Krupp's, has shown a deep crack after the two hundred and sixty-fourth round, whereas Krupp's gun has remained unscathed after four hundred rounds, and his friends are of course jubilant. On the other hand, an English seven-inch plate, three inches of steel on four inches of iron, from the Cyclops Works, Sheffield, was too much for Krupp's ninety-six pounder, at least only the point of the shot came through. It has been stated since that only a reduced charge of powder was used on this occasion. The same projectile, however, and with a similar reduced charge, had knocked an eight-inch plate of Austrian manufacture all to pieces. Both Krupp and Borsig have offered to establish works for rolling plates in Prussia."

Terrible Colliery Explosion.—Wigan, England, Nov. 26.—A terrible explosion has occurred in the Arley Mine Colliery. Three hundred men were in the pit at the time, most, if not all, of whom have perished. Thirty-two bodies have thus far been recovered. Hundreds of relatives of the dead are gathered at the mouth of the pit and the scene is heart rending.

Items.

☞ A letter from Russia in the Vienna Presse gives a melancholy picture of the present condition of that country. The harvest in Russia is insufficient for the wants of the population, and incendiary fires and thefts are of constant occurrence. In the government of Viadimir four hundred and fifty thousand roubles have been stolen out of the public chest, and similar robberies have been discovered in Riazan, where fifty-six thousand roubles are deficient, and at Moscow, where the loss amounts to forty-five roubles. These thefts are generally ascribed to officials, and several of them have been dismissed in consequence. At Nijni-Novgorod forged fifty-rouble notes have circulated in such quantities that several merchants have sustained considerable losses.

☞ The Jesuits, who have been driven from almost every country of Europe, Catholic as well as Protestant, are coming to this country in large numbers. The Liberta Catholica says that 3429 Jesuits are now employed in missionary work, and it seems that of these there are no less than 759 in the United States—including fathers, scholastics and brother coadjutors.

☞ It has been definitely decided to land the American end of the new French Atlantic Cable on a high knoll on the Duxbury shore, in Plymouth county, Mass. The town has given a lot of land for the terminus, which is now held by Professors Pierce and Whiting of the coast survey, as trustees. From Duxbury the cable will of course communicate with New York by means of land wires.

☞ There has never been a period in the existence of Louisville, Ky., (says the Journal,) when so many workingmen were thrown upon their own resources as at this tame. It is estimated that fully three thousand mechanics and laborers of various occupations are now unemployed.

☞ There was a distinct shock of earthquake felt on Staten Island on Sunday last. A feeling of dizziness was experienced by many, who lost no time in getting out of their houses as soon as their bewildered senses would allow them.

☞ Roman trains now carry ten Pontifical carbineers in a compartment by the engine, and as many at the rear, all ready at a moment's notice for action with the brigands. Moreover, all the stations are guarded day and night.

A Welcome.

To the "N. Y. State Christian Conference," soon to convene at Honeoye, Ontario Co., N. Y. We heartily welcome you to our midst; not only the ministry, but all lovers of truth are invited to come and engage with us in the work of God. Those coming through Rochester will take the cars at the Genesee Valley depot, and stop at Livonia station, on the Erie road. Honeoye is situated nine miles from the station; accessible by stages which leave for the station twice a day, returning in the afternoon and evening. Those who can, will do well to take the early trains, and arrive in time for the first stage, which leaves the station about noon. Inquire for Bro. A. C. Bishop, with whom I reside, only a few rods from the hall we occupy. Come, all who can, with praying hearts, to brave the difficulties of a somewhat tedious route. We shall welcome you with warm hearts and fires, and provide good, comfortable homes of entertainment, free of charge, without feeling that you are a burden.

N. B. Do not go to Honeoye Falls, as some have done through mistake, as they are two places, and in different counties.

In behalf of the church in Honeoye, Ontario Co., N. Y., E. S. Jennings.

Dedication.

The Lord willing, the new Second Advent Chapel at Bonny Eagle Falls, Me., will be dedicated to God's service on Thursday, Dec. 24th, 1868; after which will be continued a conference meeting the remainder of the week, and over the following Sabbath. Eld. Wm. H. Mitchell and others are expected to be present to preach the word. Brethren and sisters scattered abroad, and preaching brethren, are cordially invited to attend this meeting, and join with us to labor for the advancement of the cause of Christ and truth, and for the salvation of the perishing. Homes will be provided for all who may come.

In behalf of the church, T. P. T. Hampson.

Notice.

By invitation of the church at New Haven, Conn., the next quarterly meeting of the Conn. A. C. Conference will be held in Day's Hall, New Haven, Conn., commencing Wednesday evening, January 6th, 1869. We sincerely hope that all the churches will send delegates; and let all preaching brethren make an extra effort to be present. The place of meeting is accessible from all points by R. R. Come in the spirit and bring a blessing with you. Preaching first evening. L. F. Moore, Secretary.

Pine Swamp, Ct.

Providence permitting, a series of meetings will commence at Pine Swamp, Ct., Tuesday evening, Dec. 15th, to continue over Sunday, and perhaps longer. All who take an interest in the salvation of the perishing are invited to come and labor with us to this end. A. Elliott. C. H. Sweet.

The Devil's Harvest Time.

The Devil has special times to gather souls into his net. Winter is the most favorable time for him to reap in the churches, as the nights are long, and many give themselves up to pleasure and ease, rather than to study and work for Christ, to win souls to him. Let us be awake to aid all we can to discover Satan's snares, and elude his grasp. Now is the time to scatter that little sheet on Church Fairs and Levees, entitled "An Admonition." We have published ten thousand copies, and have a few thousands yet. Price, postpaid, $1.00 per one hundred copies, or 20 cts. per dozen.

Yarmouth, Me. I. C. Wellcome.

Advent Chris. Conf. of N. Y. State.

The Quarterly Advent Christian Conference of New York State will meet at Honeoye, Ontario Co., N. Y., Dec. 17th, 1868. Those who attend the conference will stop at Livonia Station, on the New York and Erie R. R., where teams will probably be in attendance to convey them to Honeoye. It is hoped there will be a full attendance.

J. R. Cooper, Secretary.

Conference.

The next regular quarterly meeting in Ohio, for the Norwalk and Fairfield districts, will be held at the latter place, in the Advent Chapel, on Saturday, at 1½ o'clock P. M., and Sunday at 10.30 A. M., of Dec. 5th and 6th. A full attendance is desired.

G. W. Stetson, Pastor.

Notice.

There will be a protracted meeting in Wrightville, Conn., commencing Nov. 29th, and holding through the following week. Brn. Wm. J. Ripley and B. Hitchcock are expected to be present to preach the word. A cordial invitation is extended to all to come and labor at this meeting for the salvation of perishing sinners. Wm. J. Ripley. B. Hitchcock.

German Tracts.

Bro. Reimer has a good supply. Send your orders to L. Reimer, 809 Coates Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

The Maine Tract Fund.

Wm. H. Mitchell, R. R. York, S. K. Partridge, } Society Officers.

It was resolved at the last annual conference that our ministers in the State raise, by subscription or otherwise, ten dollars each for the Maine Tract Fund for 1868. We hope the brethren and sisters will take hold of this matter with the ministry and do their part. All remittances and orders for tracts will be sent to the Agent,

J. A. Libby, West Poland, Maine.

Notice.

Those at the west wishing books, tracts, or charts, can be supplied at Rochester, N. Y., by addressing Dr. J. Naramore, (Eagle Block) Rochester, N. Y.

Appointments.

☞ We would say to our preaching Brethren that it is necessary we should receive their appointments as early as Tuesday Morning, as our paper goes to press about noon; otherwise they will not be inserted till the week following.

THE HEAVY END.

One aged woman used the really beautiful expression; "Christ totes the heavy end of my cross."

O, weary was the load I bore,
Dark seemed the way and without end;
No longer am I sad and sore,
"Christ bears the heavy end."

I never mind the burden now,
No more beneath its weight I bend,
But joyful to the cross I bow,
"Christ bears the heavy end."

O traveler in life's toilsome way,
Does not the simple message blend
The grace and truth of sacred lay?—
"Christ bears the heavy end."

Does not all sorrow grow more bright
Shared with the heavenly Friend?
From out the shadow comes forth light,—
"Christ bears the heavy end."

From cross to crown, upward ever,
Still let thy patient footsteps tend;
The unseen help shall fail thee never,—
"Christ bears the heavy end."

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCH OF NAPOLEON III.

BY M. D. W.

Mr. Abbott gives a very full and highly interesting account of Napoleon's mother, who was the daughter of Josephine by her first husband, Viscount Alexandre de Beauharnais, and also of her two sons, Napoleon Louis and Louis Napoleon. From this record we purpose to abbreviate a sketch.

After the marriage of Napoleon Bonaparte with Josephine, he treated Hortense with the same affection he would bestow upon his own child. She had formed an attachment for Duroc, one of the young and gallant soldiers of the republic, who afterwards became Grand Marshal of the Palace. Napoleon was intent on having them united in marriage, but Josephine opposed it strenuously. She was aware that many persons had been urging upon him the necessity of having an heir, and that her divorce had been contemplated. She thought to obviate it by a union of Hortense with Napoleon's brother Louis, whose affections had been placed on Emilie Beauharnais, cousin to Hortense. This marriage had been prevented by Napoleon, who thought it would be exceedingly hazardous to the government, just as he was about setting out on an expedition to Egypt. He therefore sent Louis to Toulon on a mission, and before his return Emilie was married to Gen. Lavalette. From this blow to all of his fond hopes Louis never recovered. Napoleon loaded him with honors, and sought by every device to assuage his grief, but in vain.

It was Josephine's policy, as before stated, to unite these two disappointed hearts in marriage union, a step not approved by Napoleon, but to which he yielded. Neither Hortense nor Louis desired the marriage, but crushed and despairing they yielded to the importunities of Josephine, and the ceremony was performed, which effected an outward, but not an inward union. It was a sad wedding, and Hortense wept bitterly. Of course a marriage based on expediency, without love, could not be otherwise than an unhappy one.

Their first child was born in 1803, and received the name of Napoleon Charles. Both Napoleon and Josephine were made very happy by his birth. He was very beautiful, and developed great brilliancy of intellect. He was, without hesitation, adopted as the heir to the throne of France. But when he was entering upon his fifth year, he was taken ill with the croup, and died. It was a terrible blow to all, not more perhaps to the fond mother than to Josephine.

At the time of the death of this child, Louis Napoleon had been about one year king of Holland. Another son had been born to them on the 11th of Oct., 1804, to whom had been given the name of Napoleon Louis. On the 20th of April, 1808, the subject of this sketch was born. Hortense was then in Paris. Napoleon was at the summit of his brilliant career, surrounded with imperial splendor, and all Europe prostrate before him. The birth of the young prince was welcomed by explosions of artillery all along the lines of the army, from Hamburg to Rome, and from the Pyrenees to the Danube.

By a decree of the Senate, which was submitted to the acceptation of the French people, and adopted by 3,621,675 votes, there being but 2,579 in opposition, they were declared the heirs to the imperial throne, should Napoleon and his elder brother Joseph die without children.

There being no congeniality between Louis and Hortense, after the birth of this child, she felt but little disposition to return to her husband, estrangement finally resulted in entire separation. Napoleon thought both were in the fault. "Louis had been spoiled by reading the works of Rosseau. He contrived to agree with his wife only for a few months. Louis was too teasing in his temper; and Hortense was too volatile. Hortense, the virtuous, the devoted, the generous Hortense, was not entirely faultless in her conduct towards her husband."

Days of darkness and gloom began at length to lower over the empire of Napoleon. All Europe was aroused against him, and the majestic fabric of power which he had reared was crumbled to the dust. The allied armies were marching upon the metropolis. All who could escape were flying in dismay. These gathering disasters roused all the heroism of Hortense. She was indignant with Maria Louise for her weakness in abandoning her husband and Paris. "I shall remain," exclaimed Hortense, "and share with the Parisians all their fortunes."

After the surrender of the city, and when all hope was gone, Hortense was urged by her husband to retire with the children, lest they should be seized by the enemy as hostages. She retired to Navarre, where she took refuge with Josephine. Receiving, however, assurance of protection from the Emperor Alexander, she returned again to Paris with her sons. After the departure of Napoleon to Elba, she resided at Malmaison most of the time with her mother. In May 1814, Josephine died in the arms of her daughter. The grief of Hortense was agonizing. Of Josephine it has been truly said, "she never caused the shedding of a single tear." Nine months after the death of Josephine, Napoleon returned to Paris. Hortense was there to welcome him. Maria Louisa and her child were prisoners in Austria. Napoleon was re-elected to the throne by a majority of more than a million of votes. During the re-inauguration the two princes stood by the side of the Emperor. He presented them separately to the deputations of the people, and of the army, as those in the direct line of inheritance upon which the future interests of France might depend. Louis Napoleon was then seven years of age.

But again the allied armies were on the march for Paris, in columns amounting to near a million of men. The evening before the departure of Napoleon for that fatal campaign, which resulted in his discomfiture at Waterloo, little Louis suddenly opened the door, and with his heart full of grief, fell upon his knees before his uncle, and burst into tears. "What is the matter, Louis?" said the Emperor. "Why do you weep so?" For some moments he could not reply. He then sobbed out, "Sire, my governess has just told me that you are going to the war. Oh, do not go! do not go!" The Emperor was much moved, and passing his hand through his clustering curls, he said, "My child, this is not the first time I have been to the war. Why are you so afflicted?" "O, my dear uncle!" exclaimed the child again, weeping convulsively, "these wicked allies wish to kill you. Let me go with you, my uncle, let me go with you." Napoleon made no reply, but taking Louis upon his knee, pressed him to his heart with manifest emotion. Then, after a few affectionate words to the young prince, he turned to Marshal Soult, who was deeply affected by the scene, and said to him, "Embrace the child, Marshal; he has a warm heart and a noble soul. Perhaps he is to be the hope of my race."

Napoleon again abdicated, but in favor of his son. On the 30th of June, he bade a last adieu to Hortense, and departed for the dismal rock of St. Helena. Louis was almost frantic with grief, and had to be separated by force from his uncle. Hortense concealed her sons for a time, but at length receiving an order from the allies to leave Paris in two hours, she left for Switzerland, intending to take up her residence in a country-seat which she owned in the vicinity of Geneva. Her husband, after a reign as king of Holland for four years, had abdicated, and was now a melancholy wanderer, living as a recluse. Hortense had scarcely entered upon her residence before the Bourbons, alarmed at the nearness of the two young princes to France, entered a remonstrance to the Swiss government, and she was ordered to leave the territory. She then went to Aix in Savoy, where she had formerly established a hospital. Here, by a decision of the Parisian courts, she was compelled to surrender her elder son, Napoleon Louis, to his father. The parting between the two brothers was very affecting.

Soon the Sardinian government found it inexpedient to retain within its borders a family whose name was so much feared by the Bourbons, then reigning in France, and Hortense was compelled to seek another home. She then directed her steps to Constance, in the Grand Duchy of Baden. A cousin of hers had married the Grand Duke of Baden, and she hoped to be allowed by them to remain in the duchy. But, to her sorrow, this permission was not granted. She was told that they were under the control of a higher power, and must therefore request her to leave without delay. Hortense knew not what to do. It was in the month of November, and she was an exile in feeble health, and persecuted by all the powers of Europe. Thus assailed by misfortune, she wrote an imploring letter to the Duke and Duchess, begging permission to remain till spring. She received in reply a private letter, expressive of sympathy, and encouraged thereby, she rented a small house upon the western shore of Lake Constance, where for several months she remained unmolested. Her brother Eugene had married the daughter of the king of Bavaria, and took up his abode near her. In this seclusion she devoted herself assiduously to the education of the young Louis, never allowing him to forget the name he bore, or the political principles his uncle had proclaimed upon the banner of the French empire. Abbe Betrand was his private tutor, and subsequently M. Sebar, professor at the Athenæum at Paris, became his instructor in the classics. He there enjoyed every advantage which a child could enjoy for laying the foundation of a solid and liberal education.

For the World's Crisis.

"WHAT SHALL I DO?"

Many are asking the above question. Some who have never found peace in believing are anxiously inquiring, "what shall I do to be saved?" Others who have tasted of the joys of pardon, and who, perhaps, did run well for a season, have lost their enjoyment, lost their peace, lost their evidence of acceptance with God, and they too are asking with aching hearts "what shall we do?" And others still are sadly perplexed with the cares of this life, hardly knowing how it can be possible for them to escape from the difficulties that surround them. The defenceless, weak and helpless poor are trembling at the dread approach of winter, and crying, "what shall we do?" Many who read or hear this are asking the same question. The sad mourner, looking down upon the cold grave, which contains all the most precious of her earthly jewels, asks with broken heart and streaming eyes, "what shall I do?" To all who ask this question I may say it is evident that you need and must have an Advocate who fully understands your case in all its bearings. You need consolation, support, counsel, wisdom and the grace of God that bringeth salvation. Now if you had a case in court, and the ablest advocate in the land should offer you his services, would you not thankfully accept his offer? Well, this is just your position. You have a case in court. If you were fully assured of gaining the case, if you were sure it would be decided in your favor, you could wait patiently, and bear cheerfully all the trials of your lot.

Now you ask, "what shall I do?" You are not able to manage your own case, or to plead your own cause. This is certainly so, and you must admit the fact. You have tried it long enough. It may be ten, or twenty, or forty years; but you are satisfied that it is all in vain, and you must lose all unless you have help. Now where can you find an advocate, able and willing to undertake for you? There is but one, only one name under heaven, given among men; only one Advocate that can plead your cause effectively and successfully, and HE NEVER FAILS. Just give up your case to him. You have tried every other way, now try the only right way. "We have an Advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ, the righteous. And now he is the propitiation for our sins; and not for ours only, but also for the sins of the whole world." Hasten to secure the services of this great Advocate. Put your case unreservedly into his hands now, without delay. And confiding with full trust in him, you will find what you seek and what you need, FULL SALVATION.

THE DEACON V. S. BIBLE.

On entering a stage coach to ride from Alna where we had just struck our tent, to Mt. Vernon, to hold another meeting, I soon recognized an old acquaintance, and asked if he was not Deacon C. of V? He replied in the affirmative, and inquired what kind of gatherings we had with that tent? I gave an account of our meetings, and of our efforts. A lady inquired whether we were believers in immersion? I replied that we were. This seemed to gratify her, and the deacon also; for both were Baptists. The conversation naturally turned upon that subject, and we agreed in mutually condemning the inovations made by the Roman Catholics, which had resulted in sprinkling believers, instead of baptizing them. "In this we were in harmony and union; but presently we alluded to the other inovations; one of which had led the church to look upon heaven above as their home. To this the deacon responded, "If not dwell in heaven, where then?" We replied, the Scriptures promise that "the meek shall inherit the earth," and went on quoting text after text, of the same character, until abruptly interrupted by the deacon, in this language, "Will you please stop talking? I cannot bear such talk. I will thank you to stop. I don't like to hear such stuff. I am very nervous. It irritates me to hear such talk." What! cannot bear to hear the Bible quoted? we asked. "It is not Bible. I will thank you not to refer to it again while we are in the stage coach," responded the deacon in high temper. We promptly promised not to quote another passage from the Bible while in his presence; remarking that we felt but little interest in worldly matters, and had no wish to converse on them only where duty required. Thus duty seemed to require us to travel some ten miles without any interesting conversation, as there were only two believers, two Baptists, and one infidel, which composed the coach company. We felt sad indeed, to find a man of such a heart filling the sacred office of deacon, while the Scriptures require that such should "hold the mystery of the faith in a pure conscience." How sadly the Bible is neglected and finally rejected, by professed christians. I. C. WELLCOME.

"SEVEN SABBATHS SHALL BE COMPLETE."—No. 2.

Having glanced at four of the seven Sabbaths to be complete, in the work of redeeming man as a race, and the world he inhabits, it may be well, as we part, to notice the fifth of these Sabbaths, so rapidly increasing in magnitude and importance; to recapitulate, or take a retrospective glance, on a few features of this instructive portion of God's word. Each of these Sabbaths have a crowning glory in the seventh, or closing section of each period embraced. For instance, the holy Sabbath day crowned the six days of creation. The "pentecost fully come"—(seven Sabbaths in one)—crowned the "Sabbath of weeks." (See Lev. 23: 15, 16. This Sabbath has been honored by the great revival at Jerusalem, where Peter quoted the prophecy of Joel as having a typical fulfillment then, but which cannot be completed until God pours out his Spirit upon all flesh, subsequent to the vintage of the wicked and harvest of the age. So, too, the Sabbath of Feasts, commencing with the Passover. The seventh and crowning feast of this series of seven, was the great feast of the atonement. (See Lev. 23: 24, 27.) "In the seventh month, in the first day of the month, shall ye have a Sabbath." . . . "Also on the tenth day of this seventh month, there shall be a day of atonement."

In the Sabbath of MONTHS, we find the crowning month introduced as follows: Lev. 23: 38, 39,—"Beside the sabbaths of the Lord, and beside your gifts, and beside all your vows, and beside all your freewill offerings, which ye give unto the Lord. Also in the fifteenth day of the seventh month, when ye have gathered in the fruit of the land, ye shall keep a feast unto the Lord seven days; on the first day shall be a sabbath, and on the eighth day shall be a sabbath."

FIFTH. We come now to the Sabbath of YEARS. This Sabbath we find described in the twenty-fifth chapter of Leviticus: "And the Lord spake unto Moses in Mount Sinai, saying, Speak unto the children of Israel, and say unto them, When ye come into the land which I give you, then shall the land keep a sabbath unto the Lord. Six years thou shalt sow thy field, and six years thou shalt prune thy vineyard, and gather in the fruit thereof; but in the seventh year shall be a sabbath of rest unto the land, a sabbath for the Lord; thou shalt neither sow thy field nor prune thy vineyard."

This Sabbath demands a seventh part of time to be given to the Lord for rest, as well as the people for occupation. As near as can be ascertained, this law was soon violated by the nation of Israel; but the significance of such a law, given by the God of the universe, is not to be overlooked. By comparing Scripture with Scripture, we may ascertain the intent of this law, as having a bearing on some future developments of his providence, and this will be better understood by considering the next and larger Sabbaths in the series.

SIXTH SABBATH. Although seven Sabbaths were to be complete, yet the sixth Sabbath is the greatest thus far given to man on the earth. A little further on in our chapter it is fully described: "And thou shalt number seven sabbaths of years unto thee, seven times seven years; and the space of the seven sabbaths of years shall be unto thee forty and nine years. Then shalt thou cause the trumpet of the jubilee to sound, on the tenth day of the seventh month; in the day of atonement shall ye make the trumpet sound throughout all your land. And ye shall hallow the fiftieth year, and proclaim liberty throughout all the land unto all the inhabitants thereof; it shall be a jubilee unto you; and ye shall return every man unto his possession, and ye shall return every man unto his family."

As was the case of the Sabbath of weeks, forty-nine days completed the secular portion, but it required the fiftieth day to crown the Sabbath with its sacred significance,—when the day of pentecost was fully come"; so here, forty-nine years fill up the body of the great jubilee; but it requires the "fiftieth year" to finish the circle and add the crown. So reads the word of God; and I shall not notice the various opinions of uninspired men which have been advanced to favor one theory or another, as to the length of time embraced in these constantly recurring jubilees.

Leaving the question, therefore, as we find it in the Bible, what practical lesson shall we draw from God's institutions of Sabbath,—beginning with days and ending with jubilees? I say nothing now of millenniums, or the Sabbath of thousand years. It is said by Peter that "one day is with the Lord as a thousand years." He began creation by days, and will probably do his work of new creation by millenniums, when the seventh Sabbath shall be complete.

Israel, as a nation, failed in the observance of all the Sabbaths which the Lord their God gave them; but this cannot frustrate the great design which God had in view when such institutions were established. I shall not raise the question whether among these designs God will ever give to Israel another national opportunity to obey "his statutes and his laws." The readers of the Crisis do not care to go into such an inquiry at present. But there must be some lesson of instruction intended for us. Shall we not find it in the fact that here is the great system which God has given us for reckoning time? If so, all our other modes of calculating time must be subordinated to this.

God certainly held Israel, as a nation, responsible for an exact observance of all these institutions as he gave them. If his ordinances thus given were designed to be types of other dispensations in the future, then we must be responsible for a right observance of the things typified. As near as we can ascertain, Israel failed to observe the lesser and the greater jubilees, from about the time Saul was chosen their king. They not only failed to give their land its Sabbath of years (the lesser jubilees), but they entirely forgot the forty-ninth year jubilee, and the crowning year of release, when all captives should go free. God declared that his land should have her Sabbaths; and adding the seventy years' captivity to the long rest of the land since Judah was driven out by the Romans, the land has now had her due. D. CAMPBELL.

SHOULD CHRISTIANS VOTE?

Come, brother Jones, let's vote to-day,
And give the right our little sway;
Too long indeed we've staid away—
I feel it's so.
Lest wicked men should have their way,
We ought to go.

Well, brother Brown, I used to vote
When in my sins, and all afloat,
With sight bedimmed by many a mote—
So worldly too;
My country's cause thus to promote,
I had in view.

But when God's love had touched my heart,
And bid all filthiness depart,
For this world's strife I had no heart—
'T was not my home;
A stranger here, I'd made a start
For the world to come.

My zeal for politics was gone,
My heart in tenderest love did yearn
For those who make this world their home,
While mercy's free;
I felt what wonders God hath done
For unworthy me.

I praised the Lord, and gladly too,
To find my heart all made anew;
And never have I felt to rue
That happy day,
When politics bid me adieu,
And went away.

Yet how 'twas done, God only knows,
'T was him who dealt the telling blows;
Nor did he his designs disclose,
Till all was o'er—
Till all these subtle, crafty foes
Were found no more.

But "wicked men" may rule, you fear,
And hence you'd have the saints appear,
And cast their votes from year to year,
And seem to say
To all such men—"You can't rule here,
We have the sway."

Is it the part of "strangers" here
In such affairs to interfere?
Was this the lowly, meek career
Of Christ our Head?
How can we do it, and not fear
We're wrongly led?

But why should we the wicked dread,
As though we of ourselves were led?
Think you that God's asleep or dead,
Or far from here?
With his protection round our head,
How can we fear?

His watchful care how can we doubt;
He ever guards us round about,
And puts our enemies to rout
When they appear;
Yes, "all things" our best good promote
When faithful here.

Let worldly men the world control;
Let politicians call their roll;
Let office-seekers, too, cajole;
But let God's heirs
Beware lest they pollute their soul
By these foul snares!

Our country's in the world to come,
Where we expect our rest and home;
And strangers here we ought to roam,
As we've begun;
Nor ever claim it as our own
Till Jesus comes.

No, brother Brown, I would not dare
To go and vote, and thus declare
That here's my rest and portion fair,
And still protest
That I'm a stranger here, and heir
To yonder rest.

No! I had better watch and pray
That God would keep me every day,
And help me walk the narrow way
That leads to life;
Nor let my heart be led astray
To worldly strife.

TWO HOURS AT THE BEDSIDE OF CHLOE LANKTON.

BRO. GRANT:—I send you for insertion in the Crisis an account of a recent visit made by MR. J. C. Garrigues, the publisher of the Sabbath School Times, to Chloe Lankton; believing that it will greatly interest its readers, and that many will gladly avail themselves of the opportunity now afforded of securing a copy of the pictures referred to, and thus aid a christian sufferer. M. D. WELLCOME.

It has been my blessed privilege to enjoy, for a brief space, the companionship of that afflicted child of God, Chloe Lankton.

She lives at the village of New Hartford, Litchfield county, Connecticut, near the banks of the Farmington river. I felt a strong desire to see the face and hear the voice of one whose suffering condition has enlisted the sympathy of so many warm christian hearts.

Chloe's home is twenty-two miles west of Hartford, and difficult of access, since no railroad line leads directly to it. Procuring a horse and vehicle, in company with my own thoughts, I started for a drive of forty-four miles alone. Passing beyond the beautiful residences surrounding the city, I soon found myself at the foot of the Talcot mountains, and after crossing them, a few hours' drive brought me to the valley of the Farmington river. On nearing New Hartford, which extends for half a mile along the banks of the stream, I made inquiry of a passer-by for the residence of Chloe Lankton, and was directed to a one story house at the upper end of the village.

Leaving my horse to be cared for, with the home of Chloe in full view, within a hundred yards, I approached the house with a feeling of intense interest, which a long acquaintance with the trying circumstances of its inmate inspired.

On reaching the door, I was met by the aged domestic of seventy, who has so faithfully ministered to the invalid for the past twelve years. On informing her that I was a friend of Chloe Lankton, she invited me in, and bid me welcome.

It was a beautiful day, and through the open window a gentle breeze was fanning the cheek of the helpless sufferer. A sweet smile of welcome lighted up her intelligent features as I entered. I extended my hand, which was clasped within both of her own with the exclamation, "My dear friend, this is a pleasure I did not think to realize this side of heaven; but I expected to meet you there," and then with her heart overflowing with grateful recollections, she inquired after the many personal friends who have been almoners of God's bounty in ministering to her continued temporal necessities. Although they are unseen by her in this life, she looks forward with confident expectation to that time when she shall behold them face to face, where pain and sorrow are forever unknown.

She related to me some of the principal incidents of her life, and knowing the interest they will have for those sympathizing christian friends whose generous contributions we have had the pleasure of acknowledging in the Times, I give them, as nearly as recollection serves me, just as I received the narrative from the lips of Chloe herself.

"My dear father was an industrious, careful man, earnestly consistent, in his observance of christian duties, while struggling hard with the world to support his family. From a little child I have been an invalid, and ever since I was eighteen years of age I have been utterly helpless. Before I reached my twenty-second year I became hopelessly bedfast, and have lain for thirty-six long years in the manner you now see me, unable to rise. My face looks as if I was in the enjoyment of good health, but my poor body is wasted by a lingering disease that no earthly physician can cure. I often suffer such excruciating pain that for days at a time I can eat no food; and again, for successive nights and days I have no rest, for I cannot sleep; so that it has seemed wonderful that my life should be prolonged. But oh! my dear friend, the presence of Jesus, my precious Savior, alone could sustain me through all these years of afflictive trial. My affectionate mother, who so lovingly ministered to my wants, was long since called away by death, and then I felt that sore sorrow which one in my helpless condition must realize, on losing the nearest, fondest earthly friend. I had three sisters, but they too have departed, and I am left alone. The last of these dear ones I clung to with an affection that knew no yielding; but God saw fit to remove her too, and in his infinite wisdom strengthened me to bear the loss. Why my life is prolonged is known only to him, but oh! what a mercy that the Lord has raised up friends among strangers, who have surrounded me with the comforts that you see in this little home."

And then she described the house in which she had lived from early childhood, and where she was watched over with parental love until both her father and mother were removed by death.

This still continued to be her only shelter until the roof actually rotted away from over her. She said, "In the midst of winter, while the snow was on the ground, the water at times poured through the leaky roof, partly on my bed, until it was inches deep on the floor of the room where I lay in my helplessness. I hired a little boy, with a tin cup and bucket, to bail the water out of my bed room. What should I do? How earnestly I prayed for a home that would protect me. I mentioned the subject to a dear friend in humble circumstances, who offered to use his hard earnings, a part of which he had carefully laid by, and purchase this house where I now am, nearer the village than my old home, generously agreeing to let me have the use of it while I lived, with the understanding that at my decease the property should pass to the hands of his family. Knowing that he could ill afford to make this offer, with a family dependent upon his exertions, I agonized in prayer that my heavenly Father would show me some way to get me a home without such a sacrifice on the part of this dear friend.

"What was my joy to receive, in a few days, the sum of seventy-five dollars from the office of the Sunday School Times, money that had been contributed by the sympatizing christian friends who had learned of my case through your paper. It seemed to me a direct answer to my prayer, and I put the whole amount of it sacredly by, not using the smallest amount for pressing need. Other friends, learning of my necessities, sent in their kind donations, until the whole amount was made up, and I am now living in a home of God's own choosing, through the generous contributions of his precious children."

The patient sufferer, whose face all the time was lighted up with a sweet smile, except during brief paroxysms of unusual pain, pointed out with the deepest interest the different articles of furniture in her room, naming, with tearful eyes and grateful expressions, the kind givers who had surrounded her with these comforts. I told her that it would be a great gratification to friends, who by reason of distance will never be permitted to see her in this life, to possess a good photograph of her, and a picture, too, of the home where she now lives, and I asked her if she would give her consent to these pictures being taken for the individuals and Sabbath-schools who contribute to her support.

She expressed a willingness to have it done, if it was thought best, and it gives me pleasure to announce that the pictures have been successfully taken, and will be sold for her benefit. The entire proceeds, beyond the expense of printing them, will be forwarded to her.

Winter approaches, requiring, in addition to her ordinary necessities, a considerable outlay for fuel, and any contribution will be exceedingly acceptable, and be duly acknowledged, as usual, in our columns. Whenever requested, the two pictures will be sent to all donors, where the amount contributed is $1 or more.

ANECDOTE OF JOHN WESLEY.—At one time when Mr. Wesley was traveling in Ireland, his carriage became fixed in the mire, and the harness broke. While he and his companion were laboring to extricate it, a poor man passed by in great distress. Mr. Wesley called to him, and inquired the cause of his distress. He said that he had been unable, through misfortune, to pay his rent of twenty shillings, and his family were just being turned out of doors. "Is that all you need?" said Mr. Wesley, handing him the amount, "here, go and be happy." Then, turning to his companion, he said pleasantly, "You see now why our carriage stopped here in the mud."

— One of the most wonderful cities in the world is Bankok, the capital of Siam. On either side of the wide majestic stream, moored in regular streets and alleys, extending as far as the eye can reach, are upwards of seventy thousand neat little houses, each house floating on a compact raft of bamboos, and the whole intermediate space of the river is one dense mass of ships, junks, and boats of every conceivable shape, color and size.

— The christian is a beggar while on his journey, but a king when it is finished.

— There are hills in the moral as well as the natural world, and we manage worse about the former than the latter.

— Waiting upon God continually, will abate your unnecessary cares and sweeten you necessary ones.

— Nature preaches cheerfulness in her saddest moods; she covers even forgotten graves with flowers.

— Cling not to thy stay here, neither be weary of it, still living as a saint and begging as a sinner.

— One of the witnesses of the truth, when imprisoned for conscience' sake in Queen Mary's persecution of the church, is said to have thus written to a friend: "A prisoner of Christ. What is this for a poor worm? Such honor have not all his saints. Both the degrees which I took in the university have not set me so high as the honor of becoming a prisoner of the Lord."

— Those who climb highest in the world are not always the happiest. Genius and talent sometimes raise men to such a giddy height that they find themselves above all earthly joys, and yet below all heavenly ones. While perpetual summer blooms in the humble valley, the cheerless mountain summit is crowned with everlasting winter. We do not well to envy those who are above us, for a wise and good providence distributes the blessings of life more equally than we are apt to imagine.

The Children's Corner.

PLEDGE OF THE TRY COMPANY.

We, the Undersigned, hereby pledge ourselves to abstain from Tea, Coffee, Tobacco, and all Intoxicating Drinks as a Beverage.

ROUGH DIAMOND.

We had been on a long journey through the woods of Eastern Maine, and now, on our way back to New York, were idling a few days at Boston.

"Traveller, Transcript, Evening Journal, matches two cents a box—Herald, last 'dition, sir?" shouted a shrill-piped, ragged little imp on the evening of a cold, wet, bitter day in October, as we stood on the side-walk.

"Matches, sir? two cents a box, sir; to-night's paper, half price—only two cents, sir," persisted the little chap, as the market showed symptoms of decline, and threatened to close decidely flat.

"Get along, Bird's-eye; don't want any," growled Williams.

"They're good matches, sir; two cents a box."

"Don't smoke."

"They're good matches, sir; two cents a box, sir;" coming round my flank.

"No; don't want them, my boy."

The keen, blue face, red, bare feet, ingrained with dirt, and bundle of scanty rags, looked piteously up at me, moved off a little, but still hovered round us. Now I had taken a mental pledge from myself to encourage vagrant children in the streets no more. Somehow, this pledge wouldn't stand by me here, but gave way.

"Give me a box, little one."

"Yes, sir; they don't smell."

"Ah, I have no coppers, little chap; nothing less than a quarter; so never mind, I'll buy from you to-morrow."

"Buy them to-night, if you please; I'm very hun-grey, sir."

His little cold face, which had lightened up, now fell, for from his bundle of papers, I saw his sales had been few that day.

"I'll go for change, sir."

"Well, little one, I'll try you; there is a quarter, now be a good boy, and bring the change to-morrow morning to the Parker House. Ask for Mr. Snow."

"As sure as death, sir, I'll bring the change in the morning," was the promise of young Lucifer as he vanished down Brattle Street with the quarter.

Next morning we visited Bunker Hill, the Great Organ, and the Common.

On our return to Parker's, I inquired:

"Waiter, did a boy call for me to-day?"

"Boy, sir?—call, sir? No, sir."

"Of course, Fred, he didn't. Did you really expect to see the young Arab again?"

"Indeed I did, Charley. I wish he had proved honest."

Later in the evening a small boy was introduced, who wished to speak with me. He was a duodecimo edition of the small octave of the previous day, got up with less outlay of capital—a shoeless, shirtless, shrunk, ragged, wretched little Arab of the streets. He was so very small and cold and childlike, though with the same shivering feet and frame, thin blue cold face, down which tears had worn their weary channel—that I saw at once the child was not my friend of the previous night.

He stood for a few minutes diving and rummaging into the recesses of his rags; at last little Tom Thumb said:

"Are you the gentleman that bought matches from Sandy yesterday?"

"Yes, my little man."

"Well, here's thirteen cents, (counting out divers coins,) Sandy can't come; he's not well; a cart ran over him this morning and broke his legs, and lost his cap and his matches, and—your ten cents, and—his knife, and—he's not well—and the doc—tor says—he's—dy—ing, and that's all he can give you now." And the poor child, commencing with sobs, ended in a sore fit of crying.

"Are you Sandy's brother?"

"Yes, sir;" and the floodgates of his heart again opened.

"Where do you live? Are your father and mother alive?"

"We live in North Street. My mother is dead, and father's away, and we live there with our mother-in-law;" sobbing bitterly.

"Where did this accident happen?"

"In Hanover Street, near Blackstone."

Calling a carriage, were we speedily in North Street. Preceded by my guide, I entered a dark, wide, winding stair, until, climbing many flights in total darkness, he opened a door, whence light maintained feeble, unequal struggle with the dark, close smelling gloom. In a large room, scarcely made visible by one glimmering candle stuck in a bottle, was an over-crowded mass of wretched beings, sleeping on miserable beds spread on the floor, or squatted or reclining on the cold, unfinished boards.

Stepping over a prostrate drunkard, I found little Sandy on a bed of carpenter's shavings on the floor. He was still in his rags, and a torn and scanty coverlet had been thrown over him. Poor lad! he was so changed. His sharp, pallid face was cold and clammy. Beads of the sweat of agony stood on his brow—his bruised and wounded body lay motionless and still, except when a pitiful moaning heaved his little heart.

A kind doctor from the neighborhood had called and left some medicine to soothe the poor lad's agony, (for his case was hopeless, even though he had been taken at first, as he should have been, to the hospital,) but his step-mother had forgotten to administer it. I applied it, and had him placed on a less miserable bed of straw, and feeing a woman, an occupant of the room, to attend him during the night, I gave what directions I could, and left the degraded, squalid home.

Next morning I was there again. With the exception of a broken chair, furniture there was none in that stifling den. Its occupants, said the doctor, whom I found at the sufferer's bed, were the city's dregs, and the poor lad's step-mother, who had taken him from school that she might drink of his earnings, was as deep in infamy as any of them.

For the patient, medical skill was nought, for he was sinking fast. His soul, looking from his light blue eyes, was slowly ebbing out, his pallid cheeks were sunk and thin, but consciousness had returned, and his lamp was flickering before it sunk forever. As I took his feeble hand, a flicker of recognition seemed to gleam across his face.

"I got the change and was comin'—"

"My poor boy, you were very honest. Have you any wish—anything, poor child, I can do for you?"

"Reuby! I'm sure I'm dying—who will take care of you now?"

Little Reuben was instantly in a fit of crying, and threw himself prostrate on the bed. "Oh, Sandy! Sandy! Sandy!" sobbed his little heart.

"I will see to your brother."

"Thank you, sir—don't leave me, Reu—Reu—by, I'm comin'—comin'—"

"Whist, whist!" cried little Reuby, looking up and turning round to implore silence in the room. That moment the calm, faded smile that seemed to have alighted as a momentary visitant upon his face, slowly passed away—the eyes became blank and glazed, and his little life imperceptibly rippled out.

The honest boy lies at Forest Hills, in a little grave in the Strangers' Lot, and little Reuby is at the Home for Little Wanderers, from where I receive excellent accounts of him and from him.

"What of your young Arab, Snow?" said William, the following afternoon. "Was he honest, and is he really ill?"

"Yes, Williams, he was an honest boy, and now he is 'where the wicked cease from troubling, and the weary are at rest.'"

A LIE STICKS.

A little newsboy, to sell his paper told a lie The matter came up in Sabbath-school. "Would you tell a lie for three cents?" asked a teacher of one of her boys.

"No, ma'am" answered Dick very decidedly.

"For ten cents?"

"No, ma'am."

"For a dollar?"

"No, ma'am."

"For a thousand dollars?"

Dick was staggered. A thousand dollars looked big. O, would it not buy lots of things! While he was thinking, another boy roared out, "No, ma'am," behind him.

"Why not?" asked the teacher.

"Because, when the thousand dollars is all gone, and all the things they've got with them are gone too, the lie is there all the same," answered the boy. It is so. A lie sticks. Every thing else may be gone, but that is left, and you will have to carry it round with you whether you will or not: a hard, heavy load it is.—Child's Paper.

LEANING ON JESUS.

A little girl lay near her death. She had been brought low by a sad and painful disease. Not long before, her step had been as light, and her heart as joyous and gay as any of her companions, but now her body was racked with pain, the icy hand of death had touched her, and she was about to go into eternity.

"Does my little one feel sad at the thought of death?" asked her papa, as he watched the look of pain on her face.

"No, dear papa," said she, smiling; "my hand is all the while in the hand of Jesus, and he will not let it go."

"Are you not afraid, dear child?" asked the minister at another time.

"No; I can not fear while Jesus supports me," she replied quickly.

"But are you not weary with bearing pain?"

She said, "I am leaning on Jesus, and don't mind the pain."

DON'T WRITE THERE.

"Don't write there," said one to a lad who was writing with a diamond on a pane of glass in the window of a hotel.

"Why?" said he.

"Because you can't rub it out."

There are other things which men should not do, because they cannot rub them out. A heart is aching for sympathy, and a cold, perhaps a heartless word is spoken. The impression may be more durable than that of a diamond upon the glass. The inscription on the heart may last forever.

On many a mind and many a heart, sad inscriptions are deeply engraved which no effort can erase. We should be careful what we write on the minds of others.—Merry's Museum.

LOOKING.

Looking, ever looking for the coming of our Lord;
Though a faithless world deride, we calmly rest upon his word,
And upward, ever upward gaze, not ignorant of this thing,
That he in promise is not slack, although long-suffering.

"Since the fathers fell asleep, all things as they were?" Not so;
'Thwart the heavens the day foretelling, twilight's quickening flushes glow;
Signs increase, the morn is breaking; looking, looking would we be,
Till his glorious appearing "as the lightning" we shall see!

On the word that never faileth, this our confidence we build;
Prophecies and promise blending, show our hope well nigh fulfilled;
Faint not, christian, watch and faint not, disappointment is not stored
For the one who, watching, waiteth—looking, looking for the Lord.

Blessed he that watcheth, keeping all his garments pure and white,
Blessed though Christ's coming startle—sudden as "a thief at night";
Are we watching thus, beloved, that in peace we may be found,
Diligent, and pure, and blameless, when our Savior's trump shall sound?

Just a little longer, christian! looking, 'twill not seem too long;
Waiting ages shall be broken, this the triumph of our song;
Come, Lord Jesus, quickly come! thy waiting ones release,
Forth from care and toil of watching, bring into thy perfect peace.

THOUGHTS ON A FEW THINGS.

MAN TO DIE, AND SIN TO END.

Try another text: "What fruit had ye then in those things whereof ye are now ashamed? for the end of those things is death."—Rom. 6:21. These beloved Roman brethren were of course ashamed of their sins. The operation of grace was to beget in them an abhorrence of their former ungodly courses. In Gal. 5:19 occurs a list of carnal deformities and offences, and they are pronounced the works of the flesh. Seventeen items make up the enumeration, not reckoning the unnamed sins included in the "such like."

(Parenthetically, now, let me just suggest, these sins are not the hated excesses and transgressions of an immortal soul; not the pestilent errors of an immaterial, immortal mind; but with apostolic terseness they are called and defined the works of the flesh. By this we know the real sinner is a material man, a descendant of the very Adam that came from the dust of the ground. We can understand these evil energies and motions of sin to belong to that body from which the apostle was "willing to be absent"; to wit, a "mortal body," a "body of sin"; and we have the explicit intimation that even "hatred, variance, emulations, wrath, strife, seditions, heresies, and envyings" are "works of the flesh." Here is a deranged organization. A material man is faulty and fallen. Sin has disordered the whole human nature. The heart, the mind, the will, which are all developed only as a quality and product of organism, are vagrant and revolted. Now, it is not an immortal soul that is angry, emulous, seditious, envious, heretical and hostile, but a mortal man; for these sins are works of the flesh. In other words, a man, organized and material, thinks and feels evilly. He is out of order, fallen, sinful and wicked. As for his heart, it is proud; as for his mind, it is ambitious and debased; as for his will, it is insubordinate, selfish, and corrupt. It is this very man, reasoning, but material, volitive but depraved, highly organized but fallen, that hates, fights, emulates and envies. There is a law of sin in his members. A disordered organism not merely lugs or lags, in its functions of feeling and thought, but shows you functions perverted, mischievous, villainous.) A long parenthesis, I grant, but I hope not im-pertinent.

Now you see the christian is ashamed of these works of the flesh. All the fruit he had of them was evil. I tell you, he objects to be ruled by those tyrants—hatred, heresy, envy, and the whole miserable oligarchy. The great and good apostle points with unerring finger to the dreadful and certain issue of such a tyranny. "The end of these things," says he, "is death." Now we have a plain statement, and let us have a simple, hearty faith to accept it. Here is the inevitable finale. Here is an evolution, an eventuality, an end,—and this is death. After the pest, comes the penalty. Following the inflammation is the gangrene. Italicise the assertion, it is very simple,—"the end of these things is death"; and I believe it. Why mystify and perplex the passage? There is a career of sin, and it moves on to its conclusion. Ah! then, there is a conclusion, to be sure. If there be no repentance, and redemption through the blood of Jesus, the issue is final and fatal. If there is repentance, and faith in the blood and merit and power of the Divine Son, the disastrous issue is forestalled, and the poor sinner comes through a golden door into a hope and inheritance of life. So you see there is going to be an end of sin. Thanks be to God, there is an end determined. If death be the end of sins, I can not see the force of that philosophy which alleges a futurity of sin that is to know no end. By what license are we to violate the simplest logic, or contradict the plainest statement? Is there the slightest ground for inferring, or warrant for affirming, that the end of these things is a continuation of them? Is such the allowed variation or peculiarity of logic in theology, that by finis we are to understand perpetuity? How must that invader into the domain of scripture testimony appear before God, who thus subverts a revelation? Yet nothing is more patent than the prevalent fallacy and presumption of affirming that sins are endless and eternal.

"The soul," says this strange theology, "is immortal, and therefore must eternally be sinful." And so we have the spectacle of a heart thoroughly perverted and debased, forever active in uttering its irrepressible language of anger and vileness and revolt. The fountains of murmuring and misery are pouring forth their detestible issues to all eternity. Ten thousand million embittered spirits, blasted with the curse of Omnipotence, and turbid with the most miserable abominations of depraved feeling and imagination, are encumbering the sulphurous air of their prison with vocal and blasphemous resentments. Their indescribable pangs are the stinging stimulus to endless maledictions. Anguish and agony are never a veil to their anger and wickedness. Since they are immortal and can not die, they occupy the mighty epochs of duration with unappeasable murmurs of maddened enmity. Incapable of death, they are growing to be yet more horrible monsters of all impiety. A place called hell, in the universe of God, remains a theatre carefully preserved, upon which are enacted inconceivable and ever-increasing excesses of sin and crime, while the penal fire of God flames eruptive and unquenchable, with a fierceness all potent to exasperate and agonize, but impotent to destroy. Sin inherent in an intelligent immortality eternally resists perdition. Talk about an "end of these things," in the vastness of creation, or the aions of eternity? Why, great and mighty Paul, with thy tongue touched by celestial fire, how could you speak of an end of unforgiven sins, if soul and sin are both immortal? For surely this is what we are driven to concede and defend, if there is no extrication from the mazes of idolized modern divinity.

Yet we are bound to credit the short and simple allegation, and conclude that, if the end of unrepented sins is death, certainly there is an end. Yes! repeat it, believe it, affirm it, maintain it, and let the sword of the Lord slash into this great image and fiction of the devil, enshrined in the creeds and credences of men. Surely sin is not immortal, yet how can it be otherwise, if it inhere in an impenitent immortality of intelligence that has failed of grace? If the soul is immortal, by the edict of erudite divinity, then of course in this soul lost, but alive, sin, which has achieved its damnation, is also immortal. What a doctrine of our great modern Protestant episcopacy! Ah, rather, what a tradition from the fiend, dignified into such a sacredness that the very scripture which exposes the lie is heard under protest, or dismissed with deprecations. Nevertheless, it is not by the Bible that soul immortal and sin eternal can be shown.

The end of these things is death. Death is the loss of life. As the issue and penalty of sin, it includes with an extinction of being the act or process of dying, which is of varying duration, and with varying accompaniment of suffering. In the recognized imminence of the awful penalty, the trembling culprit sees at last in some measure the magnitude of his mighty loss. He realizes the preciousness of the life forfeited and foolishly frittered away. He gazes aghast at the brightness and majesty of that justice in which he reads a doom inexorable as fate. No refuge in the universe meets his eye, nor any signal of reprieve relieves his anxiety. Life and heaven and glory are lost. It is a hopeless case. It is an error of awful magnitude, and admits no reparation. And by what warrant of exaggeration, or additon, or assumption, shall an un-inspired theology magnify or distort the penalty of death into a harrowing, horrible, blasted, eternal life; and so, with deforming the plain letter of God's word, provide a prison of fire for the incarceration of immortal rebels, for whose unmitigated agonies some impulse of pity in the heavenly ranks, throughout the epochs of eternity, might seduce or tempt a thought disloyal to eternal justice? Whose dogma or speculation shall rise up to overbear or supersede a "thus saith the Lord"?

If "death be the end of sin," as the text affirms, then it is the end of all, for death is the end of life. If the sinner is dead, his career is finished, and surely he can sin no more. Why re-create or perpetuate by a false imputation of immortality that which is to die? If the sinner's conscience is inscribed with the various and tortuous handwriting of sin; if his heart is marked with its dark engraving, and ruined with its vice and bitterness; clearly with him must perish all the virus, refuse and wretchedness that oppress him. When the fountain is dried there is no stream, and the fire of Malachi's prophecy will be keen and fierce and fearful enough to burn all the malaria and slime of six thousand years of sin and sinners. The stones will be burned white and clean of the blood of murder. The heat that calcines the criminal's bones will surely leave no heart immortal, throbbing un-cased and sensitive in a surge of flame, or vainly trying to die amid the awful spasms of its agonized eternal life. O, fie! thou wretched deformity, and excess of theological opinion—immortality of both sin and sinner!

If on the fourth of July, 1869, I should ride by rail from Omaha to San Francisco, I should know certainly that the California coast would end my westward journey; but if not convinced by the roar of the Pacific surges, rolling in thunder on the beach, I should believe it when I had begun to sink and strangle in the ocean brine. If the ocean be thus an end of the trans-continental highway of iron, just so truly is "death an end of sin." Why complicate so plain a thing with sophism or mystery? It seems to me that I would rather not be thus unwisely occupied.

Clinton Colegrove.

THOUGHTS FOR THE YEAR—1868.

We have now arrived at a period which every one who thinks at all must allow to be critical to the utmost degree. "We stand upon the shore," and see the long gigantic waves rolling in upon us from the ocean. When they shall break upon the beach, and what destruction is to follow none can tell. One by one we can count them, as they advance, and we see them bearing down upon ourselves. Chained to the shore, like the victims of the middle ages, we can neither fly from them nor rise above them; we can only calculate their approach."

France and Austria are preparing on the vastest scale for a deadly conflict with Germany, and perhaps, with Russia. They are rousing up Poland and its desperate warriors to make one last despairing effort for national independence. Prussia, foreseeing the attack, is preparing on an equal scale; arming all her frontier fortresses, forming entrenched camps, filling her magazines, and inventing implements of seven fold destructiveness. Russia is advancing with rapid strides towards our Indian frontiers, and behind her advanced guard she is collecting innumerable hosts, sweeping in a semi-circle through all Central Asia, and gathering all the barbaric tribes of Turkestan between Tartary and Bokhara, to pour them down upon Hindostan. Twice have the tribes of Tartary invaded India—under Genhis Khan, and under Timur, and the third Tartar invasion, under Russian guidance, may be as fatal as that of the Moguls. Russia, not satisfied with Central Asia, is more than ever conspiring for the partition of Turkey, and all the christian subjects of the Ottoman throne, backed and urged on by Russia, are waiting the signal for an universal insurrection. Even gallant little Denmark, in secret alliance with France, is preparing her troops and ships, and openly boasting of her projected vengeance upon Russia.

Above all we must turn our eyes to Italy, where, as far as we can judge, most momentous events are rapidly approaching. It is notorious that the Pope is increassng his army to double its usual strength, and that he is mounting his fortresses with the best modern artillery; in a word, the Pope is openly preparing for an attack which he seems fully to expect. Meanwhile, the Garibaldians are actually, though secretly, at work collecting recruits for a second outbreak against Rome. And, what is most especially important, it is evident that Italy has turned away with abhorrence from the patronage of France, and is leaning her hopes upon an alliance with Prussia. This is most important. For the Italian scheme, worthy of Machiavelli—is to wait till France shall be engaged in war with Prussia, and then to rush down upon Rome and the Papal government and make a fair end of the Papacy, before France, busied on the Rhine, can come to the Holy Father's assistance! But Machiavelli's subtlety did not rescue Italy from the most abject bondage, and the Machiavellian policy of modern Italians will only hasten the downfall of the Italian throne. Should France be victorious on the Rhine, she will then turn all her forces against Italy, avenge the Pope, gain new possession of Rome, overthrow the Italian kingdom, re-establish the Papal government, and, as a matter of course, identify herself altogether with all the three at once; with Rome, with Italy, and with the Papal sovereignty.

Such an event would be most momentous indeed; for it would exhibit the position of the personal antichrist and the characteristics of the "last days." The seven-hilled city will then indeed have become the centre at once of Popery and of Antichristianism—and the Pope will be exactly in the position of the second beast of Revelation the 13th, acting as the agent and vassal of his imperial protector. And who can deny that such events may be near at hand, when he observes the preparations made in France for a war upon the Rhine, and the half-suppressed but glowing hostility kindled throughout Italy against France; when he observes the growing intimacy between Italy and Prussia? The personal antichrist must of necessity be master of Rome, and therefore a great difficulty had arisen from the present condition of Italy. One difficulty has been heaped upon another ever since 1859. Austria was driven from Italy—from Lombardy first, and then from Venetia. Italy was thrown by war into a new and unlooked-for position. Now, it was said, is the time for the personal antichrist to appear, and to take possession of Rome. Now he will become the visible head of the Roman territory and of the Roman world! But all went contrary to expectation. It only became a respectable kingdom under a respectable king. Everything was arranged with decency and decorum. The Pope remained at Rome as the shadow but not the substance of antichrist. And Garibaldi had not the brains, nor Victor Emanuel the will, to set up for the veritable antichrist. Some people thought Italy would immediately become Protestant, being edified, as she ought to be, by the wars, the murders, the love of money, the Indian butcheries, and the Chinese poisonings of holy Protestant nations. But Italy was too wise to imitate such bastard Protestantism, and, unfortunately, too addicted to atheism to imitate any Protestantism at all. Every one, however, felt sure that Italy would settle down, and English Protestantism rubbed its hands in full anticipation of an additional customer. Those hands reeking with Oriental blood—those hands that moved not one finger to help Italy in her agonies! How, then, was the grand structure of apostasy to be built up on the seven-hills? No mere Italian king could ever be so powerful as to erect the throne of antichrist. Italy must fall into more powerful hands than those of the house of Savoy. But now the time may be drawing near for another hand and for another dynasty. Italy, with fury in her heart, and bankruptcy in her exchequer, is watching France, and throwing herself into the arms of Prussia. A war on the Rhine, and Italy will play her last and most desperate game. Set France at defiance, turn her forces against Rome, pour out her wrath upon Napoleon, both in word and deed, and offend beyond the hope of forgiveness. All this is not only probable, but almost certain, should France be occupied on the Rhine; and then, indeed, we shall see a new Italian combination. France mistress of Italy, and the Pope and the Emperor as closely united into one as the centaurs of Grecian mythology. "The centaur," not fabulous, will no longer be a phrase, but a reality.

This Italian question is perhaps the most momentous question of the age—since the destiny of Italy will more than all other things affect the destinies of antichrist and the fate of Christendom—(not antichrist the Pope—but antichrist the man.) And for these grand events the prime mover of the day is preparing with incessant toil and with ceaseless circumspection. The preparations of France we have spoken of before. The deadly nature and terrific rapidity of her engines of war have been noticed by every journal in Europe. Rapidity has become the very genius of the age. Railroads are too slow, we must have telegraphs. Hours are too long, we must compress our anxieties into minutes. Wind and water are too dull, we must transmit our thoughts with fire. Destruction is too merciful when it slays one man in sixty beats of the pendulum, we must slay sixty men in the sixty seconds! The rapidity of phrenzy seems to have taken possession of the age, like some evil spirit. And why? Because God has said that he would make "a short work" upon the earth. And because the Devil is in haste, knowing that his time is short.—The Last Vials.

For the World's Crisis.

TO THOSE WHO DO NOT ATTEND PRAYER MEETING

Come, brothers and sisters of like precious faith,
Hear what the Lord by his apostles saith;
Forsake not the assembling of yourselves together,
Confess all your faults and pray for each other.

Come, gather together in the name of the Lord,
Exhort one another and talk on his word;
Come, gird on the armor, the battle is rife,
And the Lord will soon give us eternal life.

'Tis the command of God as much as any other,
That we should assemble ourselves together;
And so much the more as the day draws nigh,
When we expect to see Jesus descending the sky.

Then let us be faithful, obey his commands,
Our loins girt with truth, our lamps in our hands,
All trimmed and burning, our vessels full of oil,
Our garments all clean, without wrinkle or soil.

SIMON MAGUS.

HIS FOLLOWERS NOT ALL DEAD.

The subjoined, from Tillemont's Eccl. Hist., tom. 2, § 5, shows that Simon Magus still has followers in our day, as in the days of Philip and Peter. G. W. S.

"Irenæus says that after Peter had rejected, with horror, his proposal of selling the power of imparting the Holy Spirit, Simon fell into much greater errors and abominations; applying himself to magic more than ever, taking pride in withstanding the apostles, and infecting a great number of persons with his impious errors. For this purpose, it is said, he left Samaria, and traveled through several provinces, seeking places where the gospel had not yet reached, that he might prejudice the minds of men against it. Theodoret says, at Tyre he bought a public prostitute, called Selene or Helene, and carried her with him, committing crimes with her in secret. As to the heresies of Simon, in addition to those imputed to him in Acts 8:10, the fathers accuse him of affirming that he was not only the great power of God, but that he came down as the Father in respect of the Samaritans, as the Son in respect of the Jews, and as the Holy Spirit in respect of the Gentiles; but that it is indifferent which of these names he went by. Jerome quotes these blasphemous expressions out of one of his books: 'I am the word of God; I am the beauty of God; I am the Comforter; I am the Almighty; I am the whole essence of God.' He was the inventor of the Aeons, which were so many persons of whom they composed their deity. His Helene he called the first intelligence, the mother of all things, and sometimes the Holy Ghost, Prunica, or Minerva. He said that by this first intelligence, he had originally a design of creating the angels; but that she, knowing this will of her father, had descended lower, and had produced the angels, and the other spiritual powers, to whom she had given no knowledge of her father; that these angels and powers had afterwards made angels and men; that Helen had passed successively into the bodies of various women (transmigration); among others into that of Helen, wife of Menelius, who occasioned the war of Troy; and at last into the body of this Helen of Tyre. (I wonder if she be not now in some one of our trance speakers.)

"He did not acknowledge Christ to be the Son of God (nor do the Spiritualists of our day), but considered him as a rival, and pretended to be himself the Christ. He believed not the resurrection of the body, but barely a resurrection of the soul." (That is precisely the way that some men are heard to talk in our day; and more is the pity, that it sometimes comes from professedly christian pulpits and ministers.) 'If Satan be transformed, . . what marvel?' He taught that men need not trouble themselves about good works, all actions being indifferent, and that the distinction of actions into good and bad (or evil) was only introduced by the angels, to render men subject to them. He rejected the law of Moses, and said he came to abolish it. He ascribed the Old Testament to the angels, . . . and paid to them an idolatrous worship, pretending that men could not be saved without offering to the Supreme Father abominable sacrifices, by means of the principalities that he placed in each heaven. He offered them his sacrifices, not to obtain assistance from them, but to prevail with them, that they might not oppose men."*

* No wonder John said there were antichrists in his day, nor that some should re-affirm it of the days in which we live.

Olena, Ohio.

THE DEAD SHALL LIVE AGAIN.

Among the many great and precious promises given us by our heavenly Father in the word of inspiration, none are fraught with greater consequences, or better calculated to comfort the christian, than the promise that the dead shall live again. Since it is appointed unto man once to die; and death being a fact, not a theory, for death is the common conqueror of mankind; merciless alike to tender youth and hoary age, to the good and bad, and to all classes and conditions in life. He has filled society with lamentations, and clothed many a mourner in robes of sorrow. His vocation is terrible destruction; and like a conqueror he rideth through the world, leaving his pathway wet with tears and dotted with graves. Each time he comes, it seems to be with the same relentless fury, dealing out to man the cup of bitterness and sorrow. He has no pity. Mothers have knelt before him, and plead for their children in vain; sisters have bowed at his iron throne, and with tearful eyes besought him to revoke the mandate which consigned a brother to the grave, in vain; whole churches, whole nations, have been unable to soften his heart of steel, or move him to one deed of mercy and compassion. Other conquerors have lived a while and died. Alexander and Napoleon are slumbering in their graves. For a short time their banners over defeated armies and prostrate empires waved in triumph. Victory followed them for a while, and gathered its clusters of blood-wet laurels around their heads. But the time of triumph was short. Soon they left the ranks of living men and joined the silent army of the dead. Their dust has mingled with the ashes of beggars and slaves. But death is not yet destroyed. Unlike human tyrants, he holds his sway from age to age, and the monuments of his progress are found through the space of six thousand years. He, with sacrilegious tread, the garden of Eden entered, and following close in the tracks of human sin, marked our first parents as his victims. He has entered into a contest with the mightiest of our race. Patriarchs, prophets, kings, he has consigned to the shades of the sepulchre, and even with the Son of God did the monster grapple, but God by his power raised up Christ from the dead; even so all that believe on Christ, according to the word, though they be bound by the enemy death, yet shall they come forth from their graves, to live again.

Who has not lost a friend, endeared to us by the ties of nature, religion, or marriage? Who has not been called to bury some loved form in the dark earth? What heart has not been torn by having the ties of nature broken? To that heart comes the joyful intelligence, Thy friend shall live again. The grave will give up its dead. Was your friend Christ's? Did he die with faith in Christ? Then he will rise glorious. If you ask when he will rise? I reply, not now. No miracle will Christ put forth to bring him back to life before his time; but, when Jesus comes again, then they that sleep in him will appear also, and in all the beauty of immortality and incorruption will they arise from the dust, and sing songs of unceasing praise to God and the Lamb, while endless years roll on.

Let worms devour my wasting flesh,
And crumble all my bones to dust;
My God shall raise my form anew
At the revival of the just.

If you ask, where shall they rise? I reply, the spot whereon they fell. The scene of their death and burial is to be the scene of their resurrection. The sod on which you have stood and wept, in which you have set sweet flowers, and to which you have loved to repair, will be the spot on which their ransomed feet will stand to wait the crown of glory, which will circle their no longer wasted brows. Skepticism will declare this impossible, and answer that the earth is not large enough to hold all who in successive generations have gone down to the grave. But science declares that only a small part of the earth will be needed for this terrible display; and a late writer has shown, by a mathematical calculation, that every objection arising from this source is completely unsound.

Skepticism will tell you that the dust of the body cannot be re-collected, that it enters into the composition of other bodies, and is lost; but faith takes up the argument, and shows that the same power which first made man out of the dust, can keep his scattered particles until they shall be needed at the last day. Hast thou forgotten that Lazarus and the widow of Nain's son were called back again to life, and came forth with the same bodies, the former after he had lain in the grave four days? How beautiful the thought that the trumpet shall sound, the dead shall come forth from the spot whereon they fell. The sailor who found a watery grave, will emerge from his long, deep resting place; the warrior who fell upon the battle-field, will arise side by side with him who was slain by his own hand, their feuds all ended; whole families will stand together on some green spot, which they have purchased, inclosed, and adorned with care; brother and sister side by side will rise and lock arms together, and long parted friends and families be re-united. If you ask, how they shall rise? I reply, they died with a corruptible body, they shall come forth from the grave with an incorruptible one; the same form, the same flesh, but changed and purified, so that it may exist imperishably forever. They entered the grave as mortal, suffering beings. Their very struggle with death was one of pain. They shall rise immortal, and forever free from pain and death. Their tears and groans were all shed and uttered here. Their sorrows all ended. You saw them weep, you heard them groan; but as you will behold them come forth from their tombs, all these traces will be gone. You loved them in this life; you will love them more when they rise to the dignity of a pure and holy life in the new earth.

If you ask, for what purpose your dead will rise, I reply, they will be raised to be cleared from the legal connection they once held with the dark empire of sin; to be pronounced innocent by Christ, who once bore their load, and to enter with a glorified assembly into the presence of God. They will rise to enjoy all that angels feel of celestial love and peace, and to swell the anthem of heaven, the chorus of the Redeemer, which, beginning upon the outer ranks of the hosts of God, rolls inward, growing deeper and louder, until it gathers and breaks in one full, deep symphony of praise around the throne, "Worthy the Lamb, who once was slain, to receive honor, and power, and glory, and dominion forever and ever!"

Viewed in this light, what a glorious idea the resurrection is. How it destroys the fear of death, and takes away the gloom that gathers around the grave. As we look around, we see the work of death on every side. Rank after rank is falling on the battle-field of life, and the cold earth on which we tread is arched with graves. Men die, and leave long trains of friends, until earth seems to be one vast burial field, and our race made up of the dead and dying only. But soon the change will come when the saints shall shout their triumph over the grave, and their flesh see God.

"O grave, where is thy victory now?
And where, O death, is now thy sting?"

SUGAR-COATED BY THE DEVIL.

What is? A great many things are, or people professing religion would not swallow them as readily as they do. One is, the notion so prevalent amongst us that we are in the gleaning time and that we need not expect the conversion of but very few, if any. This may look plausible at first, but I believe it is only a trick of the Devil to get people to lose their interest in the conversion and salvation of sinners. Never, till the trumpet sounds, are we to cease to warn men to flee from the wrath to come; to beseech men in Christ's stead to be reconciled to God. I know it takes a mighty effort in these times for men to break away from their sins and "serve the living and true God, and to wait for his Son from heaven;" but there is just as much power in the gospel to-day as ever. The great trouble is, men do not preach as though they believed what they preach. People do not live as though they expected the judgment of the great day of God Almighty was at hand.

A great amount of labor has been lost because it has not been in the Lord. Perhaps we have been at fault ourselves in not seeing more converted to Christ. It may be that many have labored to pull down more than to build up. It has been very truthfully said that "more flies can be caught with a spoonfull of molasses than a pail full of vinegar." "He that winneth souls is wise," and we are commanded to be as "wise as serpents, and as harmless as doves." Can we not reform? At many of our conferences and large gatherings, brethren see at the close of the meeting that there has been very little, if any direct effort made for the conversion and salvation of sinners. It does seem too bad that a large number of brethren and sisters should be together a week and no one converted. It seems as though many had lost sight of the object of preaching. There is too much preaching at men's heads, and not enough at their hearts and consciences.

The invitation has gone out bidding men to the feast. People are making their excuses. Does the Lord say never mind, let it pass? Nay, but go out quickly "and compel them to come in, that my house may be filled." Find a preacher that does not really feel for the perishing, and you will find one who can contend and even strive ("the servant of the Lord must not strive") on points of doctrine, even to the division and distraction of the church. I verily believe that the Devil has got so many to swallow this sugar-coated pill that he has caused many to backslide. People cannot lose their anxiety for the conversion of sinners without backsliding from God. Backslidden preachers are to be dreaded, for they can do more harm than any other class in the world. Brethren, AROUSE YE. Beware of Satan's devices. See the fields all white for the harvest. See the awful perdition that awaits the ungodly. See the multitudes in the "broad road" to the second death. Can you be representatives of him who laid down his life for the perishing, and not have your heart melted, while men are perishing? The work of Christ is left with his church. The responsibility is upon us. If we neglect or refuse to do the work, God will spue us out of his mouth, and raise up others that will do the work. The gospel is not narrowed down to one or two points. Salvation for the perishing and the lost is the great theme. The judgment is at hand. Multitudes are perishing. What is done must be done quickly. Let the work of salvation, which God, Christ and angels are all interested in, rest upon you. The long evenings are upon us. This may be, the last winter we may have to labor to save men from the second death. May God roll the burden on the church. Sinners will be converted if the church will have the burden and the labor. Labor to save souls. Labor to bring men to Christ. May God help us to see the devices of Satan, and not be turned from the great work of saving men.

A SIGN.

"But as the days of Noe were, so shall also the coming of the Son of man be."—Matt. 24:37. Thus our Savior has given us a sign by which we may know when we are living in close proximity to his second coming. He teaches us that the days which just precede that event are to resemble the days of Noah. In what will this resemblance consist? We are not left to surmise, for he proceeds to inform us, (read verses 38, 39.) They were then given to excess in feasting and pleasures, by which they were disqualified to hear the truth from the faithful man of God and be profited by it; so the flood came upon them unawares, and they all perished. The awful predictions of Noah neither disturbed the festivities of the gay, nor interrupted the social plans of the more sober; so Jesus gives us to understand it will be in the closing days of this dispensation. Read the following description, which the N. Y. Independent gives of the proceedings at a modern fashionable dinner table:

"It is very common among people who would be shocked to hear themselves called profligate, wasteful, extravagant, or intemperate, to sit three or four hours at a dinner table, to drink half a dozen different kinds of wine, to partake of eight or ten different dishes, to excite their appetites by stimulants, and finally to retire cloyed, stupefied, and verging upon apoplexy and death. Are such habits becoming to rational beings, to say nothing of Republicans and christians?"

It is a fact which cannot be denied, that the people of the world at the present time are fast giving themselves over to feasting and pleasures. And it is not confined to the rich, but the poor also go into these things as far their means will permit them. Look at the parties of pleasure, balls, picnics, donation parties, oyster suppers, and church fairs, throughout our land; and see how they are thronged by professors of religion, while the prayer-meeting is very thinly attended. What effect do these things have upon the people? Why the same it did upon the Antedeluvians. It completely disqualifies them to hear and profit by the truth of the soon coming kingdom, which God is now proclaiming unto this generation through his servants. Is not this likeness as perfect and complete as the camera could possibly reflect it? The Judge standeth at the door. Prepare to meet him.

For the World's Crisis.

"BE YE ALSO READY."

Get ready, is an appeal that goes forth from God's holy book, and from holy men of God everywhere; but the great question is, what shall we get ready for? Certainly not to enjoy the pleasures and vanities of this world, for they are transitory; neither to enjoy the riches of this world's goods, for these things take to themselves wings and fly away. Neither the enjoyment of its gold and silver, for these will canker. Not ready to enter into the follies and fashions of the present day, for these too will do us no good in a short time. Not ready to enjoy a long life in this world, for this life is but a vapor, and is soon gone. Neither are we to get ready to follow the fables of these last days, for these bring us into darkness.

Now, what are we to be ready for? Ready for the coming, and kingdom of Jesus Christ; ready to enjoy the true riches which are in store for God's faithful children, and lay up for ourselves treasure in heaven, where neither moth nor rust doth corrupt, neither do they canker, but will endure for ever and ever.

Be ready at all times, for every good word and work; ready to deny self, and bear the cross daily. Ready to confess Christ before the world, and to labor faithfully in his glorious cause. Ready to receive the precious truths as they are revealed in the gospel, and as the light shines, to walk in it. Ready to enjoy eternal life, with all the redeemed of the earth.

"Be ye also ready; for in such an hour as ye think not, the Son of man cometh." Watch ye therefore, and pray always, that ye may be accounted worthy to escape all those things that shall come to pass, and to stand before the Son of man. "The end of all things is at hand; be ye therefore sober and watchful unto prayer." Stand ready, for time is short. May we all improve our time, so as to please our Lord and Master, and when he comes to make up his jewels, may you and I be found among them. John Morrison.

New Glasgow, C. E., Sept. 1868.

"I was Mistaken."—A lively writer has said, "'I was mistaken,' are the three hardest words to pronounce in the English language." Yet it seems but acknowledging that we are wiser than we were before to see our error, and humbler than we were before to own it. But so it is; and Goldsmith observes, that Frederick the Great did himself more honor by his letter to his Senate, stating that he had just lost a great battle by his own fault, than by all the victories he had won. Perhaps our greatest perfection here is not to escape imperfections, but to see and acknowledge, and lament and correct them.

— Christ has instructed many by the way, and been ready to enter into their hearts and dwellings; but, for want of an invitation to tarry, he has gone by.

The World's Crisis
AND SECOND ADVENT MESSENGER.

Boston, Wednesday, Dec. 9, 1868.

Take Notice!

All subscriptions for the Crisis are payable in advance, at the rate of $2.50 a year.

Please Remember!

All remittances to this office, in the form of drafts, bank-checks and post-office money-orders, should be made payable to the Business Agent, GEO. T. ADAMS.

Money Orders.

Our correspondents should remember that if they send money orders in a letter which contains the name of the sender and the name of the person to whom the order is payable, there is NO SAFETY for their money. Any person may draw the amount named in the order, if these names are given.

Neither is it safe to send us your names in advance. Somebody may open the letter, get the names, and then wait till the order comes, and get that too.

Send on the order, not writing a word; make it payable to GEO. T. ADAMS, directing it to MILES GRANT, or World's Crisis. Then, in two or three days, write in the usual way, stating that you have sent the order, and what you wish done with the money obtained on the same, and it will be entirely safe. In the second communication be sure to give us YOUR NAME AND POST OFFICE ADDRESS. AG'T.

DISCUSSION.

We are to have a discussion with Dr. Morran, in Phenix, R. I., at the Methodist meeting-house, commencing Monday evening, Dec. 7th, to continue six evenings. Subject, the mortality of man. The Dr. is a noted lecturer on popular subjects. In his faith, he is a Scotch Presbyterian.

DEATH.—Our readers will find in another column an article from Bro. C. Colegrove, (formerly a Baptist minister), headed, "Thoughts on a few Things," that will well pay for a careful reading.

BRO. S. W. BISHOP wishes us to say that he is laid up with Sciatic Rheumatism, and consequently cannot fill his appointments east.

CORRECTION.—E. Hale, Vineland, N. J., wishes us to say that we are mistaken in thinking he is a Spiritualist.

WHO CONTROLS ROME?

It has been the opinion of many able writers on Papal power that the decree of Phocas in 607 making Pope Boniface III. the head of all the churches, giving him the world for a diocese, was the date of the beginning of the 1260 years, during which the "times and laws" were to be in the hands of the "little horn." If they began there, they would end in 1867. If so, then in 1867 the Pope must lose control of the "times and laws."

Says Mr. Purden, a noted English writer on prophecy, and a close observer of the signs of the times, "The Emperor Napoleon became master of Rome in 1867. . . . To all intents and purposes Rome is part of the French empire, and the Pope is a SUBJECT of the Emperor."

It will be recollected that Garibaldi attempted to take Rome in 1867, but was prevented by Napoleon. It is very evident that the Pope is completely subject to the will of the French Emperor.

CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE CONVENTION.

An interesting Temperance Convention has been held at the Meionaon, Park St. church, and Music Hall, in Boston, Dec. 2nd and 3d. We are glad to see christian men and ministers taking hold of this subject in earnest. The meetings were largely attended, and the discussions of the various resolutions bearing on the questions, were specially interesting. Nearly all were in favor of advocating total abstinence from all intoxicating liquors as a beverage. There is no other safe position. Intoxicating drinks and the Holy Spirit hold nothing in common. One is directly opposed to the other. We have no sympathy with the doctrine that advocates the drinking of cider, lager beer, whiskey and brandy, as right for the followers of Christ. It is too late in the day, with all the light now before the public, to stand up in defense of "moderate drinking." There is no temperate use of what injures us. Temperance consists in TOTAL ABSTINENCE of all unhealthy food and drink; and a moderate use of what is healthy. No other position is safe for a christian.

We were glad to know that there is a waking up on the subject of tobacco using; and that many begin to see that the use of tobacco in any form tends to produce an appetite for intoxicating drinks. No man can be considered a consistent advocate of temperance, so long as he uses tobacco. Let the friends of Jesus cleanse themselves "from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit." It is too late to parley with these things. Let us cut them off forever; and no longer sanction by our examples the use of what is ruining thousands, both for this life and the one to come.

We fully indorse the following resolution, adopted by the Convention:—

Resolved, That, as intemperance is produced and perpetuated by the social and moderate drinking customs, total abstinence from all intoxicating drink is a christian duty.

Resolved, That the education of the young in the principles and practice of total abstinence is of paramount importance, and it is the bounden duty of pastors, Sabbath school superintendents, teachers and christian parents, by means of the pulpit, the school, the press, the formation of juvenile temperance societies, and the circulation of the pledge among the children and youth, to seek the accomplishment of this end.

Resolved, That the christian press owe a solemn and official duty to the church of Christ and to the world, to use its great influence in forming a correct public sentiment on the subject.

Resolved, That in view of the plain, emphatic and oft-repeated declarations of Scripture concerning drunkenness and the dangers of the wine cup, it is the duty of christian ministers to lift up their voice, earnestly and often, against the wickedness of the vice and its insidious approaches.

Resolved, That in view of the terrible results that are daily occurring from the prescription of intoxicating spirits and all alcoholic preparations as medicines, this Convention does respectfully and earnestly urge all physicians to discourage and avoid their use so far as consistent with their professional duties.

CHRISTIAN ECUMENICAL COUNCIL.

It is now proposed to have two ecumenical councils next year; one by the Catholics at Rome, commencing Dec. 8th; and the other by the Protestants, to be held next autumn, in New York. The Spiritualists also talk of having an ecumenical convention next year. By an ecumenical council is meant a world's council. In speaking of the proposed ecumenical christian convention, the Boston Journal says:—

"The object of the Council will be to produce harmony and good feeling among all denominations of professing christians, and discussions will be had upon all the leading topics which may then agitate the christian world. The importance of such a gathering, to embrace delegates from every quarter of the world, can hardly be over-estimated. It will bring together representatives of all denominations and of every christian nation, and the results of such meeting can but have a very important influence upon the advancement of christianity throughout the world. The Ecumenical Council, called by the Pope, will be held at Rome about the same time, and the calling of these two Councils, the one in America and the other in Italy, seems to indicate that both Protestants and Catholics are about to prepare for increased activity in the work which they have undertaken.

The Council at New York will consist of laymen, as well as clergymen, and among the English christians who have given their approval to the plan and promised their presence is Lord Shaftesbury. It may well be doubted whether the idea of but one christian church will very soon be realized, for the diversities of men's minds naturally lead them to entertain different opinions upon religion as well as other matters. But it is certain that there is a common ground where all christian denominations may meet, and from which, as a stand-point, they can work in harmony and sympathy for the advancement of their common cause. While it is not likely, therefore, that the Council to be held at New York will be able, or even undertake, to break down and remove the barrier of denominational differences, there is every encouragement for hoping that such a meeting will lead to the laying aside of many minor differences and unessential peculiarities, and will simplify and quicken the vital principles of christian faith and enlarge the sphere of christian work. If this can be done, it will be an untold advantage to christianity as an aggressive power, and to the world, which needs to have brought to bear upon it all the power and energy of the Church militant in preparing the way for the Church triumphant."

NAPOLEON'S PLANS.

In the May number of "The Last Vials," published in Torquay, Eng., when speaking of the plans of Napoleon III., the editor says:

The avenger of Napoleon is at hand! The military preparations of France have become the wonder of the age. Nothing like them has been known since Xerxes invaded Greece. The hosts of William the Conqueror would not be missed out of the military array of Napoleon the Third. The great Russian campaign of 1812 has been always looked upon as the mightiest event of modern times. It is the standard of comparison whenever military movements are the theme. But the Third Napoleon transcends the First in the vastness of his preparations as much as in the profoundness of his policy. He has acted for years with that consummate prudence which superficial men have mistaken for imbecility. He allowed Denmark to be broken up by Austria and Prussia; for well he knew that the two plunderers would quarrel for the spoil. He remained silent and passive, that all things might take their course. Austria and Prussia quarrelled for the Danish spoils, and Austria was defeated and laid low. What has been the result? That Austria has now become the vassal of Napoleon, and in place of resisting his ambition will only be too happy in sustaining it, Austria, which was at all times the enemy of the First Napoleon, has become the humble ally of the Third. Has not the Imperial policy been wondrously carried out?

Again: Had Napoleon marched to the Rhine a few years ago he would have been destroyed; for Austria would have joined Prussia against him, and every man in Germany would have taken arms for the honor of the Fatherland; besides, his ambition would have been so conspicuous, that even England and Russia might have joined in an European coalition. But now it is far otherwise. Austria hates Prussia far more than she dreads Napoleon; and the Danish question affords the French government an excuse for war which no one can controvert. Napoleon is not marching to the Rhine; he is only assisting Denmark, or, rather, carrying out the fifth article of the treaty of Prague. That fifth article was inserted by himself with the express object of providing himself with an excuse for a war with Prussia. Now he has a perfect right to assist Denmark, and a still further right to insist on the fulfillment of a treaty. He does not make war for the Rhine, but for this treaty of Prague. Half of Germany will be on his side, the other half indifferent. He will have nothing but Prussia proper to contend with, and France is more than a match for all that Prussia can bring into the field. On his way to Prussia he will have to cross the Rhenish provinces, and if he take possession it will only be the accidents of war,—not by malice prepense; so that he will gain all he wants, with the additional honor of being the patron of the oppressed, and the vindicator of treaties. In all that has hitherto occurred he has shown to the utmost extent some of the most powerful qualities of human character,—patience, silence, and precaution. Not the vulgar silence of the tongue, but the majestic silence of the heart. A fool can hold his tongue, but he can never hold his heart. He has been mocked and ridiculed by the English press as the dupe and plaything of Bismark. He has been represented and caricatured as begging for scraps, and being repulsed even in his humblest request. He has been hated and almost hooted by his own subjects. He has been described by our own shallow press as weak and wavering—as superannuated and worn out. He has endured all obloquy with that majestic silence of the heart—the silence of great deeds—the silence which belongs only to great men. Little men can neither practice nor comprehend it. But what has he been doing amidst this cloud of silence? Like the cloud-compelling Jupiter he has been gathering up his thunderbolts. Woe be to those against whom they shall be launched! He has raised his army to 1,300,000 men. He has exercised his troops in all the evolutions of war. He has trained them to night marches and night attacks. He has hardened their frames by exposure to all weathers—by encampment in the open fields at all seasons—by incessant yet judicious exercise. He has taught them to be familiar with darkness—to take in the twilight like the lions of the desert—to move with order and rapidity amidst the gloom and confusion of midnight. For that most perfect and most powerful of machines—a Napoleonic army—he has provided an equally perfect and powerful arm. He has completed his new rifles, leaving a million in reserve. He has completed his new artillery, and, still more wonderful, he has kept his secret.

Another engine of destruction has been produced under the immediate directions of the Emperor. It is called the 'Mitrailleuse.' By means of this engine a single soldier can discharge fifty musket balls per minute, each ball being effective at one thousand seven hundred yards, or about an English mile. If we combine the 'Mitrailleuse' with the new guns and the Chassepot rifles, we shall find that silence is not imbecility, and that the Emperor Napoleon has not been silent in vain. He has expended his strength, not in empty words, but in pregnant deeds. He has been silent that he might the more secretly prepare, and, above all, that he might preserve the fatal secret of his engines of war. He has succeeded; and we believe the day to be at hand when the ridiculed and superannuated monarch will burst upon Europe with one all-withering blaze of power. The dull, dark thunder-cloud will in one instant quiver with insufferable light. We make no pretensions to infallibility, but we believe the thunder-storm to be at hand."

NEW YORK SOCIETY.

It is said that New York society was never so gay and worldly before as at the present time. The extravagance in dress is unparalleled. There is also a rage for scenes of pleasure, such as no christian should countenance. The New York correspondent of the Boston Journal, Dec. 3d, says:—

"The season is unusually gay. Places of public amusement are not so much frequented, but private parties, soirees, parlor concerts and private theatricals are the rage. Billiard tables are regarded as much of a necessity in a fashionable, well appointed house as a piano. Small chapels, theatres, or concert rooms, are added to first class residences. At these entertainments parties appear in full dress. The extravagance of female costume is extraordinary. Immense trains are the style. The hair is gathered on to the top of the head, after the fashion of Marie Antoinette, and this is powdered, as was the custom in colonial times in this city. To these fashionable entertainments a select company only is invited. These come by tickets, which are delivered at the door. Nine o'clock is early; eleven is the fashion. No seats are allowed in the rooms, and for two hours the wearied party listen to amateur performers, after which they partake of a supper, which closes between two and three o'clock in the morning. A more wilted, jaded, disgusted, disconsolate set than are the fashionable who turn away from the door in New York, where they have been 'enjoying' themselves, cannot be found on the continent."

FIVE HUNDRED MURDERS.

There is a sad state of things at the south, especially in New Orleans, as may be seen from the following intelligence of Dec. 3d:

"A New Orleans letter says that the report of the committee on peace and order upon the outrages and murders attending the last election, will be in print in a few days. It will show over five hundred murders committed in the last two months, and the prevalence of a system of terrorism so frightful as to prevent the bare possibility of any thing bearing the semblance of a retaliation."

METHODIST AND MASONRY.

Under this caption the Independent, week before last, adverted to the fact of the frequent officiating by Freemasons at Methodist Episcopal corner-stone layings. Pertinent to this is the following, from the Chicago correspondent of the Boston Congregationalist. In writing of the General Conference in Chicago, this correspondent says:—

"When the churches shall again come into a grapple with Masonry, as the conflict is already thickening, I fear that this great body will be in the same conditon it was in that with slavery, bound down by complicity with it and unable to move until the simpler politics shall have made the reform popular. A vast number of Methodist Episcopal ministers have been led into that rival fellowship, from the desire thereby to increase their influence; and so they have made a covenant with their lips not to deal with this anti-christian and anti-republican institution. Thanks, that the Congregational ministers and members have to so great an extent been preserved from this unhallowed alliance, and so are ready to give their influence in individual and church capacity for the overthrow of that system."—Banner of Christ.

ONE TALENT WORKERS.—Of them the Northwestern Advocate has these suggestive thoughts:—

It was doubtless not undesigned that he who had but the single talent, is represented as the one of all others who went and buried it, hid it in a napkin. Such a one has most temptation to do so. He naturally thinks that he has so little to invest for God, that it is scarcely worth while to invest it. If he had higher endowments, such as are worthy of God's great cause, then he might well employ them for God, but the yield of his little investment would be so insignificant, that it would amount to nothing, either for God or himself; it would scarcely honor either. In fact, as he reasons, it will be better to let those work who can work better than he. His feeble effort, his ungifted words, his pittance of charity, cannot amount to anything in swelling the aggregate of heavenly successes. So the devil helps him to wrong his master of his due, to rob his God, and thus also secures the inaction of a large part of the church. It is a horrid lullaby hummed by fiends in christian ears. But we must awake. Ten talents scattered among ten individuals, can, in some respects, yield more than ten talents concentrated into one.

If all christians were busy for God, each to the utmost of his ability, the church would at once an hundred fold her power. The giants are working, but the waste of power is with the masses; the eloquent are speaking, but the stammering tongues are silent; the rich and able are giving, but the men of moderate means have not learned as yet, to tithe unto the Lord. . . . A baptism of the million, is the want of the hour. Oh, God! let it fall, speedily, plenteously.

For the World's Crisis.

ROCHESTER.

To-day (Nov. 27th) has been a day of special interest. Our morning meeting was one of those special times in which, as the poet has it, we could

"Sit and sing ourselves away to everlasting bliss."

We felt sure the influence was strong enough to carry the city. Our Sabbath School and Bible class, numbering over one hundred, was near up to that in Boston, which is saying much for such an infantile institution. The afternoon and evening meetings were solemn and profitable. Many are seeking the Lord, while others have recently been made to rejoice in the truth. The prospect for a continued revival was never more hopeful, apparently, than now. Bro. Conolly, one of our devoted brethren, married one of our good singers, and they have gone to Florida to help Bro. Smith. Sr. Searle, one of the salt of the earth, goes to Michigan. You see it requires a river of life to keep up our numbers, which are still increasing. Our hall trembles under the weight of interesting and intelligent listeners to, and believers in, this solemn and glorious message. Give wisdom, give energy, and mighty power, O God, is my prayer.

For the World's Crisis.

TO THE LOVERS OF CHRIST AND HIS CAUSE IN CONN.

Dear Brn. and Srs. in Christ:—Christ having espoused our cause, he very reasonably expects us to make common cause with him in his effort to save us and our fellow men. At our annual conference, recently convened at Square Pond, the feeling was entertained that a greater missionary effort was demanded in our State. There are, manifestly, two reasons for the existing state of the cause.

First, a brother was chosen to act as missionary, and (by vote of the conference) was to receive five dollars per week. That brother on hearing of his having been appointed to thus act (he was not present when appointed), declined, on the ground that the amount voted for his support was inadequate; and that he could not expect collections to be taken for him where he should labor, for the reason that he was to be paid out of the missionary fund. We think that his reasons for refusing to act were valid. And if he had consented to the arrangement, on the terms proposed, he could not have proceeded far on a missionary tour, as the amount contributed for missionary work was very limited indeed; and if the churches have reaped as sparingly as they have sown, they must have gathered a small crop of blessings. "GIVE, AND IT SHALL BE GIVEN UNTO YOU; good measure, pressed down, and shaken together, and running over, shall men give into your bosom."—Luke 6: 38.

Do we love the "gospel of the kingdom," and praise the boundless benevolence of its Author? Then let us imitate that benevolence by using our best endeavors to carry the gospel to all who would gladly hear it. "Let him that heareth say, Come." Have we heard the invitation? Then are we called upon to extend it to those who have not heard it. If we can not go ourselves, we ought to give as the Lord has prospered us, to enable others to go who can, and are waiting only for means.

If the Spirit of Christ moved him to make a great sacrifice to bring the "glad tidings" to us, why will not his Spirit in us move us in the same direction? How can we enter into the joy of our Lord, if we do not take part in that work of his which brings to him such joyful results? or how expect to hear him say, "Well done"? We doubt not that there are many of the Lord's stewards who will dispense means which he has placed in their hands for the work of missions, when satisfied that they will be profitably employed. Well, if the word of the LORD can be relied upon, we have the assurance of this: "Cast thy bread upon the waters; for thou shalt find it after many days. Give a portion to seven, and also to eight; for thou knowest not what evil shall be upon the earth."—Eccl. 11: 1, 2. We profess to believe that the Lord is soon coming to judge the living and the dead; and that what we do must be done quickly. But even if time was to last another generation, the present generation needs to be converted all the same.

Now we ask, in the name of our Lord's cause, that collections be taken by the churches and societies scattered over the State, and forwarded to the committee appointed by the conference to take in hand the work of home missions. Or, let your contributions be an individual offering, as you may choose. All monies forwarded to us will be duly credited, judiciously appropriated, and a faithful report given at the proper time.

If you have not the means which you can spare NOW, please remember this call when you do get something to spare; for we do not wish to come begging very often. Your contributions can be forwarded to either of the committee whose names are appended to this call. L. S. LUDINGTON, New Britain.

THAT CHURCH.

That church in Windsor, Broome Co., N. Y., is finished (with the exception of blinds, and without a steeple) in a plain and commodious manner, and is insured for $800. It was dedicated on the 25th of Oct. Preachers present were Eld. Hitchcock and wife (she preaches), Eld. A. G. Newell, and myself. Eld. Newell and myself went some two hundred miles to attend the dedication, being invited to do so. His traveling expenses were $11.00, which he had to pay himself; not because the little church did not want to remunerate him for his visit; but because of their lack of means, having already exhausted their available funds to build the house of God. There being still a cash debt upon them, they could not do what their hearts inclined them to do, neither towards Bro. Newell or myself; and we cordially bade them God speed, taking the will for the deed. I paid over my subscription of ten shares—$2.50, and also Bro. E. Finn's, of Scranton; and when it was paid, I had left in all sixteen cents; but I trusted in God for money to pay my fare to my next appointment, and, just as I needed it, it came to hand. I stayed and preached in the new church two Sundays, and baptized one dear soul.

For my traveling expenses for three hundred miles, and time spent, some ten or eleven days, I rec'd $4.25. Now I make this statement to show my dear brethren that the ten shares—$2.50, in the house of God at Windsor, is not all the sacrifice that I am making for the cause of truth and the poor persecuted church there; and what surprises me most is, that not one has as yet responded to my call for help for these dear brethren. I will not beg of them to do as they would be done by, but leave it just here, saying in the words of Jesus, "Inasmuch as ye did it not to one of the least of these, ye did it not to me."

Brethren, God has been pleased, through my instrumentality mainly, to raise up a little church in Windsor, and you have no idea of the vile persecutions they have had to endure. So determined were they to drive from their midst the doctrine of life eternal only through Christ, by a resurrection from the dead, that if our brethren had not built a house, the wicked would have gained a victory over them. But glory be to God, he lives, and Jesus lives, and the church in Windsor lives; and I hope in God that they will live, in spite of the devil.

Now, brethren and sisters of my personal acquaintance, it is you to whom I now address myself. Why is not your name in the following list? and how long will it be until I shall have the pleasure of reporting your name with a contribution of one, two, four, eight, ten, or twenty shares in this house of God for the poor saints?

C. F. Sweet ten shares, E. Finn ten do., J. T. Howland eight do., Sarah S. Lane four do., G. H. Bundy four do., C. M. Shepard four do., a friend four do., Sargent Bohanan four do., Park Dewett six do., M. M. Post three do., Mrs. M. Foss two do., N. Rablee two do., "private" two do., Lyman Town two do., S. A. Macomber two do., Mrs F. Pierce one do., H. A. Cressey one do., J. M. M. Gernard one do.,—in all now received and paid over, $17.50. C. F. SWEET.

CHICAGO.

BRO. GRANT:—Knowing that there are many friends east of this place, who feel an especial interest in the cause of truth and the salvation of people in Chicago, thousands of whom are brothers, sisters, children, or were associates of some of your readers, I have looked week after week in the Crisis for some word from the flock here, but nothing has been found.

It must be very cheering to you, and other friends, to know that the good work which was going on when you left has not stopped, but, rather, has been continually moving on ever since; and, in some respects, has increased in interest and power. There is less preaching, but more praying; less doctrine and discussion, but more spirituality and strength. One marked feature of the meetings held, at first in the tent, and now in the church and private houses, has been the soundness of the professions made by the penitents. Nearly all, who confessed their sins and promised to forsake them while you were with us, have testified with uncommon unanimity ever since to their happiness, their devotion to Christ and his truth; and their actions seem all the while to be but the out-working of the renewing spirit they evidently possess.

"Great peace have they," and their zeal in working in the vineyard daily is most gratifying to the Lord's older children. New ones are coming along weekly, and the same spirit of uncompromising devotion and labor is exhibited by them as soon as they get into light and liberty.

The prayer-meetings, held four nights each week, are well attended, are seasons of great interest and profit, and the feelings of unity and mutual sympathy evinced by the members of our happy family are particularly pleasing to witness and experience. How good it is to see genuine heart-work, real piety, in these days of formal profession; and to know that the name and word of our Father in heaven are being honored by true and saving faith in them.

Some of our number are being tried by sickness, by misfortune, by social and business evils, and in other ways; but there is such a good degree of practical trust in the Lord's promises, designed to meet all these cases, that continual rejoicing and unbroken peace is enjoyed, and strength is gained by every trial. Several have been recently baptized, and a large addition will doubtless be made this week to the membership of the society here.

Bro. Chandler, from Iowa, has been with us a couple of days, feeding the flock with good wholesome meat; and Bro. Couch, from New England, is expected to be here the last of this week; so, under the good care of our blessed Master, we are greatly favored, and ought to bring forth much fruit. In a word, the whole body seems to be in good health, having a brisk circulation, good appetite and digestion, and an abundance of nourishing food; and now may we hope to soon grow to the stature of men and women in Christ.

THE TIME OF TROUBLE.

The prophet Daniel has informed us that there is to be, at the time of deliverance, "a time of trouble, such as never was since there was a nation." I think there is an indefinite conclusion among the brethren as to the time when those who are found written in the book will be taken away from this trouble. Some believe that it will be so severe, and the church will suffer so much, as to cause it to cry day and night for Christ to come and deliver it. Others think that the trouble and deliverance will be simultaneous. Let us look at God's dealings with his children in the past. When he destroyed the world with a flood, he had a special regard for Noah and his family; and not until they were safely housed in the ark, and his gentle hand had shut them in, did he permit the thunderbolts of his wrath to be hurled upon the ungodly. At the time of the destruction of Jerusalem, his providential care was seen in the deliverance of his people. Also at the burning of Sodom, the angels said they could do nothing in the fulfillment of their mission, until Lot and his family are taken out of the city. Judging from these providences, we cannot but infer that the same care will be vouchsafed to the little flock at the great consummation. We know that these cases were imperative, for they would have been destroyed with the wicked if they had not been removed.

We are not informed that at the coming of Christ there will be any physical calamity, only perilous times and trouble among nations, iniquity abounding, etc. We can hardly believe there will ever be another time of persecution, when the saints will be put to death, though we know the elements of bloodshed and murder are only pent up, like a volcano, ready to burst forth with all their fury and malignity; and already do we hear of terrible violence, especially in the southern Sodom. It is estimated that for six months past there has been a murder committed every twenty-four hours in the single State of Tennessee. Truly the earth is being filled with violence, and the time of trouble just upon us; but deliverance is also near at hand. Let us watch and pray, that we enter not into the temptation which is to try all who dwell upon the earth. D. N. SMITH.

THANKSGIVING AT THE "STAR OF HOPE."

BRO. GRANT:—Allow us through your columns to say that, though Thanksgiving morning was a very wet one, it did not hinder the expressman from gladdening our hearts by rolling in a couple of barrels of eatables from those blessed people at Worcester. God bless them; they seem ever to have us on their hearts; and their hands and purses move accordingly, and they set about making somebody happy in New York. We had shut the doors and windows, and certainly had a devotional appearance; but on the arrival of these barrels, we laid aside all Sunday appearance, and determined at once to see inside of them, just as children of gratitude would do.

Another item to be grateful for was the safe return of Sr. Smith; who, of course was not far off when the head of a barrel was to be removed; and there she stood, peering down into them, like a pious priest praying God to bless some brother, or sister, whose donation her hand rested on. She muttered a considerable long thanksgiving, and a good many blessings, and we that were outside the barrel by turns exclaimed, Amen; God bless them; and we meant it all, and more too.

We then looked up all the donations of the month, or those received since last publication, and here they are, with a hearty thanksgiving to the donors:—One barrel of clothing from Sandy Hill, N. Y.; cash to pay freight, $2.20. Worcester church, Mass., $15. W. E. Hathaway, North Carver, $2. George P. Hays, Rochester, N. H., $1. Newport, N. H., $1. C. H. Baker, Warren, Mass., $1. Mrs. Eunice Turner, $2. Mrs. Wm. Bassett, Birmingham, Mich., $2. From "Left hand," by the hand of G. T. Adams, $1. Sr. C. H. Y., Biddeford, Me., $1. From Charlestown, Ms, no name, $5. Sr. Smith, So. Hadley Falls, $2; "A friend to the blessed cause," same place, $2. Mary Scammon, Cape Elizabeth, Me., $1. John Rathgeber, Freemansburg, Pa., $1. A former barrel, from Worcester, about Oct. 20th. E. A HEBREW MISSIONARY IN JERUSALEM.—The Israelite, a Jewish paper in Cincinnati, contains an interesting account of a mission to Jerusalem, undertaken by a distinguished Israelite, named Hyman Moses. The Israelite says:

"All reports concur in this one point, that the persons now composing the Hebrew population of Palestine, especially the poor, are unfit to earn a livelihood either in their country, or elsewhere. They learn no trade, no spoken languages, none of the necessary rudiments of a common education, and marry at the age of fifteen, to increase the number of their families, in order to claim a larger portion of the charities.

The immigrants from all parts of the civilized world, are the same class of impractical men, pious pilgrims, who consider it a religious duty to live and to die on the sacred soil, and others who have subsisted on charity at home and do the same in Palestine. They maintain that, by their prayers and their reading of the Talmud, they benefit the Israelites all over the world, and look upon themselves as a class of mediators, an office so foreign to Judaism, between the God of Palestine and the people of Israel.

Mr. Hyman Moses, an old and well-to-do gentlemen, left his family and his ease, and then went in person to the Holy Land, to see that the gifts of generous donors should be properly applied."

On arriving near Jerusalem Mr. Moses was received by a large procession, headed by rabbis, and escorted to the Jewish quarter of the city. He was overwhelmed by petitions for help in all forms, and distributed 15,125 francs among the people and their various charitable institutions. There are about nine thousand poor Hebrews in the city. The money was spent much faster than the demand for charity was exhausted, and Mr. Moses was so overrun with petitions, that he left Jerusalem after a stay of six days. He says the condition of the city is most miserable. Old and dilapidated houses shelter a portion only of the inhabitants; many of them have no shelter. No business or industry of any kind distinguishes the thoroughfares of the ancient capital of David and Solomon. Worse than that is the condition of the country. The highways are infested with robbers. Agriculture is at a low ebb, because there is no protection against robbers and murderers, to whose mercy the agriculturist is exposed. The land is a wilderness, and the cities are ruins inhabited by beggars. The most blessed of countries is in the lowest condition; the key to the interior of Asia in the hands of Bedouins.—Boston Journal.

THE REMARKABLE SUMMER.—An English paper says: "The past summer will long be remembered among meteorologists as one of extraordinary contrasts. While England and the greater part of the Continent of Europe were scorched to the color of brown paper, and suffering from drought, India was deluged with rain. In Bengal, seventy-eight inches of rain fell in nine months, being eleven inches more than the annual average. In the corresponding period of 1867 the fall was fifty-three inches. Other parts of India suffered. In Guzerat, Ahmedabad and Surat, thousands of houses were washed away, and rice crops rotted one after another. No wonder that the different parties who observed, or tried to observe the eclipse, complain of bad weather and imperfect observations. And in southern Europe the rainfall was excessive. Parts of Italy were so drenched, that prayers for fair weather were offered in the churches; and by recent accounts, we learn that Parma has been partially destroyed by floods. Railways are broken by great gaps; and so rainy is it at Como, that the Empress of Russia and other visitors to the shores of the famous lake find more agreeable quarters in Milan. This, again, is in striking contrast with the delightful Indian summer weather which now prevails in England."

DOING GOOD.—Why do you begin to do good so far off? Begin in the centre, and work outwards. If you do not love your wife, do not pretend to such love for the people of the antipodes. If you let some family grudge, some peccadillo, some undesirable gesture, sour your visage towards a sister or a daughter, pray cease to preach beneficence on a large scale. Begin not next door, but within your own door; with your next neighbor, whether relative, servant or superior. Account the man you meet the man you are to bless. Give him such things as you have. 'How can I make him or her happier? This is the question.

From Bro. J. M. Hughes.

BRO. GRANT:—It is with pleasure that I write to you, thanking God for his good hand of keeping me from all harm. I now give you a little sketch of God's delivering me and another christian brother from the hands of wicked men. On the 8th of October I left my home in Brooklyn, and went down South, to a place called Bacon's Castle, Surry Co., Va., to teach school amongst the Freedmen. Everything went on well for a short time. We were doing a good work. Lost men and women were coming into the fold. It would have done you good to see them, and how they love the truth. God blessed our efforts. After I had been there two weeks, Bro. Brundage went about forty miles to preach, and to baptize twenty-five candidates. We asked God to be with him, and to keep him from his enemies. After he had been gone a week, one Saturday night, there was a meeting at the house of one of the colored brethren, and while the meeting was in progress, two of the rebels went and inquired for Bro. Taylor and Brundage; and not finding them, they came up to our house and called our names, and fired three heavy shots, and went off laughing. We thought it was some of the colored men hunting, until Sunday we learned what they had done at the meeting. We were a little alarmed, as Bro. Brundage was away and Bro. Taylor and myself were home alone.

Things went on for a few days. Bro. Taylor preached, and I taught school until Thursday, when I went to Mother Howard's, about ten miles distant. Bro. Taylor taught school for me that day. Just before I started, a neighbor came in and wanted to see Bro. Taylor. After I had gone, she told him that a person had told her we had better go away from the house on Saturday night; that those same men were coming to finish their work. On the same evening we were to have our weekly prayer meeting. We told some of the brethren, and they concluded to have the meeting at our house on Saturday. We had a good time in the Lord. The meeting lasted till two in the morning. Things went on well for a day or two. On Monday night, we had a business meeting of about twelve men. They broke up at ten o'clock. Bro. Taylor and I prepared for our night's rest. It was about fifteen minutes past ten when we put out the light and went to bed. After we had been in bed three quarters of an hour, we heard a great noise. I asked Bro. Taylor if he thought it was white men? He said it was. In a few seconds they came knocking at our door, and demanding us to open. Of course we did not. They used the most terrible language when they found we did not open the door. One of them came with a gun or a pistol and burst out two lights of glass. As it was a log house, it was easy enough to get in. The one that came in at the window, took up a chair and hit Bro. Taylor a severe blow just over the temple, and inflicted a wound an inch and a half deep. By the time that was done, the door was burst open, and they commanded us to get out of bed. Bro. Taylor told them he would if they would give him time. His head was bleeding profusely. He was very weak. They then wanted him to go out doors. So he told them what they had to do or say, do it there, for we were in our own house. They said, "the devil you are." They then pointed pistols at us. I do believe they would have shot us if we had gone out doors. It was the God of Daniel who gave us such fortitude and presence of mind.

I feel to bless the good name of God every time I think of his mighty hand at that time. One of them said, "Why don't you kill him at once?" At that time, one of them hit Bro Taylor with his fist in the right eye. After that they wanted to know what we were down here for. We told them, to preach the gospel to white and black. Then one came to me and asked what I was doing here. I said, I am a teacher. He was just about to do something to me, but one of the others called him away. They would not leave until we would promise to leave the county. We told them we would, so they left on those conditions. It was about twelve o'clock when they went away. A friend came just after they had gone away, and washed Bro. T.'s head. He then laid down, feeling very badly till daylight. A colored man and I sat up till morning. The news spread all around the county the next day. We stopped with neighbors until Thursday when we had to leave the dear people at that place. Bro. Brundage being away, we felt bad to leave him behind. They were not satisfied with what they had done already, but since I have been in New York, I heard from there, and learned they have burnt the house down. I had only a small sum of money to come from there, but the good Lord took care of us.

Some persons thought it hardly my duty to go down there. I believe the Lord sent me; if nothing more it was to teach me to trust God in time of trouble. I always feel it a duty to point dying men and women to the Lamb of God that taketh away the sins of the world, and to warn them of the judgment that is just at the door. I believe that God is just about to arise to shake terribly the the earth. I intend to trust God for all things, keep the faith, and receive the crown of life at the time Paul looked for his.

I am your brother in the faith, and looking for that blessed hope.

JAMES MILTON HUGHES.

From Bro. J. M. Tozier.

BRO. GRANT:—The New Brunswick Mission tent is stored away for the winter. We pitched it in nine places, where we endeavored to proclaim the gospel of the kingdom of God. In some places we met much opposition. In one instance our tent was stoned by a mob, and several large stones thrown through the top of it, and the meeting broken up. Ten guy ropes were cut, and it was with difficulty that the tent was kept standing through the night. Next day (Sabbath) held three meetings, and had good attention, after which the tent was taken down, but not too soon, as the mob began to assemble to finish their work of violence; our tent was down before night, so we escaped their hands.

In other places, our labors were crowned with success. The most was done at Calais, Milltown, Me. Bro. J. R. Hall, of Jacksontown, N. B., and the writer, pitched the tent in that place in the early part of last June. The people showed that they wanted to hear, by the crowds that came to the tent. We preached the word, and God blessed it, and some souls were converted. The place was new to us. We went there strangers, but never did the heralds of the coming kingdom receive greater proof of good will and affectionate kindness than was then shown to us. After nearly three weeks labor in that place, we left for other fields; but the work went on, and towards fall we returned to Milltown, and pitched the tent on the old spot. Here Bro. M. W. Corliss, who had been my companion and fellow laborer with the tent in the province, and Bro. J. B. Fitch, of N. S., joined us; and from that time the work of God has gone steadily forward up to present date. Forty-five have followed the Lord in baptism, a church of about sixty-four members has been organized, and a large hall procured in which to hold meetings. Bro. Corliss will probably remain there during the winter. Through the rich blessings of the Father of mercies, we trust this work will go on, Rochester like, and that many more precious souls will be converted to God. Yours looking for redemption,

J. M. TOZIER.

BRO. GRANT:—The writer of this letter you will recollect by the circumstance of my giving up the use of tobacco, and at the same time not being a christian. You will also recollect the promise I voluntarily made you the night before you left us, that I would write you. I am now fulfilling that promise. You may feel assured that I am still holding fast, for if I were not, you would not receive this letter, for I would be ashamed to write if I had fallen; but thank God for his kindness in keeping me in the faith, and giving me strength to resist all temptation. I thank God for putting into your heart to come to Chicago; for leading me to the tent; for inducing me to throw out that chew of tobacco, and finally turning me to God and convincing me of the error of my ways, that I may do right the balance of my life.

It would do you good to see my home now, and contrast it with what it was before I entered that tent. No more swearing, no more cursing, nor drinking, nor tobacco chewing; but, instead, reading the Scriptures, morning and evening devotion, and none of your cold formalities, but fervent thanks and supplications to our God for his many kindnesses unto me a miserable sinner. You said in your last sermon, you did not think much of a religion that the preacher carried away with him. Neither do many of us in this city. There is much interest, in fact a great interest in all our meetings. It is true our house is not full, but we have a good attendance. It would do you good to attend some of our cottage prayer-metings. The Spirit of God is with us in every meeting.

I will give you a short programme of arrangements, as given out by Bro. Ramsey, commencing on Sabbath morning: half past nine o'clock, prayer-meeting; half past ten, preaching; one, Sabbath School; half past two, preaching; half past six, prayer-meeting; half past seven, preaching. Thus you see how we fill up the Lord's holy day. Now for the week. Prayer-meetings on Tuesday evening at half past seven o'clock, at three different places, and they are all well attended. Then a general prayer-meeting at the church on Thursday evening; in all of which we feel that the Spirit of God is with us. Bro. Ramsey is becoming powerful. I really think I never heard such a sermon as he preached last Sabbath evening, from the text found in 2 Tim. 3: 13. I would like to give you the whole sermon if I could, and had room in this letter. Your brother in Christ,

H. A. MARSH.

From Sr. C. C. Smith.

DEAR BRN. AND SRS.:—As I am sitting and meditating on my (not fashionable, but) comfortable home, the thought of home seemed to me so delightful, I was led to cry out, O praise the Lord for that home which the Lord is preparing for his dear children. O how delightful the thought. Surely God has given us this feeling, and if we are only faithful to our heavenly Parent, we shall soon all be at home to part no more. Blessed prospect! a home in the New Jerusalem, to go no more out for ever. Only think of it! a home with Jesus, and all our loved ones, never more to part, but in that eternal home to praise and adore, and rest for ever in the presence of our blessed Lord and Master. Jesus has said it, and he can not lie.

My pilgrimage is almost run, and I am sighing for a home in that ever glorious country where no one will ever say, I am sick, or tired; no tears will be shed; and what is better still, death will be deprived of his sting. We shall no more have cause to weep that we lay our dear loved ones away in the enemy's land. Praise the Lord for the prospect. Let us kindly bear all the scoffs and frowns of a wicked world a few days longer. Let such things bind our hearts more closely together, and to the Lord Jesus Christ.

I do feel like praising my God for the firm and abiding faith that I have of soon seeing the King in his beauty, and being like him. I thank the Lord for that religion that buoys us up above the vanities and foolish things of this world. By the grace of God, I mean to keep on the whole armor, and have my lamp trimmed and burning, waiting and looking for King Jesus. It is more than my meat and drink to be watching and looking for my Father in heaven. A few more trials, and

"We shall lay our armor by,
And dwell with Christ at home."

Let us try to get as many to go home with us as we can.

Extracts from Letters.

BRO. F. P. HUNT, McIndoes Falls, Vt., Oct. 5th, writes:—"I am here alone. There are none of like precious faith within miles of me. Yet I am not alone, for the Crisis comes once a week to cheer my lonely way, and I prize it next to my Bible. It was the means, under God, of awakening me from a backslidden state, two and a half years ago. Since then, I have had many ups and downs. The fact is, I have tried to be a christian, and not let any one know it; but I find it a hard way to get ahead. Now I am determined, through the grace of God assisting me, to take up my cross and follow my dear Savior wherever he may lead.

Is it not time that we all arise, and gird 'on the whole armor of God'? I feel confident that he that shall come will soon come, and will not tarry. Why, it seems to me that he that runneth might see the signs of the times, the nearness of the great and awful day of the Lord. How sublime, yet how dreadful the moment, when the rending heavens shall disclose to our enraptured view the Son of God in all his glory, descending from heaven with a mighty shout, and the voice of the archangel, which shall echo to earth's remotest bounds. It makes my heart sad, when I contemplate the awful condition of those that know not God, and fear not his name.

I entreat you, fellow sinners, in Christ's stead, be ye reconciled to God, now, this very moment. Do not delay, but flee for your life to the outstretched arms of bleeding mercy. 'Procrastination is the thief of time.' You have no manner of excuse. Come to Jesus. He will save you from your sins, and give you a wedding garment, without which you cannot be at 'the marriage supper of the Lamb.' There is peace in believing, and joy in the Holy Ghost.

How professed christians, men who read their Bibles, can make light of the near advent of our blessed Redeemer, is more than I can tell. Many do more. They scoff at the idea. Some say, 'When are you going up? your time has failed; won't you give it up now?' Nay, bless the Lord, we will not give it up. The signs are thickening every day.

The late terrible earthquakes in South America; the shaking of Gibraltar, with the active state of nearly all the volcanos in the known world; in my opinion these all speak the end near. Even so, come, Lord Jesus. Pray for me, brethren and sisters, that my faith fail not."

BRO. T. P. S. HAMPSON, Biddeford, Me., writes:—"The Lord has blessed the efforts made by us in Bonny Eagle last February. I had an invitation to visit the people there, and began to preach the word, it being the first time they had had an opportunity of hearing what they call 'our doctrine.' God set it home, and now we have a church, a chapel forty-seven by twenty-seven raised, and will be ready for dedication Dec. 24th. The people flock to hear the word for miles around, and about all in the village, saint and sinner, are favorable to the truth as we believe it. There was no meeting at all in the place nearer than about two miles, where the Methodists have a house.

Bro. Wm. Mitchell has baptized some of the converts, and one Methodist sister, and taken them into the church, and more still remain to be baptized the first opportunity. It will be a church of about twenty or twenty-five members, when we take in what are ready, made up of Baptists, Methodists, and converts. A great field is open to spread the truth. Tracts are wanted, and papers."

BRO. T. P. KINKENNON, Higginsville, Ill., Oct. 4th, writes:—"I have been sick and feeble almost all summer, and have not been able to preach much during the summer; but I hope to make up lost time this fall and winter. I have a hard time here among the sects, but with the Bible in one hand, and your treaties on Spiritualism in the other, I can meet the best of them. They have ordered me to quit preaching. They cannot scare me. I am still very thankful to you for the Crisis. It is still a very welcome weekly visitor to myself and family. It is a close watcher of the signs of the times, and a close observer of things in Europe."

BRO. S. NICHOLS, Wakefield, Mass., Nov. 23d, writes:—"'We are waiting, we are watching for the bright prophetic day.' The church in Wakefield (formerly South Reading) feel like trusting in their God. He has done great things for us, and we will praise him. Let us never mind the scoffs nor the frowns of the world. In Jesus' strength we will conquer. 'Fear not, little flock, for it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom.' The Lord has delivered our feet from falling, and our eyes from tears. As a church, we hope, by the help of God, to have his cause sustained till we see the King in his beauty."

From Bro. and Sr. McKinstry.

DEAR BRN. AND SRS.:—We are still confined in Concord, watching by the bedside of a sick mother, who is fast running out life's sands. How long we shall be kept waiting for our enemy we know not. He is certainly coming. Our thanks are due to the churches in Concord for assistance in this hour of great need. Others have assisted. We are still dependent on the Lord for means to pay expenses. RIDLEY. Died in Prospect, Me., Nov. 9th, 1868, John B. Ridley, aged fifty-seven years and six months.

His death was caused by a cancer in his throat, and consumption combined. He was a great sufferer, but he bore it patiently. His trust was in the Lord, and he said that he expected to wake up when Jesus comes. He sought the Lord when about twenty-six years old, and united with the Freewill Baptists; but two years ago last winter, being out of health, so that he could not labor, and there being no meetings in the vicinity, he studied his Bible a great deal, and the Spirit opened his eyes to behold the truth. Since that time, he has ever been ready to speak of the mortality of man and the coming of Christ, and to "contend earnestly for the faith once delivered to the saints." We miss him here, but we "mourn not as others that have no hope," for we expect to meet him in a little while. Words of comfort were spoken by Bro. James Lord.

J. R.

MORGAN. Died at Northfield Farms, Mass., Nov. 24th, Bro. Asahel Morgan, aged seventy-eight years.

He was beloved and faithful in life, and peaceful in his sudden death. He has left a devoted christian wife and three affectionate children, to meet no more till the trump of Jesus shall awaken the slumbers of the tomb. Prayer had been offered just before the paralytic shock which closed his earthly life, in which he united. After appropriate services at his house, we laid him in the grave to wait till the glorious dawn of millennial day. We will then hail our brother in immortal triumph and everlasting bliss.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

Cable News.

LONDON, Dec. 2. It is reported that Mr. Disraeli has gone to Windsor to tender the resignation of the Ministry.

Prime Minister Disraeli has published an address, announcing and defending the resignation of the Ministry. He reviews the progress of the resolves in favor of the dis-establishment of the Irish Church, believing the country would not sanction such measure. The government awaited the elections, for the holding of which all expedition was used. The result shows that the Ministry cannot command the respect of the House of Commons, therefore they feel it due to their own honor and the policy supported by them, not to continue unnecessarily in office a single day, deeming it more consistent with the attitude they hold, the convenience of public business and influence of their party to resign at once instead of awaiting the meeting of parliament in which they must be in a minority. While taking this course they do not modify their opinions, and are more than ever convinced that Mr. Gladstone's proposition is wrong in principle, and probably impracticable, and one which, if practicable, would be disastrous to the nation. They are ready to support reform in the Church of Ireland, but will still offer uncompromising resistance to the policy [enunciated] by Mr. Gladstone.

THE DEATH OF BARON ROTHSCHILD.—A letter from Paris says:

"The Baron died during the night without pain. He was fortunate to the last. With scarcely a shudder he passed from this world. It was three in the morning—the family, worn out with constant watching, had retired to rest—there were but two servants near the sick man. All at once the perfect immobility of the body attracted the attention of the servants, and they ascertained that life was extinct. Since then all the family have not left the chamber where the body lies. The furniture, carpets and all, have been taken away, and, according to the Jewish rites, the mourners sit there on the bare floor. Each morning and evening the friends of the family meet to pray in that room. Their clothes are rent, the men do not shave; in this disorder are the outward signs of woe. As the Baron was a most kind and affectionate father and husband, the inward suffering of those bereaved must of course be great. From the Synagogue the body will be taken to Pere la Chaise, washed and perfumed there, and then buried according to the Jewish ceremonial."

DOMESTIC.

NEW YORK, Dec. 2. The Herald has the following specials from the Indian country:

IN THE FIELD, INDIAN TER., Nov. 28,
via HAY'S CITY, Dec. 1st.

The Cheyenne village of Black Kettle's band was captured yesterday morning at daylight by the 7th cavalry regiment under Gen. Custer on the north fork of the Washita river. One hundred and fifty Indians were killed and their bodies left in our possession, and fifty-three taken prisoners. An immense amount of property was captured and destroyed, consisting of fifty-one lodges, nearly one thousand horses and mules, arms, ammunition, horse equipments, robes, provisions, etc. Capt. Lewis Hamilton was killed in the first charge. Brev. Lieut. Col. Barnitz was severely if not mortally wounded. Maj. Elliot is missing. One man of the 7th was killed and fourteen wounded. The tribe is badly crippled. The Indians, including women and boys, fought with great desperation from the cover of bushes and grass when driven out of the village. Many of the wounded effected their escape. The victory was complete, and will be a wholesome lesson to the Cheyennes. "Black Kettle," the principal chief, was killed.

THE WORLD'S EVANGELICAL ALLIANCE.—Proposed Session in New York City.—A large meeting was recently held at the house of William E. Dodge, to consult in reference to holding a session of the General Conference of the Evangelical Alliance of the various nations in New York. The Rev. Dr. H. B. Smith said that the American branch of the Alliance had sent an invitation to the General Conference in Amsterdam to hold the next meeting in New York. The Rev. S. I. Prime read the following:

"The Council cannot look without anxiety on the state of the European continental nations, and the many causes which, unless restrained by an Almighty arm, may in an unexpected moment disturb the present tranquility, and endanger the peace of the world; and thus prevent the possibility of the intended conference being held.

The attitude of the Papal power towards nations which have recently asserted the right of self-government, and are in various ways breaking off its yoke, and have proclaimed religious liberty to their subjects, together with its vigorous activity in Protestant countries; and the growth and prevalence still further of various forms of intellectual infidelity and practical atheism in all nations; strongly impress the Council with the conviction that Evangelical christians must be more than ever united and active, nor be slow to fulfill the great duties to which the times so loudly call them."

The following resolution was unanimously adopted:

"That this meeting cordially approves of the plan of holding the next General Conference of the Evangelical Alliance in the city of New York, in the autumn of 1869, and pledges its co-operation to the American branch of the Alliance in this work."

A STRANGE DISCOVERY.—A queer exhumation was made in the Strip Vein Coal Bank, at Hammandville, Ohio, one day last week. Mr. James Parsons and his two sons were engaged in making the bank, when a huge mass of coal fell down, disclosing a large smooth slate wall, upon the surface of which were found, carved in bold relief, several lines of hieroglyphics. Crowds have visited the place since the discovery, and many good scholars have tried to decipher the characters, but all have failed. No one has been able to tell in what tongue the words are written. How came the mysterious writing in the bowels of the earth, where probably no human eye has ever penetrated? By whom and when was it written? There are several lines, about three inches apart, the first line containing twenty-five words. Attempts have been made to remove the slate wall and bring it out, but on tapping the wall it gave forth a sound that would seem to indicate the existence of a hollow chamber beyond, and the characters would be destroyed in removing it. At last accounts, Dr. Hartshorn, of Mount Union College, had been sent for to examine the writing.

Ministerial Conf. at Richmond, Me.

The sixth Ministerial Advent Conference will meet at Richmond, (Reed meeting-house), Tuesday, Jan. 12th, 1869, at half past six o'clock P. M. Preaching at a quarter past seven o'clock. Our preaching brethren are earnestly requested to report themselves, either in person, or by letter, and all preachers in the State, in fellowship with the conference, wishing to become members, are invited to signify their desire by writing to the Secretary before the meeting. Come with hearts filled with love, that we may advance the gospel of the kingdom, and work together for the salvation of the perishing.

N. G. REED, President.
L. F. COLE, Secretary.

A Welcome.

To the "N. Y. State Christian Conference," soon to convene at Honeoye, Ontario Co., N. Y. We heartily welcome you to our midst; not only the ministry, but all lovers of truth are invited to come and engage with us in the work of God. Those coming through Rochester will take the cars at the Genesee Valley depot, and stop at Livonia station, on the Erie road. Honeoye is situated nine miles from the station; accessible by stages which leave for the station twice a day, returning in the afternoon and evening. Those who can, will do well to take the early trains, and arrive in time for the first stage, which leaves the station about noon. Inquire for Bro. A. C. Bishop, with whom I reside, only a few rods from the hall we occupy. Come, all who can, with praying hearts, to brave the difficulties of a somewhat tedious route. We shall welcome you with warm hearts and fires, and provide good, comfortable homes of entertainment, free of charge, without feeling that you are a burden.

N. B. Do not go to Honeoye Falls, as some have done through mistake, as they are two places, and in different counties.

In behalf of the church in Honeoye, Ontario Co., N. Y., E. S. JENNINGS.

Advent Chris. Conf. of N. Y. State.

The Quarterly Advent Christian Conference of New York State will meet at Honeoye, Ontario Co., N. Y., Dec. 17th, 1868. Those who attend the conference will stop at Livonia Station, on the New York and Erie R. R., where teams will probably be in attendance to convey them to Honeoye. It is hoped there will be a full attendance.

J. R. COOPER, Secretary.

Dedication.

The Lord willing, the new Second Advent Chapel at Bonny Eagle Falls, Me., will be dedicated to God's service on Thursday, Dec. 24th, 1868; after which will be continued a conference meeting the remainder of the week, and over the following Sabbath. Eld. Wm. H. Mitchell and others are expected to be present to preach the word. Brethren and sisters scattered abroad, and preaching brethren, are cordially invited to attend this meeting, and join with us to labor for the advancement of the cause of Christ and truth, and for the salvation of the perishing. Homes will be provided for all who may come.

In behalf of the church, T. P. T. HAMPSON.

Notice.

By invitation of the church at New Haven, Conn., the next quarterly meeting of the Conn. A. C. Conference will be held in Day's Hall, New Haven, Conn., commencing Wednesday evening, January 6th, 1869. We sincerely hope that all the churches will send delegates; and let all preaching brethren make an extra effort to be present. The place of meeting is accessible from all points by R. R. Come in the spirit and bring a blessing with you. Preaching first evening.

L. F. MOORE, Secretary.

German Tracts.

Bro. Reimer has a good supply. Send your orders to L. REIMER, 509 Coates Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

Pine Swamp, Ct.

Providence permitting, a series of meetings will commence at Pine Swamp, Ct., Tuesday evening, Dec. 15th, to continue over Sunday, and perhaps longer. All who take an interest in the salvation of the perishing are invited to come and labor with us to this end.

A. ELLIOTT.
C. H. SWEET.

The Devil's Harvest Time.

The Devil has special times to gather souls into his nest. Winter is the most favorable time for him to step in the churches, [illegible] and many give themselves up to [illegible] rather than to study and [illegible] souls to him. Let us be awake to [illegible] all we can to discover Satan's snares, and elude his grasp. Now is the time to scatter that little sheet on Church Fairs and Lotteries, entitled "AN ADMONITION." We have published ten thousand copies, and have a few thousands yet. Price, postpaid, $1.00 per one hundred copies, or 20 cts. per dozen.

Yarmouth, Me. L. C. WELLCOME.

Notice.

To the brethren and sisters scattered abroad, who are interested in the Star of Hope Mission: Sr. Anna E. Smith, Superintendent, can procure the full report of her labors and expenses for the past twelve months, which is got up in pamphlet form. Single copies 15 cents, by the dozen $1.25. The proceeds, after paying the printer's bills, etc., will go to defray the expenses of the mission. They can be had by sending to ANNA E. SMITH, 14 Laurens Street, New York, or to H. L. HASTINGS, Scriptural Tract Repository, Boston.

Notice.

There are many persons who are too feeble to work hard, others cannot obtain employment that affords much pay. We would say to such that if they would like to canvass for works that are excellent and very saleable, we will put them on the right track if they will write us with a stamp to pay for answer. Men and women both can be supplied. Receiving as we do new subscription books from various publishing houses, we know the merits of the works we are prepared to recommend.

M. D. WELLCOME, Yarmouth, Me.

Notice.

Bro. Peter Mitson is going on a visit East, as far as the province of Quebec, and I would say to the friends and churches that he is a member of the Minnesota Conference, and a faithful laborer in the cause of his Master.

WM. J. BURSELL.

Appointments.

☞ We would say to our preaching Brethren that it is necessary we should receive their appointments as early as TUESDAY MORNING, as our paper goes to press about noon; otherwise they will not be inserted till the week following.

[illegible] I knew
My s[illegible] forgiven;
When I with faith's bright eye could view
The narrow way to heaven;
And O, how narrow was the way,
Compared with sin's broad road;
O Lord, I cried, give me this day
The light of thine abode.

I know thou art the truth and life,
The christian's anchor sure;
O guide me through this world of strife,
And help me to endure.
My weakness, Lord, is very great,
My strength is very small;
Behold my weak and sinful state,
Support me lest I fall.

Then lo, upon my soul was poured
Such joys I never knew;
For then my Savior I adored,
I bade the world adieu;
I loved to do my Master's will;
Was willing to obey;
Then O what peace my heart did fill,
Walking the narrow way.

O blessed choice, full well I know
That in the world to come,
If I am faithful here below,
I soon shall rest at home.
No sorrow there shall dim the brow,
Sighing shall flee away;
O help me, Lord, to serve thee now,
And save me in that day.

Brimfield, Mass. GEO. E. LEE.

For the World's Crisis.

ORTHODOXY, TORMENT, HELL-FIRE.

Perhaps it is not generally known, even by those who claim that the punishment of the wicked will be eternal torment in hell-fire, to what lengths acknowledged orthodox divines have gone in describing the miseries endured by the damned.

Ambrose, Bishop of Milan, who wrote between A. D. 374 and 397, in his sermon of doom's day, says: "When the damned have drunken down whole draughts of brimstone one day, they must do the same another day. The eye shall be tormented with the sight of devils, the ear with the hideous yellings and outcries of the damned; in flames the nostrils shall be smothered as it were with brimstone; the tongue, the hand, the foot, and every part, shall fry in flames."

Emmons says: "The happiness of the elect in heaven will in part consist in witnessing the torments of the damned in hell. And among those it may be their own children, parents, husbands, wives, and friends on earth. One part of the business of the blessed is to celebrate the doctrine of reprobation. While the decree of reprobation is eternally executing on the vessels of wrath, the smoke of their torment will be eternally ascending in view of the vessels of mercy, who, instead of taking the part of those miserable objects, will say, 'Amen, hallelujah, praise the Lord.'" —Sermons, 16.

Dr. Watts fully equals this, when, in one of his hymns, he describes the torments of children thus:

"There is a never-ending hell,
And never dying pains,
Where children must with demons dwell,
In darkness, fire and chains.
* * * * * * *
Have faith the same with endless shame,
To all the human race;
For hell is crammed with infants damned,
Without a day of grace."

Rev. Jonathan Edwards says: "Reprobate infants are vipers of vengeance, which Jehovah will hold over hell in the tongs of his wrath, until they turn and spit venom in his face."

Richard Benson, a standard Methodist writer, and one of their ablest divines, says: "God is present in hell, in his infinite justice and almighty wrath, as an unfathomable sea of liquid fire, where the wicked must drink in everlasting torture. The presence of God in his vengeance scatters darkness and woe through the dreary regions of misery. As heaven would be no heaven if God did not there display or manifest his love, so hell would be no hell, if God did not there display his wrath. It is the presence and agency of God which gives every thing virtue and efficacy, without which there can be no life, no sensibility, no power; God is, therefore, himself present in hell, to see to the punishment of these rebels against his government, that it may be adequate to the infinity of their guilt. His fiery indignation kindles, and his fury feeds the flame of their torment, while his powerful presence and operation maintain their being, and render all their powers most acutely sensible; thus setting the keenest edge upon their pain, and making it cut most intolerably deep. He will exert all his divine attributes to make them as wretched as the capacity of their being will admit."

Hear President Edwards, the famous metaphysician and divine of New England: "The woes of sinners in hell will not be a cause of grief to the saints in heaven, but of rejoicing. This rejoicing will be the fruit of an amiable disposition, and a perfect holiness and conformity to Christ. . . . . After your godly parents shall have seen you lie in hell millions of years or ages, in torment day and night, they will not begin to pity you then. They will praise God that his justice appears in the eternity of your misery. The torments in hell will be immeasurably greater than being in a glowing oven, or brick kiln, or fiery furnace."

As terrible as these descriptions of hell torment are, they do not surpass that given by C. H. Spurgeon, of England, the greatest living pulpit orator. Let him speak:

"When thou diest, thy soul will be tormented alone; that will be a hell for it; but at the day of judgment thy body will join thy soul, and then thou wilt have twin hells; body and soul will be together, each brimfull of pain, thy soul sweating in its inmost pore drops of blood; and thy body, from head to foot, suffused with agony; conscience, judgment, memory, all tortured; but more; thy head tormented with

"Sullen moans and hollow groans,
And shrieks of tortured ghosts."

Thine heart beating high with fever; thy pulse rattling at an enormous rate in agony; thy limbs cracking like the martyrs in the fire, and yet unburnt; thyself put in a vessel of hot oil, pained, yet coming out undestroyed; all thy veins becoming a road for the feet of pain to travel on; every nerve a string on which the Devil shall ever play his diabolical tune of hell's unutterable lament; thy soul forever and ever aching, and thy body palpitating in unison with thy soul. Fictions, sir? Again I say, they are no fictions, and as God liveth, but solid, stern truth. If God be true, and this Bible be true, what I have said is the truth, and you will find it one day to be so."

These quotations will serve for an example of what has been, and is yet taught as Bible truth. Christ says; "Search the scriptures, for in them ye think ye have eternal life"; and we incline to the opinion that if there was more searching of the living oracles, there would be fewer assertions about the eternal woes of the lost. It would soon be manifest to the inquirer that "all the wicked God will destroy"; "that the wages of sin is death, but the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord." J. M. T.

— Consult duty, not events. We have nothing to do but to mind our duty. O how quiet, as well as holy, would our lives be, had we learned that single lesson, to be careful for nothing, but to do our duty, and leave all consequences to God.

For the World's Crisis.

LETTERS.

"The wilderness . . . . shall be glad; and the desert shall rejoice."

Dear Christian Friends:—From thousands whose faces I shall never look upon, I can hear with heartfelt pleasure through letters published in the Crisis. Often have I read these letters, and found that life, which is the strength of the heart, flowing richly from some soul far away amid the distant hills; and I have thought that this feature of the paper—its little letters, written in simplicity, and like the fresh fields around the writer's humble home, watered by a fountain of living water, was its light; like the "light in the window" of which we sing, those letters are lights which look very pleasant to cheer the passer-by. When we write to a dear and familiar friend, we do not write for show, but for friendship. I have often read the elaborate essays of the learned and titled, in many periodicals and papers, but give me rather the little letters from unpretending, but warm-hearted, humble, but active men and women.

Almost the last words spoken on earth by Jesus were these, addressed to the strong man, whose bitter tears had been shed, when the shadows had darkened his heart after the "denial": "Simon, . . . lovest thou me? . . . Feed my lambs." The time of doubt and hesitation had passed by with the fisherman apostle; and true to the faith and love revealed in his soul, he began a work that has now almost filled this vast world. "Feed my lambs" has echoed and re-echoed from sea to sea, from shore to shore; and still the voice is heard. Glorious prophecies are fulfilling. Little children sing hosanna now; not only in Jerusalem, hailing the approach of the lover of little children, but in every land, in every tongue. Blessed jubilee! "Beautiful for situation, the joy of the whole earth, is Mount Zion." While strong men are hurrying to and fro, and publishing with a loud voice the glad tidings of great joy, the glorious gospel of peace; let us, whose homes are in every green spot of our sunny land, do our work at home. The same lips are saying to you and me, "Feed my lambs." They are all around us. Happy father and mother, they are in your bosoms, at your side, continually; feed them with the love and hope and joy so freely given you by your Father, who giveth you all things richly to enjoy. Shade not the warm young life by harshness' deadly nightshade; but remember that out of the mouth of your little ones God says he has perfected praise; and that they are his; and he will judge you in some coming day, if your trust is not sacred in your eyes, and nourished for heaven, to meet love's warm embrace from the same dear Savior who called little children to him and blessed them.

Teacher of day school, or Sabbath school, these little lambs gather around YOU. Take them in your arms, fold them to your bosom, let them feel your hands resting in blessing on their little heads, and never fear but the Lord of life will rest on YOU, though wearily you may toil your life away. Remember that when the Son of man shall appear in his glory, you will surely lift up your head and rejoice, when he calls you to him, and says—"Come, ye blessed of my Father, . . . for I was an hungered, and ye gave me meat; . . . I was a stranger," "sick," and "in prison," and ye ministered unto me. "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me." Your sister, J. M. EATON.

REPORT OF THE FIFTEENTH MAINE ANNUAL SECOND ADVENT CONF.

According to appointment, conference convened in Bath, Nov. 18th, evening. The time was occupied in preaching the word. Thursday, the 19th, was also spent in preaching, prayer, and testimony. The traveling being bad, the attendance from abroad was small, but the house was well filled with attentive hearers, of the city, to listen to the word, and worship the God of all mercies and grace.

Friday, Nov. 20th, met at 9 A. M., and after prayer the meeting was called to order by the Secretary, for business; the President and Vice President both being absent, Elder I. Damman was chosen President; Eld. H. D. Reed, Vice President; Eld. I. C. Wellcome, Secretary; Eld. R. R. York, Treasurer.

The Chair appointed N. G. Reed, H. D. Reed, and I. C. Wellcome, a committee to bring business before conference. Brn. M. B. Patterson, L. F. Cole, and N. G. Reed, were then received as members of this conference by vote.

Voted, To invite those brethren who are present, and not members of this conference, to participate with us.

Saturday, 21st, 8½ o'clock. Met for business. Opened by prayer.

Voted, That the Chair appoint a committee of two to communicate with Eld. J. C. Wheeler, personally, or by letter. Elders J. A. Libby and E. M. Haggett were appointed said committee. Bro. L. Boutell presented the following:

Resolved, That we sympathize with the Advent Freedmen's Mission Board, in their efforts to help the poor and needy colored race, as well as others, to the gospel of the kingdom, with the instructions necessary to restore them into the way of life, and make them wise unto salvation. Carried.

Resolved, That they shall have our sympathies, prayers and means to help sustain them in their mission work, and that we will pledge our hearty co-operation in the good work of relieving the needs of the poverty-stricken and helpless. Carried. The following was then offered:

Resolved, That the mission work now carried on by Bro. and Sr. Hastings, among the Freedmen of the South, and among all, in various directions, by sending out laborers, and in the publication of tracts and papers of a healthful and valuable character, shall receive our hearty sympathy, prayers, and co-operation. Carried.

Voted, That, as the Treasurer is not present to report the finances, relating to the $500 proposed to be raised the last year for mission work, he, and all the ministers engaged in collecting the same, be requested to report to the Ministerial Conference, to be holden in January next; and until then, that they continue their efforts in raising said fund.

SPECIAL ATTENTION.

Resolved, That this conference call especial attention of the lay brethren and sisters in Maine to the fact that in all our efforts to raise money for the tract, tent, and mission causes, the few DO ALL, while the many do nothing in these causes, and the ministry do much the largest part of what is done in giving what money is raised. Instance. Of the seventy-six dollars known to be raised for mission work the last year, five ministers gave seventy dollars of it, while they also spend nearly all their time in publishing the gospel, and support their families mostly from their own earnings. Brethren, "these things ought not so to be." Carried.

Voted, The disbursing committee be the same as was appointed last year, viz., S. K. Partridge, R. R. York, I. C. Wellcome, Wm. H. Mitchell, and I. Damman.

Resolved, That this conference hereby request the conductors of "The World's Crisis" and "The Voice of the West" to refrain from publishing appointments for meetings among us, or as of our people, from all whose names shall be reported to them by the officers of our conferences, as men unworthy of our fellowship, as called of God to preach, or to be received by community as such. Carried.

Resolved, That this conference become united with the "Maine Second Advent Ministerial Conference," and be one body, provided that conference shall accept it at its next session; and if they do not, it is resolved that we meet hereafter at the same time and place with them. Carried.

The remainder of the A. M. was occupied in hearing reports of the state of the cause and the churches, from delegates and ministers; these were very cheering and encouraging, showing a growing and healthful interest in Christ, from many parts of the State. A goodly number have been converted, and many others embraced "the blessed hope." Several churches have been gathered and organized, and many new doors opened for the gospel of the kingdom to be preached. Our preaching and social meetings were well attended at this conference, and the blessing of God was truly manifest. Two were converted, and several others were under deep conviction. The Lord is at work in Bath. Adjourned without date. I. DAMMAN, President.
I. C. WELLCOME, Sec'y.

ACROSTIC.

May God direct you day by day,
In all you do, and all you say;
Loud may sound the tidings sweet,
Enduring every thing you meet,
Scoffs, strifes, until your work's complete.

Great be your peace the journey through,
Rough though the way, and in it few;
Assailed by foes on every hand,
Never may aught unloose the band
That binds you for the promised land,

CONFERENCE REPORT.

The first quarterly session of the N. H. State Conference, was held, according to appointment, at Barnstead, Clark Meeting-house, commencing Thursday, evening Nov. 19th, and continued over the following Lord's day. Owing to the appointment not appearing in the paper sooner, our meeting was not large at first; but it soon increased in numbers and interest, to the end. The Lord was truly present to bless. Never did truth shine with more glory; and never can it receive a more candid hearing. The Baptists, who of late have been enjoying a revival interest, united with us in our meeting, which added to the interest. Bro. Haskins is an earnest and faithful watchman, whose labors have been blessed in the Lord in that place. The Lord has been greatly blessing this brother the past year with his truth; during which time he has lost his sky-kingdom and found the one that God prepared from the foundation of the world; also his post millennium, and many of the traditions of the fathers. He is now lifting his warning voice against all of the crying sins of the day; and preaching the coming of Christ at the door. May the Lord greatly bless his labors, and make him mighty, through God, to the pulling down of the strong holds of Satan.

Preachers present at the conference were Brn. Smith, Allen, D. F. Leavitt, Moony, Haskins, Parsons, and the writer. Thursday evening, preaching by Bro. Allen. Friday, A. M., social meeting. P. M., preaching by Bro. Smith. Evening, social meeting. Saturday, A. M., preaching by Bro. Leavitt. P. M., by the writer. Evening, by Bro. Mooney. Lord's day and evening, by the writer. The Lord truly blessed his servants while preaching this gospel of the kingdom, and also blessed the people with ears to hear, and I trust, some at least, with hearts to receive it. The judgment day alone can reveal the work accomplished by such meetings. Therefore, dear brethren and sisters, as we are assured by the fulfilling of the last signs that Jesus gave, that our work must soon be done for a perishing world, let us gird on the armor anew, and in God's name do all we can in publishing the great truths, which God in mercy has given to prepare the church and world for his coming. HOAG'S VISION.

We are desired to republish Joseph Hoag's vision, as follows:—

On the 8th of 9th mo., in the year 1803, I was one day alone in the field, and observed the sun shone clear, but a mist eclipsed its brightness. As I reflected upon the singularity of the event, my mind was struck into a silence the most solemn I ever remember to have experienced, for all of my faculties were low, and being brought into silence, I enquired of myself, "What can all this mean?"

I do not recollect ever before, to have been sensible of such feelings, when I heard a voice from heaven saying:—"This which thou seest, and which dims the brightness of the sun, is a sign of the present and future time. I took the forefathers of this country from a land of oppression, and planted them here among the people of the forest; I sustained them, and while they were humble, I blessed and fed them, and they became a numerous people; but now they have become proud and lifted up, and have forgotten me, who nourished and protected them in the wilderness, and are running into every abomination and evil practice of which the old countries are guilty; and have taken quietude from the land, and suffered a dividing spirit to come among them;—lift up thine eyes and behold!"

And I saw them dividing in great heat. This division began in the church on points of doctrine. It commenced in the Presbyterian society, and went through the various religious denominations, and in its progress and close its effects were the same. Those that dissented went off with high heads and taunting language; but those who kept to their original sentiments appeared exercised and sorrowful; and when the dividing spirit entered the society of Friends, it raged in as high a degree as in any I had before discovered, but those keeping their ancient principles retired by themselves.

It appeared in lodges of Freemasons, and broke out in appearance like a volcano, insomuch that it set the country in an uproar for a length of time.

Then it entered politics in the United States, and did not stop till it had produced a civil war, and an abundance of human blood was shed in the contest.

The Southern States lost their power, and slavery was annihilated from their borders; then a monarchical power arose, took the government of the States, established a National Religion, and made all people tributary to support its expenses.

I saw them take property from Friends to a large amount. I was amazed at beholding all this, and I heard a voice proclaim:—

"This power shall not always stand, but with it I shall chastise my church, till it returns to the faithfulness of its forefathers. Thou seest what is coming on thy native land, for its iniquities and the blood of Africa, the remembrance of which has come up before me."

This vision is yet for many days. I had no idea of writing it for many years, until it became such a burden to my mind, that for my own relief I have written it.

REMARK;—Joseph Hoag was the oldest child of Elijah and Phebe Hoag, and was born in Duchess Co., N. Y. in the year 1762; in 1789 he moved to Charlotte, Vt., where he continued to reside until his death, which was in 1846, in his 84th year.

This vision was revealed to Mr. Hoag sixty-five years ago. It is not known whether it was written the same year or not, as it was taken from his journal kept during life and was not dated at the time it was written.

Mr. Hoag was an eminent and devoted minister of the Society of Friends.

FAITH vs. OPINION.

These are different things altogether. We all must have faith alike, but our opinions differ greatly. "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ." This is faith. All cannot see all things alike in religious matters, any more than in temporal things. Some believe that Jesus is coming at a certain time; others, just as good and talented, don't see it so. Shall we elbow each other for this difference in, not faith, but opinion? I believe "all that are in their graves" will be raised; another, just as sincere, a much better man, far more talented, believes the wicked will not be raised. Shall I strike him for not believing as I do? Must he kick me for not seeing with him? I believe the wicked will be destroyed; another thinks they will suffer misery eternally. We both claim to be sincere. If one can't convince the other, must he browbeat, and hook the other with envious horns? I believe immersion is baptism; you believe sprinkling is just as good. We try to convince each other of the truth, but can't; and shall we fight about it? I don't think it is essential to baptize infants; perhaps you do. I can't see any reason for it; you think you do. Must I hit you, or you knock me down for this? Some believe in the "age to come," and the "return of the Jews" to the Holy Land; others don't. Why should they fight about these differences of opinion? I claim we all have a right to our opinions; but have no right to our faith, only to the faith we must all agree in this thing, and we can; we need not agree in opinion to be christians, for we cannot do it in mortal life.

— As you would be lovely in the sight of God, try to be Christ-like. Certainly it is the spirit of Christ within you, which only can make you lovely; the more you resemble him in holiness, the more will you manifest of true excellence; and the more frequent and spiritual your communion with Christ, the more of the loveliness of Christ will be stamped upon your spirits, changing you into the same image, from glory to glory.

— The only way for a man to escape being found out, is to pass for what he is. The only way to maintain a good character, is to deserve it. It is easier to correct our faults than to conceal them.

— We can do a great deal for our friends, but there are some things we cannot do. We cannot repent for them, or die for them. These two things they must do for themselves.

— Two laws are more adequate to the regulation of the whole christian community, than all political institutions together—namely, the love of God, and that of our neighbor.

— Better lie in the dust than rise by wickedness; he that rises by sin, rises with God's curse hanging over his head.

— It were better to perish by a violent death than to live so as to cause one of God's little ones to stumble.

— It has been beautifully said, that "the veil which covers the face of futurity is woven by the hand of mercy."

— Prayer is ever profitable; at night it is our covering; in the morning it is our armor. Prayer should be the key of the day, and the lock of the night.

— Everything short of confession of sin before God, is contending with him.

— Advice which like the snow, softly falls, dwells the longer upon, and sinks the deeper into the mind.

— Every offence forgiven is a power given the offender against the recommission of the same offence.

— Religion is the best armor that a man can have, but the worst cloak.

— Observed duties maintain our credit, but secret duties maintain our life.

— As waters in motion are purest, so saints in affliction are holiest.

— Be always at leisure to do a good action; never make business an excuse for avoiding offices of humanity.

— Nothing can occur beyond the strength of faith to sustain, or transcending the resources of religion to relieve.

— It is easier to perform the moral deeds which the world must witness than to crush the small temptation which comes in our private hours, inciting to a little sin which the world can never know.

— These two things, contradictory as they may seem, must go together: manly dependence and manly independence; manly reliance and manly self-reliance.

— Regret not the golden age that is behind. There is one before, and it beckons you.

— The greatest lack of self-respect is exhibited in thinking continually of self.

— When the good man dies, the tears he in life prevented from flowing, are shed.

— Do not speak well of yourself, if you wish to be spoken well of by others.

— Keep sin away, and leave the rest to God.

POWER OF A PSALM TUNE.—A good deacon, who was naturally a high tempered man, had been used to beat his oxen over their heads, as all his neighbors did. It was observed that, when he became a christian, his cattle were remarkably docile. A friend inquired into the secret. "Why," said the deacon, "formerly, when my oxen were a little contrary, I flew into a passion, and beat them unmercifully. This made the matter worse. Now, when they do not behave well, I go behind the load, and sit down and sing Old Hundred. I don't know how it is, but the psalm tune has a surprising effect on my oxen."

THE PRESENT MAP OF EUROPE.

The new map of France, of which so much has been said, was issued in Paris on the 28th ultimo. The London Daily News has the following comments:

"It can scarcely be to tranquilize the nation that this new map of Europe has been produced. The nation never asked for Nice or Savoy, and has never shown itself particularly proud of the acquisition. Algeria was not a conquest of the Empire, and is not usually regarded as a very valuable addition to the natural resources of France in war or in peace. The French people have had so very little to do with the national affairs for the last eighteen years, that they cannot be supposed to take a warm interest in the Imperial policy, except in so far as that policy threatens to involve them in the calamities of war. But does not the Emperor care to persuade the nation which he has never taken into his counsels? Surely it is to the army, not to the nation, that this map is addressed; and without for an instant suspecting Louis Napoleon of the absurdly Machiavelic design of provoking military susceptibilities instead of allaying them by making the new power of Prussia patent to all eyes, so that every soldier in the Empire may feel himself humiliated, and burn for revenge, we cannot escape the impression that the production of this map is calculated to puzzle and perplex the public mind, and therefore to disturb the confidence in peace, and to exasperate that distrust, which makes men at last, from sheer desperation and despondency, prefer the worst of certainties to the fever and paralysis of perpetual mystification. We should be only too glad to believe that in publishing this map the Emperor had no other thought than peace. But in that case, its appearance ought, according to that logic which the Emperor loves so well, to be followed and completed by a decree reducing the army to a peace footing, and inviting other Powers to do likewise, instead of accompanying the equipment and drill of the Moveable National Guard, and immediately preceding an article in the Moniteur, which explains and justifies in its own fashion the maintenance of the Austrian army, at an effective strength of eight hundred thousand men."

WAR OR PEACE.

The Paris Gaulois reports that Bismarck has sent the King of Prussia the heads of an entirely pacific speech. This news, headed as "Latest and Important," (says the Paris correspondent of the London Times,) has not been thought worth the honors of reproduction by a single morning or evening paper to-day. No doubt the King of Prussia will profess pacific sentiments. Monarchs always do till the moment comes for declaring war; but none but simpletons will believe the Moniteur when it says that good feeling prevails among the powers. A specimen of this good feeling is to be found in a Havas despatch, carefully kept back until after Bourse hours, giving an extract from an article in the St. Petersburg Journal of yesterday, headed "War or Peace." This article says that the maintainance of peace is "possible," in spite of all the preparations for war, but that if France, after gaining a victory, should cross the Rhine, and if an insurrection in the Grand Duchy of Posen should produce a rising in Poland, the Russian army would then be induced to take the field to re-establish order. The national Russian movement would then take a rapid and energetic extension, and the appearance of the French eagles in Germany, would revive with redoubled force the souvenirs of the first empire.

The solemn fact is, however it may suit various parties to blink it, that owing to the ambitious designs of Napoleon III., and his manifest preparations for an aggressive war, France and Austria on the one side, and Russia on the other, are straining on the start like grayhounds in the slip. I only wonder (adds the Times), that Prussia gives France the time to make her preparations. In a few weeks the Mobile National Guard will be organized; and the care taken in the selection of officers—all experienced and active old soldiers—shows that this new and numerically very powerful force must not expect to enjoy the lax discipline of yeomanry or volunteers. Once let them be called out, and the whole fighting army, relieved by them from garrison duty, would be free from action. "Action" is in the mind of the author of the commentary of the map. The object of the treaties of 1815, he says, was to cripple the "action" of France. In another place he says, "France is freer now to act." To act against what? To govern tranquilly within one's own frontiers requires no "action." The article in the St. Petersburg Journal is merely the latest fact showing, what is well known, that not a good, but a bad, feeling prevails between France and the two great northern powers. The very concluding phrase of the commentary on the map, may be translated thus: You are afraid to hit me: and that is not a friendly sentiment.

REASONS FOR BELIEVING THE LORD IS NEAR.

1. Because our opponents allow we are living under the sounding of the sixth trumpet; and nothing can be plainer than that when the seventh trumpet sounds, the Lord comes.

2. Because we have been living some time in the divided state of the fourth kingdom, in the image of David, when the stone is to smite the image.

3. Because, by the best students of prophecy, the periods of Daniel, showing the end of time, are just at their termination.

4. Because the signs in Europe indicate that we are soon to see the whirlwind of the nations, when they will be angry, and right in the midst of strife the Lord will come.

5. Because the Ottoman Empire is in its decline.

6. Because of the increase of knowledge, and because the gospel of the kingdom has been preached as a witness to all nations.

7. Because of the state of society,—so corrupt, notwithstanding all the Bible knowledge and churches.

8. Because the sun has been darkened, and the stars have fallen.

ALBERT S. BURNHAM.

ANCIENT MANUSCRIPTS.

The Rev. Dr. Thomas J. Conant read a paper before the Long Island Historical Society Tuesday evening, "On the Oldest Manuscripts of the Holy Scriptures, and the means of perpetuating perfect copies." The speaker showed how the text which they contain, none of which are of earlier date than the close of the third century, was indentified with that of the sacred autography. This is done through the closely literal versions made soon after the completion of the New Testament, exhibiting word for word, and the very order of word; and through the contreversial writings of the first three centuries, which abounded in quotations from the sacred text. It is thus shown that the writers of no ancient author have come down to us so fully attested as those of the New Testament. The lecturer said that in these remarks he referred not merely to what had alrerdy been done with the existing materials of criticism, but to what was yet to be attained by the more thorough use of them. He then gave a description of the most ancient manuscripts of the New Testament. The sacred writers themselves may have used sheets made from the Egyptian papyrus, referred to in the Second Epistle of John, the twelfth verse. But the earliest known transcripts of the sacred writings were made on parchment or vellum, the oldest manuscripts being written on those of the finest texture. In form the New Testament MSS. were not rolls like the MSS. of the Hebrew Scriptures, but were in shape and size like modern books, chiefly of the quarto form. The written characters in these ancient MSS. were not of the form we call running hand; each letter was made by itself, having a general resemblance to our printed capitals, without connection with its preceding or following one. So laborious and tedious was the process of writing, that the task was devolved upon professional scribes, and authors often wrote the first draught of their works by dictation to an amanuensis. As another peculiarity in the manner of writing the lecturer stated that there was no separation of words. The text ran on in one unbroken stream of letters, without anything to indicate where one word ended and another began, or even any punctuation to show the beginning and end of sentences. But the initial and terminal forms of inflection, and the regular structure of the principal parts of speech, and the connection and course of thought, left very little uncertainty in regard to these divisions.

A vote of thanks was passed to the lecturer for his very interesting paper.

PRAY.

Life's pilgrim, sad and lonely,
Now peering through shadows drear,
Bereft of hopes that only
Were left thy heart to cheer;
Grieve not, but pray,
That hope's bright ray
May joy impart
To thy sad heart.
Brood not in gloomy sorrow
O'er dangers past and gone,
But rise to greet the morrow,
That will with sunshine come.
Sink not below
The tide of wo,
But earnest pray
For gleams of day.

When sunny joys delight thee
With quiet scenes of peace,
As when dark sorrows blight thee,
And wildest storms increase,—
Thou still should'st pray
For that bright way,
To cheer thy sight
With joyful light.

PHYSIOLOGICAL LETTERS.—No. 10.

The access of sleep is sometimes gradual; as when we pass from a dreamy state into one of profound insensibility. In other cases it is quite sudden; one moment we are awake, and the next moment we are unconscious and oblivious of every thing. Oftener, I believe, in the experience of most persons, the approach of sleep is gradual, especially if they are only moderately fatigued.

I will divide ordinary sleep into four stages. 1. The state of partial reverie, in which we find the thoughts and imaginations wandering, and the will only by fits and starts regains its supremacy. The senses are now partially awake. You hear at intervals the ticking of the clock, the whistling of the wind, and are instantly aroused if spoken to.

2. The stage of perfect reverie, a state akin to dreaming. This period is very short, and is succeeded by that of profound sleep: (3) in which state of complete insensibility there is entire suspension of all those nervous and corporeal functions over which the will is accustomed to exercise control. This state bears a very close resemblance to death, so often and so justly compared to sleep. Stop now the action of the heart and lungs, (and to do this you have only got to sever a few nerves), and the individual is dead.

4. The fourth and last stage is that of dreaming, of which I do not intend specially to treat.

From the above statement of the somnolent stages, it might be supposed that the artificial induction of a reverie state might be of use to those that find it difficult to get to sleep. This has been found to be in accordance with experience. A great point has been gained when once the thoughts have been abstracted from the business of the day, and the imagination engaged in pleasing scenes. It is often in the power of individuals to throw themselves at any time into a reverie state, and feel this but the precursor of sleep. Has he ever seen the ocean? He fancies himself there again, listening to the roar of the waves, watching the curling spray, gazing at the sails in the distance. In a trice volition lets go her hold, and the second stage (complete reverie) is ushered in. Now he is off in one of those fishing schooners, tempting the finny tribe with glittering bait; then he fancies himself on a great ocean steamer bound for Europe; then he begins dimly to realize that he is not on the ocean at all, but on the deck of a little steamboat, sailing down the St. Lawrence; he sees the shores on either side, and the rows of French houses, and many a church spire afar off, and he hears the noise of the rushing river; he has no distinct impression where he is going, but thinks of Montreal, and instantly he is there, standing where he has so often stood, on the hill back of the reservoir, with a most beautiful panorama spread out before him of magnificent blocks, churches, gay plantations, gardens, the great St. Lawrence in the distance, with that eighth wonder of the world, Victoria Bridge. Then the curtain falls, the scene closes, and Imagination herself is caught napping, and the third stage, or that of profound sleep, is established. H.

A NATURAL WAY TO CURE A COLD.

It is a mystery to many how they took such a cold. The worst colds are not always taken from the worst exposures; and never when we are greatly excited, let the exposure be what it may; but generally by not taking proper care of ourselves after we are exposed. If we remain quiet after getting wet, or sit in a current of air, the cold steals in unawares. It is always safe to exercise immediately after exposure, by rubbing, if in no other way. I have got a bad cold some way, and what to do is the question. Sometimes one can work it off, and sometimes work on a fever, or something worse. If the system is worn down by fatigue, it is in a susceptible state to take cold easily; and if you try to work it off, you have a double load upon nature, and it sinks, especially if the person is advanced in years. I learned a lesson from my father in his old age. When he got cold, he would take the house, sit in a room of ninety degrees, and keep quiet until a change for the better took place, which would be in about twenty-four hours. He took no medicine, except ginger tea, or some simple warming drinks; eat nothing until his appetite called for food; and allowed the whole system to rest. For twenty years he worked on fevers by trying to work off colds. For the last twenty-five years, he adopted the above course, and escaped them. Good sense and experience is little heeded in these days, and perhaps this mode of treatment will be scoffed at by medicine pedlers, but some may be induced to try it, and be benefited. This is my object in writing. H. MUNGER.

BRONCHITIS.

I saw an inquiry for a remedy for bronchitis. I can only tell what cured me, after three years standing. I took one ounce of extract of yellow dock; one ounce of sarsaparilla; one ounce of senna. This can be got of any druggist. Then take one and a half pounds of white sugar, dissolve it, and bring it to a boil in one pint and a half of water. Then, when cooled add the extracts and shake well, and you have one quart of syrup. Take one table spoonfull two or three times a day, one half hour before eating. One quart did not cure me, but five did, and I think it will cure any one if there is a medicine that will.

Yours in love, J. HALL.

THE PRINCIPLES OF HYGIENIC MEDICATION.

All healing power is inherent in the living system.

There is no curative virtue in medicines, nor in anything outside the vital organism.

Nature has not provided remedies for diseases.

There is no "law of cure" in the universe; and the only condition of cure is, obedience to physiological law.

Remedial agents do not act on the living system, as is taught in medical books and schools, but are acted on by the vital powers.

Disease is not, as is commonly supposed, an enemy at war with the vital powers, but a remedial effort—a process of purification and reparation. It is not a thing to be destroyed, subdued or suppressed, but an action to be regulated and directed.

True remedial agents are materials and influences which have normal relations to the vital organs, and not drugs or poisons, whose relations are abnormal and anti-vital.

Nature's materia medica consists of air, light, temperature, electricity, magnetism, exercise, rest, food, drink, bathing, sleep, clothing, passional influences and mechanical or surgical appliances.

The true healing art consists in supplying the living system with whatever of the above it can use under the circumstances, and not in the administration of poisons, which it must resist and expel.

Drug remedies are themselves causes of disease. If they cure one disease, it is only by producing a drug disease. Every dose diminishes the vitality of the patient.

Drugopathy endeavors to restore health by administering the poisons which produce disease.

Hygeio-Therapy, (erroneously called "Hydropathy," or water Cure,") on the contrary, restores the sick to health by the means which preserve health in well persons.

Diseases are caused by obstructions, the obstructing materials being poisons or impurities of some kind.

The hygienic system removes these obstructions, and leaves the body sound.

Drug medicines add to the causes of obstructions, and change acute into chronic diseases.

To attempt to cure diseases by adding to the causes of disease, is irrational and absurd.

Hygienic medication (Hygeio-Therapy) is not a "one-idealism" which professes to cure all diseases with "water alone;" nor is it a "Cold Water Cure," as is erroneously believed by many. It adopts all the remedial appliances in existence, with the single exception of poisons.—Gospel of Health.

SLEEP.

The following remarks on sleep are so in harmony with nature and common sense that we commend them to the consideration of all. They express the views we have entertained for many years.

There is no fact more clearly established in the physiology of man than this, that the brain expends its energies and itself during the hours of wakefulness, and that these are recuperated during sleep; if the recuperation does not equal the expenditure, the brain withers—this is insanity. Thus it is that, in early English history, persons who were condemned to death by being prevented from sleeping, always died raving maniacs; thus it is, also, that those who are starved to death become insane; the brain is not nourished, and they cannot sleep. The practical inferences are these:

1. Those who think most, who do most brain work, require most sleep.

2. That time saved from necessary sleep is infallibly destructive to mind, body, and estate.

3. Give yourself, your children, your servants—give all that are under you, the fullest amount of sleep they will take, compelling them to retire at some regular hour, and to rise the moment they wake; and within a fortnight, nature, with almost the regularity of the sun, will unloose the bands of sleep the moment enough repose has been secured for the wants of the system. This is the only safe and sufficient rule; and as to the question how much sleep any one requires, each must be a rule for himself. Nature will never fail to write it out to the observer under the regulations just given.

NEAR JESUS.

I want to live near Jesus,
And never go astray;
To feel that I am growing
More like him every day;
That I am always laying
My treasures up above,
And gaining more the spirit
Of his gentleness and love.

I want such steadfast purpose,
My mission to fulfill,
That it may be my meat and drink
To do my Father's will;
To follow in his footsteps,
Who never turned aside
From the path that leads to heaven,
Though often sorely tried.

Oh, that in his humility
My spirit may be clad!
That I may have the patience
My suffering Savior had;
A heart more disengaged
From earth and earthly things,
Which, through life's varied trials,
To Jesus simply clings.

Oh, I shall live near Jesus,
And never go astray,
And every sin defiling stain
Shall soon be washed away;
And I'll bear my Master's image,
When I see him face to face—
Then earth shall lose the power
Its brightness to deface.

For the World's Crisis.

THE MAN OF SIN.

In the Catholic Testament we find the following comment on 2 Thess. 2: 3;—

"'The man of sin.' Here must be meant some particular man, as is evident from the frequent repetition of the Greek article ho, the man of sin, the son of perdition, the adversary, or opposer—ho antikeimenos. It agrees to the great Antichrist, who will come before the end of the world; but by no means to any Christian bishop, much less to a succession of Christian bishops."

This reasoning is faulty, because it assumes as "evident" what cannot be proved by Scripture usage. In John's second epistle we read, "For many deceivers are entered into the world who confess not that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh. This is a deceiver and an antichrist."—Greek, ho planos kai ho antikristos; literally, the deceiver and the antichrist.

If the author of the above comment could prove that the "many deceivers" spoken of by John meant some particular man, then the man of sin may mean some particular man. But since it is a natural impossibility to prove that many deceivers means some particular man, his arbitrary rule of interpretation fails; for, as we have seen, the Greek article ho, twice repeated, is used to designate the many deceivers. "The man of sin," therefore, may mean the Papal succession. And the description given of him agrees to that of the willful king of Dan. 11: 36–37. And that this king represents the Papal succession is evident, because the eleventh chapter of Daniel is devoted to an explanation of the vision of chapter 8; which symbolizes the Medo-Persian, Grecian, and Roman kingdoms, severally represented as "great," "very great," and "exceeding great."

The Roman kingdom is there symbolized by the "little horn," which came out of one of the four horns, that represented the four divisions of the Grecian empire. These horns not only represent kings, but the kingdoms over which they ruled; and the kings were not single individuals, but a lineal succession; for a whole succession of kings is traced, in the explanation, in two of these divisions; namely, in the northern and southern divisions. See Dan. 11: 4–30. And the kingdom, symbolized by the little, or fifth horn of the rough goat, cannot represent Antiochus Epiphanes; for his kingdom was one of the four divisions, and so cannot be represented by the "little horn," which was to come out of one of the four. And then, the prophetic comparison between these kingdoms, represented by the ram, the he-goat, and the fifth horn, that came out of one of the four horns of the goat, applies to Medo-Persia, Grecia, and Rome; for the first became "great," the next "very great," and the last "exceeding great"; whereas, the kingdom of Antiochus was small compared with Medo-Persia, or Grecia.

Now, since the little horn cannot designate any other than the Roman kingdom, and since the eleventh chapter is an explanation of the vision of chapter 8, given to "show that which is noted in the scripture of truth," it follows that the Roman kingdom must be brought to view in this chapter, in some particular manner, commensurate with the character assigned to it in chapter 8. We turn to that explanation, and from verse 4 to 30 we find a lineal succession traced in the northern and southern divisions of the Grecian empire, ending with verse 30, with the end of the reign of Antiochus, with some one or two vague allusions to the Romans. And since the little horn, or Roman kingdom, is not particularly noted before verse 32, and onward, it follows that what is said of the king that was to "do according to his will," is the description given of the lineal succession of the Popes of Rome. For the king there spoken of was to "prosper till the indignation be accomplished," and so cannot designate any line of kings of Rome already extinct, because the indignation is not yet accomplished.

If the reader will take Rollins' Ancient History, and adopt his explanation of Dan. 11: from verse 4 to 30, he will get a good interpretation so far; but that is as far as is safe to follow him. The king spoken of in verse 20, he shows was Antiochus, the king of Syria. And the prophetic description of his reign ends with verse 30; for the Septuagint renders the next verse thus: "And his seed shall stand up, and shall pollute the sanctuary of strength," "and take away the daily, and shall place the abomination that maketh desolate." (The last two clauses are from the common English version.) And since the expression "stand up" denotes kingly succession, when it is said, "And his seed shall stand up," it denotes the end of the reign of Antiochus, and an untraced succession after him. And since the little horn denotes the Roman power, which was to take away the daily, what is said with reference to the successors of Antiochus, must relate to their agency in interfering in the religion of the Jews, which led to the supremacy of the Romans over them, and to the final establishment of the Roman Catholic religion in the Papal form. For from the setting up of this abomination, there was to be 1335 day-years to the resurrection of Daniel, and the many that sleep in the dust of the earth. For that these days symbolize years, is evident from the introduction, where Daniel says, "A thing was revealed unto Daniel, . . . and the thing was true, but the time appointed was LONG: and he understood the thing, and had understanding of the vision."—Chap. 10: 1.

The 2300 days is called "the time appointed" in the vision, and this must be the time referred to as "long." But why was it called long, when it is a short period taken literally? Evidently because it was symbolical, like the vision it measured. And if symbolical, then it could not symbolize any thing but years, in harmony with Scripture usage; else it would be indefinite, and incapable of being understood. But the wise were to understand, and so the days can only be understood by the wise as day-years.

The other periods must, therefore, be of the same relative length. And as the willful king is a Roman king, and was to prosper till the indignation be accomplished, and for 1335 day-years, he denotes the last form of government in Rome; namely, the Papal succession. And since the characteristics of this willful king agree to the man of sin, it follows that they are identical.

The man of sin was to be developed by an apostasy. The willful king was to call to his support such as do wickedly against the holy covenant. Dan. 11: 43. The man of sin was to "exalt himself above all that is called God, or that is worshiped; so that he, as God, sitteth in the temple of God, showing himself that he is God." 2 Thess. 3–4. The willful king was to "do according to his will, and he shall exalt himself, and magnify himself above every god, and shall speak marvellous things against the God of gods." Dan. 11: 36. The man of sin is to be destroyed with the brightness of Christ's coming. The willful king was to "prosper till the indignation be accomplished," which can only end at Christ's appearing.

If we compare Papacy with the man of sin, we shall find a wonderful agreement of lineaments. Papacy sits in the temple of God, as the searcher and ruler of the consciences of men; "not as man, but as God." He is preeminently the man of sin, for he claims the exclusive right to self indulgences to sin, and to appoint deputy salesmen, whose name is legion. Their sales are effected more secretly now, however, than in Martin Luther's day. He exalts himself above all that is called God, or that is worshiped; as he admits the existence of an infinite being, and professes to be able to do what God cannot do,—forgive sins before they are committed. This is more than an Atheist can do; for he cannot exalt himself above an infinite being, not having sense enough to believe in anything higher than human nature.

The apostle, after declaring that the day of Christ's return should not come except there come an apostasy first, and that man of sin be revealed, etc., said, "And now ye know what withholdeth that he should be revealed in his time. For the mystery of the lawless (Gr. tas anomias) doth already work, only he withholds until now, until from its midst he comes. (Gr. monon ho katexon apti heos ek meson genetai.) And then shall that wicked (Gr. ho anomos, that lawless) be revealed, whom the Lord shall consume with the spirit of his mouth, and destroy with the brightness of his coming." Verses 6–8.

The apostasy which developed the man of sin began its work in the church in Paul's day. The mystery of the lawless was in its incipient stage: for John said of those who confessed not that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh, "This is that spirit of antichrist, whereof ye have heard that it should come; and even now already is it in the world." 1 John 4: 3. And this taken in connection with chap. 2: 18–19, proves that he referred to a counterfeit christianity. This finally developed itself, and separated from the original church, and proclaimed itself the holy Roman, Catholic church, with the Pope as its supreme head. But oh! say some, the Pope does not deny the Father and Son. That depends on the real meaning of those terms. If they mean what they do in all ordinary cases, he does. For he maintains that the Father and Son were eternally one God; and thereby denies the real filial affection which exists between Christ, as one being, and God as another. This relation Christ's whole life proved to be as real as in any other case. He cried out, in his expiring agony on the cross, "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?" a clear proof that God was a distinct being from himself. And there is any quantity of proof in the Scriptures that he was really and truly the Son of God, and not one God with the Father. All this evidence must be ignored, in order to accommodate a spurious christianity, whose chief professor is the Pope. This accounts for the popularity of this doctrine; for the Revelator says of Papal Rome, "she made all nations drink of the wine of her fornication." Does he confess that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh? He and his church tell us that one of three co-eternal and co-equal persons became incarnate. Could such an unreasonable, unscriptural, and incomprehensible dogma be the test of christianity? Who can prove it? No one. Then why seek to admit that man of sin, reeking with the blood of slaughtered millions, into the fellowship of christians on such a flimsy pretext?

The very profession of the Pope proves him to be the antichrist. He professes to be vicar of Christ; that is, in Christ's place. But Christ is capable of filling his own place, and will not surrender his place to any other. "I am the door," said he, "and he that climbeth up any other way, the same is a thief and a robber." He that would, therefore, take his place, is anti-against-Christ. Anti means, instead of another: Christ's vicar means, instead of Christ.

"Ye have heard that antichrist shall come," said the apostle John. How did they hear of it? From the eighth chapter of Daniel, where it is said of the kingly head of the Roman power, "He shall stand up against the Prince of princes; but he shall be broken without hand." Verse 25. This cannot apply to Pagan Rome, because that has been overcome by the force of arms. It can only apply to the last form of Roman government to be destroyed with the brightness of Christ's appearing. But said John, in continuation, "And even now are there many antichrists, whereby we know that it is the last hour. They went out from us, but they were not of us: for if they had been of us, they would no doubt have continued with us: but they went out, that they might be made manifest that they were not all of us." 1 John 2: 18–19. This quotation proves that John regarded the antichrist as professedly christian—"they went out from us." They were actuated by the spirit of antichrist. "The mystery of the iniquity doth already work," said Paul. John says further of their teaching, "Who is a liar, but he that denieth that Jesus is the Christ? He is antichrist that denieth the Father and Son." Verse 22.

On this the Cottage Bible says, "Some, it seems (as Cerinthus), separated Jesus from Christ as two persons, and denied him to be the Son of God." But is not this Cerinthian heresy practically adopted as the creed of the Roman church, and transmitted to popular Protestant churches? Those whose minds are not blunted and blurred by a false system of theology, can see the similarity at a glance. Christians, who entertain such views, find endless perplexities in trying to understand their mysterious absurdities; proving it to be something foreign to their real faith.

THE POWER OF INCREASING WORLDLINESS.

Truth to say, the intense power of the worldliness of this world is increasing at such a rate as to render the work of human salvation every day more and more difficult. If Christ could say as to the obstacles in the way of the Word of Life taking root in men's hearts in his day, that the cares of this world, and the deceitfulness of riches, and the lusts of other things entering in, choke the Word so that it becometh unfruitful, how much more now. The thorns that grew then simply as thorns are become now a forest of ship timber, and men make commerce out of them; while the Word itself is cut and cleared away as thorns and underbrush. The old fashioned thorns are become a South American jungle, that you can with difficulty cleave a path through with an axe. The cares of this world accompany you even in the wilderness, and crowd themselves into every omer of your spiritual manna, even as the frogs of Egypt nestled in the people's kneading troughs. Where there is any living thing, they are alive also.

For one veil that the god of this world had in Paul's day woven and drawn before the heart to shut out the light of eternity and the powers of the world to come, there are now a thousand, woven of cloth of gold, and fretted with beautiful imagery. For one inducement to worldliness then, there are a thousand now. And for one capacity of self-indulgence and enjoyment then, there are a thousand now. The deceitfulness of riches has grown with their diffusion and accumulation. There are lotteries for the million, with prizes for every ticket. Satan's baits drop everywhere; the hook and line invisible. Everything is made certain; even medicine. There are life insurance companies, gold mines, and petroleum wells, to be had by witch-hazels; instant advisement of every rise in gold, and every event affecting it, from India to the Amazon; the din of the whole earth's machinery crying out, Be rich! be rich! make haste to be rich! There is no seclusion, no isolation, no defence from the devil's magnetism. He has his conductors pointing at you from every part of the world, to carry off whatever of positive or resisting electricity there may be about you; and tractors to inspire you simultaneously with whatever excitements may be disturbing any other being in the world. There are newspapers, with letters from every part of the world, every morning. There are telegraphs, so that the tremors of the most distant of the devil's earthquakes may be felt across the ocean. Apollyon, as well as Napoleon, can put a girdle around the earth in forty minutes. Even George Francis Train can stir two kingdoms, three thousand miles apart, in one day. . . .

There are moral operas, attended by church members for the learning of grace and melody. All the amusements of this world are baptized into the service of christianity; all the shows of this world are brought into subjection for the grandeur of christianity; all the pleasures of this world are so deprived of their carnal poison that the sucking child may play on the hole of the asp, and tap the rattlesnake with his spoon, drinking milk from the same porringer. All the world is subdued, like the lion lying down with the lamb; and all to prove the goodness and liberal benevolence of the universal Father; all to demonstrate that what earth has heretofore suffered from was merely the moroseness of a savage, self-crucifying bigotry and Puritanism, and that love inherits all things, and godliness is profitable for all things, having the promise of the life that now is, as well as of that which is to come.

Amidst all this, our religion is a great Gulliver caught napping by the Lilliputians, and bound hand and foot, so that it cannot stir without pain. The world has laid hold of every particular hair, and pinned it down as a cable. The pigmies run up and down with their ladders, run across the forehead, down the bridge of the nose, exercise themselves in fearful jumps from the chin to the breast bone and commit all sorts of indignities with impunity. Opera dancers cut their capers on the eyelids. Black Crooks gather half the sheep of the churches into their folds; and, meantime, good taste and a liberal spirit forbid the Ephesian elders from setting up Christ's rules for christian society. Christians must meet the world half way. Christians must meet the world on its own terms, if they ever expect to do good in it. Christian preachers must christianize and inspire the novels and the dramas. Now that slavery is done away, Young Men's Christian Associations may abrogate the rule that nothing can be discussed concerning which there is any difference of opinion. All things are good if the digestion is good. The age of Puritanism has lapsed, and cakes and ale shall once more be prevalent among us. We have been trying the virtue there is in stones long enough; now we will try music and dancing. The world is indeed a tough morsel, but still it can be gelatinized, assimilated, converted into a nutritive soup by love, or the potency of an easy good nature; there being nothing injurious in itself, but only by reason of the action of bigotry upon it. The power of love can change the internal relative constitution of the primal forces of morality, the whole substance of the character remaining the same; just as inward heat can effect the law of crystalization so wonderfully as to change the internal structure of prismatic crystals, without any exterior alteration whatever.

"When nature's blush by custom is wiped off," says the poet Young, in a very powerful passage in the "Night Thoughts,"

"And conscience, deadened by repeated strokes,
Has into manners naturalized our crimes,
The curse of curses is, our curse to love."

First the blush wiped away by custom, then conscience hardened by habit, then the sin naturalized and sanctioned, when among the Romans to do as the Romans do. This is the grand triumph of the god of this world, with a conscience blinded and seared by custom and example.

Then, by reason of the treason of the church disregarding her opportunities, there is what ought to have been the servant and product of religion continually assuming to take the place of religion as the regenerator and savior of mankind. There is universal suffrage, which, instead of being the fruit of the universal knowledge of truth and duty, and a correspondent obligation upon each for the good of all, is demanded as idiomatic portion of each, the manna of life, the security of all privilege, the preparation and ushering in of that millennium when the pope in every man's belly shall be bound by the setting of every man free from every obligation but the seeking of each his own will, regardless of every other man's rights and wishes. So in all these ways is Satan's kingdom evidently growing; and it is more and more difficult for any man to get out of it, or to persuade others to set their faces to flee from the wrath to come, if indeed there be any wrath to come which, like everything else, is much doubted in an age the watchword of which is becoming that of an arrogant and earth-born criticism, Behold our Man! behold the sovereignty of human genius! instead of that divine revelation, Behold your God!—Rev. G. B. Cheever, in Independent.

A STIRRING APPEAL.

O, christians! christians! The Bridegroom is coming, the Judge is at the door! Will you show him your accumulated treasures, your luxurious houses, your costly jewels, your well-filled coffers and satisfactory balances, and say, "There is thy talent"? O, will you point to the blood-washed, white-robed souls—once lost, and outcast, and miserable, and say, "I found them in the streets and lanes, in the highways and hedges, and compelled them to come in, that thy house might be filled"?

Dear young believers, we have need of you; or rather, "the Lord hath need of you." We want your time, your strength, your energy, your education, yourselves, for Him who "spared not his own Son for you." Is your alabaster box of ointment too precious for him? Do you say, "To what purpose is this waste?" Ask Mary how much she wasted; ask Moses whether he regrets his choice; ask the apostles to the Gentiles whether he made a mistake when he said, "This one thing I do"; ask the sweet Psalmist of Israel, "What shall I render to the Lord for all his benefits?" Eternity will not be long enough to give the answer.—The Revival.

THOUGHTS FOR THE YEAR—1868.

(Concluded.)

God has ordained rapidity of judgment. The devil is therefore permitted to display all the rapidity of fury—and men, having cast off God, are carried forward on Satanic wings. Seven years in these days, the seven years of Daniel's week, will perform, easily, the work of seventy years of antiquity. With our ancestors time was measured by years, space by leagues, and life by fortitude. Everything was spread out to its fullest width, and seen, and felt, and endured, in all its minutest parts. With us, feeling and life, and the very globe itself, are gathered up into a point; we gather up the ends of the globe with our electric wires, and the life and passions of the globe with the fiery rapidity of those wires. With our ancestors, those who had not fortitude to live lay down to die. We require no fortitude. We hear the worst in a moment; and the next moment the electric wire transmits some new intelligence to obliterate the past. The past! There is no past with us—it is all compressed into the moment—"one eternal now." Rapidity is the demon that has possessed the age, and hurries it on, like the herd of swine, to perish in the abyss. The Lord has decreed that the time of judgment should be short, because judgment to him is an unwelcome work, and we carry out his decree by our rapidity of action, while we foolishly imagine that we are carrying out our own decree and outstripping the rapidity of God.

The time to be occupied by the judgments of the last days is nowhere revealed in Scripture. But the concluding verses of the 9th of Daniel prove beyond question that the times of the personal antichrist will occupy seven years. One half of the seven years will be employed, as we may suppose, in building up his empire; the remaining half in acting the part of the manifested antichrist. The second half of the seven years is decidedly the true period of the antichristian supremacy. The words of Daniel place this beyond doubt. The former half of the seven years is not clearly traced out. But this much is certain—that seven years are the period of the last crisis. For we must remember that Daniel says nothing whatever of what we commonly call "weeks;" the Hebrew word which Daniel employs simply means "sevens," and it may be sevens of years as much as sevens of days. And that it must mean sevens of years is evident from all that went before, for in the preceding verses, sevens of days would be altogether insufficient for the events which are described. Seven years, then, are the crisis of the dispensation—the end of the end as to the present, and the beginning of the end as to the future. The neutral ground on which heaven and earth, and the powers of darkness are to decide the claim of universal empire. What rapidity of motion will be required to decide so great a claim within so short a time.

The campaign of 1866 decided the fate of an empire in one week, and its rapidity was so marvellous that it is now known in history as the "Seven Days War." The war of 1763—just a century ago—was called the "Seven Years War." Our furious speed and wide-destroying artillery look with scorn on the creeping pace of our ancestors, and have actually compressed the seven years into seven days. Three hundred fold rapidity is the characteristic of our age. But as the empire of creation is to the empire of Germany, so will be the rapidity of the "last days" to the rapidity of the eighteenth century. Not three-hundred fold greater, but thrice three thousand fold. The Lord therefore gives time and space for every form of preparation. He withdraws his restraining power, and permits the whole force of evil to descend upon the earth. The wicked spirits are no longer in the "heavenly places" (Eph. 6,)—they are not walking to and fro as in the time of Job, but flying to and fro. In Job's time everything moved slowly, for there was no hurry; there was leisure enough for the little that was to be done. Even Satan himself was then comparatively slow, for he was contented with walking up and down, but he is flying on those winds of which we know from Scripture he is the Prince. His quick fiery spirit penetrates the brain and produces visions of every deadly weapon which human hands can forge—of every deadly compound which human chemistry can form. He spreads his indignant wings, and covers the mental world with the gloom of conspiracy and revenge. All is conspiracy—all is revenge. Look where you will, that horrid gloom is all that you can see. It is the fearful twilight of the world's departing day. At home, the robbed and murdered Celts rise up in the bodies of their descendants to demand vengeance on the Saxon aggressor.

Our parliament is nothing but an arena for personal ambition—for conspiracy and revenge. The working classes call for vengeance on the aristocracy for ages of unspeakable tyranny. And murder is so common that even children commit murder in mere sport. Abroad, Italy and Poland, and France, and all the Christians of the Turkish empire, and India, and the Fenians of America, and the Americans themselves, all are brooding over wrongs—some imaginary, but too many real—received one from the other; but most of all from England; and above them all is the Third Napoleon, with haggard brow, pondering over the vengeance of St. Helena, and torn with impatience by the delay. England alone sits calm and peaceable, undisturbed by revenge, unconscious of design, and for the best of reasons, having gained all that can be gained by the most unscrupulous violence, having grasped all that she can hold, having shed blood until she was steeped in it to the lips, she has has nothing to revenge, as well as nothing to desire. She has exhausted the tenth commandment already, and she can covet nothing more. And certainly there is one sweet privilege enjoyed by those who commit crimes: namely, that they can hardly be guilty of revenge, for to revenge yourself upon people because you have murdered them, would be a most extravagant waste of criminality. They who commit crimes have sown the wind; and it is but a poor boast that they are waiting quietly until they have reaped the whirlwind; yet such is our position at this day.

The Suez Canal is one of the most important operations of the age. It is a double operation—a work both of union, and of disunion. It unites and disunites the two hemispheres of the globe. That canal, it is said, will be completed in 1869, and will then be available for vessels of all draught, even for ships of war. From the moment of its completion a passage from the Mediterranean to the Indian seas will be opened up for French vessels of war. The great war port of Toulon is situated on the Mediterranean. Corsica and Algeria, both in, or on, the Mediterranean, belong to France. France is, therefore, even now, the predominating power in the Mediterranean; and should she conquer Italy in the approaching struggles he will then be all but absolute in that sea. We permitted ourselves to be coaxed out of our strong position in the Seven Islands by the blundering of Lord Palmerston, and the crafty compliments of Greece—offering the crown to Prince Alfred—when the crown of royalty was not worth a crown of five shillings. But flattery and Palmerston robbed us of our strong position—and left us nothing but Malta, at the extremity of the Mediterranean. France will, consequently, be all but paramount in that sea. Egypt, as we all know, is controlled by French agents even now; and when the Suez canal has been opened for French ships, the entire sea line from Toulon to the extremities of the globe will be in the hands of France. The Suez Canal being altogether a French work, will of course belong to France, and it will prove, as we have said, a momentous work both of union and disunion. France will then be united at Toulon with the remotest islands of the Eastern seas. She can send her ships of war direct from Toulon, through the Egyptian canal to the Red Sea and the Indian Ocean. That Suez Canal will be the spinal chord of one vast empire, and the palpitations of its waves will send a sensation to the opposite extremities of the globe. A word telegraphed from Paris will thrill along the spinal chord to the ends of the Red Sea, and from thence to India and Japan. But what a work of dis-union will it not also prove! How can England and France ever look one another in the face as friends when once that canal shall be in full operation? It is England's direct route to India and Australia. She will require the use of it every day and hour. She will still more require the general privilege of passing through Egypt in her way to India. The canal will be desirable, but the Overland route will be indispensable. Now, let us remember that France is almost mistress of Egypt, even at present; but when the Suez Canal, completed and opened, shall be in her hands, her power and influence will be greater than ever. She will be mistress of Egypt altogether. The famous "Barrage" gives her command already; the completed canal will increase her command into absolute power. Can England allow this? Can we permit the route to India to be at the absolute disposal of our great rival? Can we suffer French war-steamers to pass to and fro by the Mediterranern and by Suez; to and fro from Toulon to the Indian seas, while France may at any moment exclude every English vessel from the canal, and refuse every British soldier permission even to set foot on Egyptian soil? To do this would be to give up our supremacy altogether; and not only to lose it ourselves, but to convey it into the hands of France. We should lose half our empire at once; and France would gain nearly all that we had lost.

In order to understand the question of the Suez canal thoroughly, we must go back to the early period of Napoleon the First. The mission of the Egyptian army, under Napoleon the First, was to conquer Egypt, so as to open a new road to India—where the forces of the French Republic were, if possible, to drive the English from their possessions in the East, and to dry up the sources of their wealth! And, besides this, "to cut through the Isthmus of Suez, and to secure to France the exclusive possession of the Red Sea." Such was both the mission and the prime object of Napoleon the First, in his invasion of the East, exactly seventy years ago. Just seventy years have passed, and the colossal scheme of the First Napoleon, overthrown at Aboukir and the "Nile," has been set up once more upon its feet. The old Grecian colossus fell for ever. The colossus of Napoleon has fallen and risen again. There it stands, bestriding Egypt—and what earthquake of human power can overturn it now? "To invade India by way of the Red Sea, to cut through the Isthmus of Suez, and to attack the English in their Eastern empire." Such were the objects of Napoleon in the mission of 1798; and such are the objects of another Napoleon in the mission of 1868. For Egypt is now little more than a province of France. It is filled with French workmen and French agents, most of whom have been trained to war, and the Suez Canal is to be opened in 1869. Let every one meditate on the importance of these facts, and especially reflect with wonder on the apparition of another Napoleon, to carry out, after seventy years, the vast projects of Napoleon the First, and obliterate all traces of Nelson and the "Nile."

We should be much mistaken, however, if we were to imagine that the subject of military canals was exhausted by our view of the canal of Suez. There is another work of almost equal importance, and almost equally ominous import. The French canal of the Garonne, from the Atlantic to the Mediterranean, has just this day been completed. Gunboats have just passed through it, from sea to sea. It is stated that it is passable not only for gunboats, but for larger vessels, so that from this day France can send her war steamers from Cherbourg and Havre to Toulon and the Mediterranean in a direct line, without crossing the Bay of Biscay, or going round by Gibraltar. In a word, for all such vessels Gibraltar has now been neutralized; and all our control over French movements has been lost. This is most important; conjoined with the Suez Canal, we discover in it the the execution of one vast scheme of French supremacy and of Napoleonic imperialism. By means of those two canals, French troops, war steamers, and munitions of war, can be sent by the shortest route, direct from Cherbourg and the channel, and Toulon, to the Levant, Palestine, Egypt, and the Red Sea. The Grand Napoleonic Waterway has been formed, and is about to be revealed to the startled nations. Guarded on both its banks by the satellites of Napoleon, and shut out from the approach of all mankind without his previous permission. Rapidity again presents itself in these large-minded arrangements. There is no longer the sailing round by the Pillars of Hercules; there is no longer disembarking at Alexandria, and embarking again at Suez; there is still more no longer any dread of English guns from the heights of Gibraltar. The Napoleonic brain has baffled and outreached us all; and while we are boasting of our petty victory over poor savages in Abyssinia, Napoleon has been weaving his iron net-work round the world, and raising up his millions of armed men to guard, and manipulate that net-work. Enervated and debased by our love of money, we are maundering about reform, and glorying over Abyssinia, while the avenger of St. Helena is seizing upon the highways of the globe. Masterly conceptions and rapidity of execution, are two characteristics of this new Napoleonic era. From Cherbourg to the Indian Ocean is now but one short, straight line! The Napoleonic era has begun; the Ides of March have come; but they have not ended yet; and when they have ended, how many Cæsars will have fallen? But the flank of Gibraltar has been turned, and our command of the Mediterranean has been broken up. An ominous commencement for the "Ides of March."—The Last Vials.

THE SUCCESSFUL TEACHER.

Frequently, complaints are made, and surprise expressed by individuals, who have never found a blessing rest upon anything they have attempted to do in the service of God. "I have been a Sunday-school teacher for years," says one, "and I have never seen any of my boys or girls converted." The reason most likely is, you have never been really anxious about it; you have never made up your mind that in dependence upon God's sovereign Spirit, converted they should be, and that nothing should be left undone until they were. You have never been led by the Spirit to such a degree of earnestness that you have said, "I cannot live unless God bless me. I cannot rest until I see some of those children saved." Had it been so, you would not have been disappointed.

I will give you an illustration. A pious young lady was requested to teach a class of girls in a Sunday-school. She accepted the invitation, and engaged in the work. She was seen to be very earnest, faithful and affectionate with her youthful charge. In a little while one scholar after another became thoughtful, serious, and anxious, until every member of her class was converted to God. She was then requested to give up her class and take another, in which none of the scholars were pious. After due consideration, she consented. She had not been long in her new class, before similar effects were produced, and ultimately every member of the class cherished a hope in Christ. She was finally induced to give up this class also, and take another class of children, who were unawakened. She had not labored long, when precisely the same results as before followed her labors, every scholar in the class having been brought under the power of the truth. Her work was done. She fell asleep in Jesus, and rests in hope of glory. She cried, "Glory," and departed.

After her death, in her journal was found written:

"Resolved, That I will pray once each day for each of my class, by name."

On looking still further into the journal, they found the same resolution written, and re-adopted with a slight addition, as follows:

"Resolved, That I will pray once each day for each member of my class, by name, and agonize in prayer."

On looking still further, the same resolution was found written again, with another slight addition, as follows;

"Resolved, That I will pray once each day for each member of my class, by name, and agonize in prayer, and expect a blessing."

Dear friend, perhaps you have had occasion to mourn over unsuccessful labors in the Sunday-school. Try a little more praying, and prove if the Lord is not ever willing to grant his Holy Spirit to those who ask it.—Selected.

Conversion.—When a person is really converted, he will not only abstain from drunkenness, profanity, quarreling, gambling, falsehood, breaking the Sabbath, frequenting theatres, balls, and other openly irreligious acts; but it will also lead him to take a previously inexperienced delight in private, family, and social prayer, in attending religious services, distributing religious reading, visiting the sick and afflicted, and instead of criminally wasting time in reading novels and romances, he will engage as much time as possible in meditating on the sacred truths of the Bible.

The World's Crisis
AND SECOND ADVENT MESSENGER.

Boston, Wednesday, Dec. 16, 1868.

☞ Take Notice!

All subscriptions for the Crisis are payable IN ADVANCE, at the rate of $2.50 a year.

☞ Please Remember!

All remittances to this office, in the form of drafts, bank-checks and postal money-orders, should be made payable to the BUSINESS AGENT, GEO. T. ADAMS.

☞ Money Orders.

Our correspondents should remember that if they send money orders in a letter which contains the name of the sender, and the name of the person to whom the order is payable, there is NO SAFETY for their money. Any person may draw the amount named in the order, if these names are given.

Neither is it safe to send us your names in advance. Somebody may open the letter, get the names, and then wait till the order comes, and get that too.

Send on the order, not writing a word; make it payable to GEO. T. ADAMS, directing it to MILES GRANT, or World's Crisis. Then, in two or three days, write in the usual way, stating that you have sent the order, and what you wish done with the money obtained on the same, and it will be entirely safe. In the second communication be sure to give us YOUR NAME AND POST OFFICE ADDRESS. AG'T.

DISCUSSION.

We are now, Dec. 9th, engaged in a very interesting discussion with Dr. A. Morron, at Phenix, R. I. Our discussion commenced Monday evening, Dec. 7th, and is to continue every evening during the week. We occupy the basement of the Methodist meeting-house. There is quite a stir in town in relation to the debate. Our friends are rejoicing at the present results, and the bright prospect of the future success. The Dr. is an able man, and a public lecturer on popular subjects. Thus far he has presented no new points, but such as have been frequently met and fully answered. The truth grows brighter every time it is examined; and looks more valuable than ever when contrasted with error. An earnest struggle between the two is now in progress throughout the world; and we may expect the conflict will become more severe as we approach the closing scenes of this world's history. This is no time to be faint-hearted in the work. It is a glorious fight, and victory is sure to the faithful. This is the time for manly deeds on the part of the followers of Jesus; a time when the soldiers of Christ should have on "the whole armor of God," that they may be able to stand against the wiles of the devil. This is the hour for brave men, who dare stand up for the right, if the whole world stand frowning upon their efforts. "Fight the good fight of faith; lay hold on eternal life."

TRACTS.

We have come to a very favored time to scatter tracts, because the people are anxious to read them; especially those which relate to the mortality of man, the destruction of the wicked, and the coming of Christ. These great truths are spreading rapidly among good people, and they are anxious to get tracts treating on these subjects, to put into the hands of their friends. A few years since we could hardly get people to read our tracts, but now there is a great change. Then they knew, without examination, that these things were not true; now, thousands see the light clearly, and others are opening their eyes to see, and ears to hear, what they once called heresy, because it did not agree with their creeds.

The time is at hand when people must either give up the Bible, and turn Spiritualists, or embrace what some call "Materialism," by way of reproach; just as some cry "mad dog" when they wish to have an innocent animal stoned to death. This alarm cry keeps some away from the truth, and others from acknowledging it; but there are others who love it more than reputation or friends; who are standing up with noble boldness in defense of the word of the Lord.

Some are doing all they can to help scatter tracts, and are seeing blessed results. Bro. O. Sherwin, in Chicago, is devoting his time to the work during the winter. Let those who have the money, and not the time to spend, now give us a lift. There are a number of true men, poor in the things of this world, who are willing to devote their time to the work of scattering tracts, without any reward only what the Lord may be pleased to give. Let us keep such men busy.

Then, again, every preacher needs some tracts to scatter as he goes out sowing the precious seed. The tracts left behind are like showers on the seed sown in the field. They keep on preaching when he is gone. Who can spare some money for this glorious object? It is a very safe investment. It will produce great profits. Try it. The harvest is ripe. Now is the time to gather in the grain. Come, take some stock in this business. Lend to the Lord. Let us sow liberally, and we shall reap bountifully.

THE HEALTH REFORMER.

We have just received the Dec. No. of The Health Reformer, published at Battle Creek, Mich. We take pleasure in recommending this valuable monthly to our readers. It should be in every family. Price $1. a year. Address Health Institute, Battle Creek, Mich. The Herald of Health, published at 15 Laight, St., New York, and the Laws of Life, at "Our Home," Dansville, N. Y., are also valuable health monthlies. We are always glad to welcome their arrival upon our table. People are not half awake to the importance of attending to the laws of health, in their food, drinks, exercise, and fresh air. It is very rare to find a perfectly healthy man or woman. Nearly all are complaining more or less. And it is no wonder that they are sick, when we look at their manner of living. If they would take the "Health Reformer," or some other hygienic work, they would receive much valuable information, which, if followed, would save them from paying doctor's bills, and their bad feelings which are now such disagreeable burdens.

PRAYER MEETINGS.

The well-regulated prayer-meeting is a great promoter of spirituality in the church of Christ; and devoted christians always delight in them. Whenever a church gets so cold as to have no prayer-meeting, it must be nigh unto death. There are many ways to break up prayer meetings; a few of which we will notice.

1. Introduce some disputed point of doctrine, on which those attending the meeting honestly differ, and argue the subject in the meeting. It will not be long before the prayer-meeting will become the means of making backsliders instead of christians. Brotherly love and communion will be destroyed, and Satan will be delighted with the results. Many prayer-meetings have been ruined in this way by men who meant well, but not understanding human nature, they took the wrong road to secure the good of the cause of Christ. Jarring notes never produce harmony. We are instructed to "follow after the things which make for peace, and things wherewith one may edify another." The Greek word rendered "edify," signifies "improvement in piety," "advancement in the divine life," "what promotes edification and christian improvement. Doctrinal disputes never promote "christian improvement," but on the contrary, dry up devotional feelings, and drive away those of the most amiable dispositions, leaving the war spirits to bite and devour each other, and destroy all the good that might otherwise be accomplished.

If we would have good prayer-meetings, they should be so free from doctrinal disputes that no christian will feel that his peculiar views are being assailed. We should not go to the prayer-meeting to make proselytes to our particular views, but to worship the Lord by prayer and praise. As soon as we get our minds fixed on some doctrinal point and begin to argue that, we at once break up the devotional feelings, and call the mind off from the Lord to that doctrine. There is a time to teach doctrine, but it is not in the prayer-meeting. The prayer meeting has a special place in the church of Christ, and a special work to accomplish, which is to worship our Creator, unite our hearts to each other in brotherly love; and increase our devotional feelings, which are too often brought to a low state by the chafing influence of our daily intercourse with the world in our business transactions. A man may be backslidden in heart, and not lose his zeal in the defense of his doctrinal opinions. Some of the most zealous defenders of the true doctrine of the Bible are utter strangers to the real enjoyment of the christian religion. They have neither social, family, or closet prayer. Their devotional feelings are dried up; yet they are ever ready to dispute with those who differ from them on doctrinal points. They do not care to hear sermons on practical christianity, and manifest no interest for the salvation of sinners. In this respect they show very little if any connection with Christ, the living vine. His whole aim was to lead men to repentance and holy living. He came to save sinners; and if we have his Spirit, it will lead us to act and feel like him. His Spirit will lead us to pray much, and to love the prayer-meeting properly conducted. His Spirit leads us to love all his children, wherever they are found, and breaks down all sectarian walls. And if we "have not the Spirit of Christ, we are none of his." Are we the Lord's?

2. Prayer-meetings are often killed by long prayers. No one enjoys the long, dry prayers, so common in these days of cold formality. All the examples in the Bible favor short prayers of from one to three minutes; and yet it is common for some to pray from five to fifteen minutes. Let three or four such prayers follow each other, and everybody is tired, and longing to rise from their knees and change their position. And right here we would remark that in many places it has become the custom for the majority of those who attend prayer-meetings to sit on their seats while others pray. This ought not so to be. We know from happy experience that one enjoys the meeting better to humble himself and get down upon his knees with all who pray. It is a very pleasing sight to see all bowed together in prayer; and a very disagreeable one to go into a prayer-meeting while one is engaged in prayer and find the majority, or even any, sitting in their seats; and still worse to find them looking around the room, and ready to gaze at you when you enter. All such appear to be only spectators, who have not come to the meeting to worship God, but to look on and see how the rest do it.

We say again, if we would have good, interesting prayer-meetings, let the prayers be short and fervent. Let each one ask for just what he wants in as few words as possible; not try to make a display of beautiful language, to be heard of men. Then every true disciple of Jesus will heartily unite in the petition, and sinners will feel there is a reality in such worship, and long to be partakers of the rich blessings enjoyed by such worshipers.

3. Prayer-meetings are often rendered burdensome, especially at the beginning, by having too many prayers in succession. It is not pleasant to remain on the knees in a prayer-meeting more than five or ten minutes at a time; and then it is very tedious unless the prayers are short. In ten minutes there should be from three to five prayers. Five would be more interesting than three, as a general rule. When there is a frequent change we do not tire so quick as when one or two occupy the whole time. One can ask for many things in two minutes. We have been in some prayer-meetings where it had become the custom to have all the praying done up at once, at the beginning of the prayer meeting, and then all talking and singing after that. In such cases it is common to have eight or ten prayers, and spend a half an hour or more on the knees. This is very tedious, and all feel relieved when the last one says, Amen. It would be far better to have two or three short prayers, then rise and sing a stanza, with heart-felt praise to the Lord; then two or three short exhortations, one, two or three minutes long; then two or three more short prayers, and thus continue for an hour; and all would say at its close, "What a good meeting we have had. I enjoyed it very much." Then all would be anxious to come again. By such a course, our prayer-meetings would become seasons of heavenly feasting, and we should feel like asking everybody to attend. The Lord would send sinners and backsliders to such meetings, and the church would have a continued revival interest.

There is no objection to several short talks from the same individual; but very serious objections to a long talk of five or ten minutes from any one, even the minister. He should set a good example, and be short. If he and others talk long, the little ones feel weaker than ever, and think within themselves, I can't say anything, or pray where there are so many who can do much better than I can; and so they keep still and die. But let the minister and the leading members just say a few words, and make short prayers; then the one-talented feel encouraged, and are prompted to say a few words, and thus gain moral strength to do other duties.

4. Prayer-meetings are often continued too long. Ordinarily, one hour is long enough. We are sure all would enjoy them much better, and that a much larger number would attend, if the prayers, exhortations, and songs, which are usually dragged out from an hour and a half to two hours, were all condensed into one hour of earnest work. Such meetings would have double interest and effect over what they have as usually conducted.

5. One other very essential requisite for good prayer-meetings is to live right out of meeting. One can not feel free in the Lord when he knows he has not done his duty to his fellow men around him. If he has been out of patience with them, or cheated them in trade, and then meets them in the prayer-meeting, he does not feel like taking any part in the devotional exercises. If he has been scolding in the family, he feels tongue-tied in the meeting. Let every weight be thrown aside, and every christian rally to the prayer-meeting, and the fruits will be blessed.

These are our settled convictions after twenty-six years of observation and experience.

HYDE PARK.

Hyde Park is a new and very pleasant village, eight miles from Boston, on the Hartford and Erie R. R. There are several who reside there that are deeply interested in the "blessed hope," and are in earnest to get the truth before the people. They are making noble sacrifices for this object, and the Lord is blessing the effort. The interest is gradually increasing, and our hopes are bright in favor of seeing some sinners converted. We spent the Sabbath, Dec. 6th, with them; and in the afternoon accepted an invitation to preach for the Methodists. We were much pleased with Bro. Whittecar, the preacher. He manifested a true christian spirit. We found that all spoke well of him. It is pleasing to find a minister free from sectarian bigotry, who is ready to fellowship all who love Jesus.

THE HOLY GHOST OF THE SPIRITUALISTS.

Among the questions put to the spirits that visit the Spiritual circle at the "Banner of Light" office, Boston, we find the following:

"QUES.—By S. Craft, of Ohio: What does the blasphemy against the Holy Ghost mean?

ANS.—To us it means the blasphemy against our own inner consciousness of right. That is the only Holy Ghost that we can perfectly understand, that we can come into perfect rapport with; therefore is the only Holy Ghost that we can blaspheme against."

It will be seen that the spirits deny the Holy Spirit, revealed to us in the Bible. Then if a Spiritualist thinks it right, as taught by many of the spirits, to leave his wife and live with another, that would be obeying his Holy Ghost.

"I PRAY."

We find several are forming the habit of saying in public prayer, "I pray." Would it not be better to say We pray? It is understood that when the preacher, or any other one, prays in public, that he is not only presenting petitions for himself, but for all in the meeting; hence it seems more appropriate to say, "We pray," than "I pray." When one says, "I pray," it seems to leave the rest outside of the petition. We have frequently heard a remark to this effect, from those who were in the congregation.

DON'T WORRY.

Many spoil all their peace and joy in this life by a continual worrying about something. They are as seldom at rest as the waves of the sea. If it were not for this sad habit of worrying they might have real sunny times, and rejoice in the Lord; but as it is, their cup of joy is usually empty; and they make all around them feel uncomfortable.

The following from the pen of J. Wm. Van Namke is worth committing to memory:—

"Don't worry! It will do no good. It will not make your burden lighter. It will not dispel the clouds of sorrow from your life sky. It will not avert any coming evil. It will make your troubles none the less.

Don't worry! Have you done your duty in all things? Have you improved every opportunity presented you for doing good to others? Have you employed your time profitably? Have you acted as the spirit within you has guided? If you have, then leave results with a higher power.

Don't worry! It will only make your troubles greater, and life look less bright and attractive. It will bring gray hairs and wrinkles, and make your heart old before its time.

Don't worry! It never did any good yet, and will never do anything but harm.

Work, work; be active, be industrious, be prudent, be careful, but don't worry, or you will never accomplish anything in life.

It is activity, effort, perseverance and energy that lead to success. These, accompanied by cheerfulness and hope, seldom fail to bring happiness, contentment and peace. Cherish them, and be faithful, be trustful, but don't worry."

"HERALD OF PEACE" is the name of a sixteen page quarto, published in Chicago, Ill., by members of the Society of Friends. It is devoted to the cause of Peace and general religious improvement. It is well supported by the most intelligent and active members of the Society of Friends, as well as many others. It numbers among its contributors Professor Thomas Chase, of Haverford College; E. L. Comstock, the well-known missionary and philanthropist; J. H. Douglas, Secretary of the "Peace Association of Friends in America;" Wm. F. Mitchell, of Philadelphia, long an active and efficient laborer among the Freedmen; David Hunt, a veteran minister of Iowa; Prof. D. Satterthwaite, of New York, beside many others, both among Friends and others.

The editorials are practical and pointed. The Children's Department is edited with much care. Altogether it is decidedly the leading paper among the Friends. It is issued at the low price of $1.50 per year.

BRO. INGHAM.—We learn that Bro. Wm. Ingham is in great need of assistance. His address is Lawrence, Mass., Box 56.

For the World's Crisis.

ROCHESTER.

Another day of deep interest has been realized in this place. Our morning meeting was full of interest. We have two blind men, and one deaf one, rejoicing in the offers of that redemption that will open blind eyes, and unstop deaf ears, and cause the lame to leap as a hart. I could almost envy the gifts and graces with which the Son endows these members. But, no! I had rather glory in it. Let God give the more grace to that which is wanting, and let all the people say, Amen.

The evening service closed with the communion, before which we extended the right hand of fellowship to seven or eight who united with the church. Our congregation is quite large, and a deep feeling still pervades throughout. All seem to listen for their lives. The Lord save, is my prayer. H. PRATT.

For the World's Crisis.

A BRIEF LETTER

TO A MINISTER OF THE M. E. CHURCH.

Rochester, N. Y., Nov. 30th, 1868.

DEAR BRO. O.:—Your kind letter of the 19th ult. was duly received. I thank you for the interest you manifest in my behalf. From your stand-point, I am certainly in danger of being poisoned by heresy. You exhibit the christian spirit in trying to reclaim me from what appears to be a ruinous departure from the standard of so-called orthodoxy. Whatever views I may entertain, I mean to possess the spirit of Jesus, and lead a holy life. I never more deeply felt the importance of vital religion, and was never more fully determined to be a whole-hearted christian, than now. I am the Lord's, and he is mine.

I am not so sure that I am running off the old Bible track. I am inclined rather to believe that I am getting more fully upon it. Of this I am assured,—modern theology is largely spiced with heathen fables and unscriptural traditions. The only possible way to make even a plausible case, is to figure and spiritualize a large portion of the Scriptures away. I am seriously impressed that many theological teachers have been playing an unwarranted game with the understandings and consciences of the people. But more is to be attributed to ignorance than to malice.

For some time past my faith in certain doctrines that are commonly taught and believed has been terribly shaken. I resolved to examine the matter more closely. With a full sense of my own weakness and liability to err, I cautiously and prayerfully entered upon the investigation. The result is, a radical change of views on some points, and an earnest desire to understand still others not yet fully settled. The Bible was never so interesting, and truth never so precious. It seems to me that the popular sentiment in regard to man's destiny at death, is calculated to produce almost unlimited confusion in theology. If men, at death, are ushered into a glorious heaven, or cast into an awful hell, as is taught in ten thousand pulpits all over Christendom, what is the use of any resurrection of the dead, or day of judgment? If the above doctrine is true, men are rewarded and punished before they are judged. Is this agreeable to the character of God? Is it in harmony with the Holy Scriptures? I cannot believe it. If you will show me where God is pledged to rally his creatures from the bliss of heaven and the agonies of hell, to be formally judged and then sent back to their glorious rewards or fiery retribution, I will yield the point. The doctrine herein stated is either terribly true, or terribly false! I believe it is the latter, and so renounce it. Let our theology be rock-founded and fire-proof! May God abundantly bless you. Amen!

Yours in Jesus, A. A. PHELPS.

PLAN OF REDEMPTION.

BRO. GRANT:—I thought I would add my testimony in favor of this valuable book. I have been reading it of late, and can say it is just the book for the times. It is a book long needed. But few people are conversant with the plan of redemption as revealed in the Bible, and the authors seem to be fully aware of this fact, and have made the subject so plain that the child can understand it. I think the brethren should do all they can to circulate this very important book. No family should be without it. Your brother in Christ,

Canton, Me. ORRILL W. KIMBALL.

For the World's Crisis.

RECEIPTS.—The following sums, to aid in building a meeting-house in Washington, D. C., have been received:—Sister S. L. Wise, Ct., $1,00. Mrs. A. Hardy, $10,00; others $5,00. Mrs. O. Parsons, Me. $2,00.

As a church, we beg these kind brethren and sisters to accept our many thanks. The Lord will keep the "book of remembrance" correctly "against that day."

LETTER FROM BRO. D. N. SMITH.

BRO. GRANT:—When the farmer sows his seed, he must wait for it to germinate, and for the rain and sunshine to ripen it; and must wait several months before he can reap the fruits of his toil; but it is not so in the spiritual harvest. The Savior has said, "Say not ye, There are yet four months, and then cometh harvest." The seeds of life sown in the human heart often bud and blossom and bring forth fruit in a short time. I think there is a lack of wisdom, in many preachers and churches, in this matter of gathering the harvest; for in this enlightened land there are but few who have not heard of the Savior and his mission, and who also know that they are sinners. It is to be feared that many preach without any hope or expectation of seeing immediate conversions, which indicates a want of faith in the promises. There are few congregations in which there can not be found those whose hearts are tender, and if they were sought out and encouraged would enlist in the Lord's army; and if this was made a speciality, there would be more spiritual life in the churches. The age in which we live is emphatically the time of harvest, and it should be the one great work of the church to get men converted and prepared for the coming kingdom, which, we believe, is just at hand.

But how often is it the case that brethren and sisters come together with no higher motive than merely to have what they call a good meeting,—to have their own souls revived, and without any special effort for the salvation of the lost. This is selfish, and not of the Master's spirit; for his whole life was given up for the benefit of others. I know David once said, "Restore unto me the joys of thy salvation; then will I teach transgressors thy ways." This implies backsliding, and if any are in this state, this prayer would be appropriate. But how often do christians get revived, are full of the joys of salvation, and are content to enjoy it all themselves.

I think it cannot be too strongly impressed upon the church that its important mission now is to fish and hunt for souls. I know the proclamation of the advent at hand is important, but we know that doctrine in the head is not grace in the heart; there is something more required for a preparation to meet this event, than a knowledge or belief of its soon appearing. Who will secure stars in his crown of rejoicing by bringing his sheaves with him? D. N. SMITH.

For the World's Crisis.

WORD OF RECONCILIATION.

BRO. GRANT:—Let me express a few thoughts on the passage quoted in my last from 2 Cor. 5:19. A wrong conception may be taken of the last clause of that verse. Two facts are spoken of in conjunction. It reads thus: "And hath committed unto us (the apostles) the word of reconciliation." What can the apostle mean by this expression, when spoken in conjunction with the rest of the verse, but that God had given his servants the gospel to preach? And what are its requirements? First, God commanded all men every where to repent, and believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, or be ye reconciled to God.

Question: From what sin does the gospel require us to turn away? the original sin, or the actual sin which the sinner has committed? Answer, the actual sin, of course.

Question: How can sinners be reconciled to Christ, and be saved from their own sins, if not rescued first from their helpless state into which they fell by Adam's transgression?

Another thought: how is man accountable, if helpless on account of Adam's transgression? Again, if helpless, how did man get strength or power to believe for eternal life? Read the whole text: "To wit, that God was in Christ, reconciling the world unto himself, not imputing their trespasses unto them"; "For when we were yet without strength, in due time Christ died for the ungodly."—Rom. 5:6. So we understand that by the death of Christ, the Adamic sin was purged from the world; hence it is called a salvation. Proof: "For therefore, we both labor and suffer reproach, because we trust in the living God, who is the Savior of all men, specially of those that believe."—1 Tim. 4:10.

Question: Is it not as true that Jesus Christ is the Savior of all men from the Adamic sin, as that he is the Savior of a believer? And as God has pronounced physical death on Adam's race, that penalty must be executed to the end of this age, or the sitting of the judgment on man for actual sin. Taking this view of the atonement, I can understand the prophet Jeremiah when he says (ch. 31:30), "But every one shall die for his own iniquity; every man that eateth the sour grape, his teeth shall be set on edge." "The son shall not bear the iniquity of the father, neither shall the father bear the iniquity of the son." Ezek. 18:20.

Again, God declares, "Behold all souls are mine; as the soul of the father, so also the soul of the son is mine; the soul that sinneth, it shall die."—Ezek. 18:4. God pronounced on Adam's race a temporal death, from the fact that a Redeemer was provided, as found in 1 Pet. 1:19, 20,—"But with the precious blood of Christ, as of a lamb without spot; who verily was foreordained before the foundation of the world, but was manifest in these last times for you." Again, John 1:29, "Behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world." From these scriptures, we learn that man has not perished on account of Adam's sin, but must have a redemption from that death, from the fact that there was a ransom found. But the penalty pronounced on sinners for rejecting Christ, no ransom can be found; hence those that do not look on, or believe on Christ, must perish eternally. The judgment pronounced on them is eternal death, to be executed in the "lake of fire and brimstone, which is the second death." So I can see plainly how the wicked must and will be raised up. "Therefore, as by the offence of one, judgment came upon all men to condemnation; even so by the righteousness of one the free gift came upon all men unto justification of life."—Rom. 5:18. Inasmuch as I have full confidence in Christ and his word, I do not want to be found marveling at his own declarations; when he says, "Marvel not at this, for the hour is coming in the which all that are in the graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth; they that have done good, unto the resurrection of life; and they that have done evil, unto the resurrection of damnation." More yet. I. DAMMAN.

FROM BRO. H. ZAREMBA.

Translated from a German letter, which I received from a Bro. in St. Joseph, that has just come out from a German Baptist church there because he preferred to believe the word of God, rather than human creeds and traditions.

St. Joseph, Mich., Nov. 27th, 1868.

"DEAR BRO. REIMER:—As I stand quite alone now, it does my heart good to hear something from the children of God. Excuse me therefore, that I again address a few lines to you. I do not know if you received my second letter; if not, I remarked in it, that you might send me some of your last tracts. For as the matter stands here, this tract (Rich Man and Lazarus, Thief on the cross, etc.), might accomplish much good, because the principal arguments they bring up here to prove the immortality of the soul, consist in the rich man and Lazarus, thief on the cross, Christ going to hell at death, and others. I cannot understand how it is, that in this so highly enlightened nineteenth century, people do not seem to have any true idea of the constitution of man, or the plan of salvation in Christ; on the contrary, their ideas contradict the plain word of God.

One instance here may give you a slight idea of the fact. The old Baptist minister in this place, who has been in the ministry for twenty-five years, preaches and believes it without any doubt that Christ did not die; but went to hell after his crucifiction, and there preached to the spirits of the antediluvians. I must confess, under such preaching, no true follower of Christ can be benefited. Sometimes I almost begin to lose courage, and cannot understand how it is possible that intelligent men cannot see such plain truths. Since my last writing, I have received the Crisis regularly; besdies this, I also receive the "Voice of the West;" and I assure you, each time I look for those papers with great eagerness; for they testify truly of the spiritual life among the Adventists. My former Baptist brethren prophecy, that ere long I shall shut up the Bible entirely, and not believe anything at all; but I confess, in the last six months, I have received more light from the word of God, than I did during the fifteen years previous; and the word of God becomes more precious to me every day, and each time I receive additional light on subjects that were hitherto dark to me, my heart rejoices. I wish I could live where a true christian congregation exists. At the time of the last tent-meetings in Chicago, I heard three sermons from Bro. M. Grant, and I am astonished, that christians, who pretend to be in possession of the Holy Spirit, can set down these people (Adventists) as infidels. If the Lord should not come soon, what must become of the whole christendom? Remember me in your prayers, that my light in regard to the plan of salvation, may increase and that I may do my share in building up the cause of Christ!" Your brother in Christ,

H. ZAREMBA.

Correspondence.

From Bro. Wm. Johnston.

ELD. M. GRANT:—Dear brother, I returned from conference (of the church of God) on last Thursday, where I was more strictly catechised in regard to my private opinions than Bro. A. A. Phelps by his Free Methodist brethren. And this is the more astonishing, as the Church of God acknowledges no creed or discipline but the Bible. They charged me with dishonoring the Lord's day, because I verily believe that the seventh day of the week "is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God." But this, they said, was not the greatest error I was led into. "I denied the immortality of the soul, and believed that when a man died he lay in the grave as unconscious as a brute beast until the resurrection of the dead." After this statement was made, I was asked the following questions:

Q. "Do you believe in innate immortality; or, in other words, that the soul of man is immortal?"

A. I believe that God only hath immortality, dwelling in the light; and that man must seek it by continuing in well-doing.

Q. "What do you believe will become of the wicked?"

A. They will be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord and the glory of his power.

Q. "Then you believe they will be annihilated?"

A. I make use of no such word; it is not to be found in the Bible. When I warn the wicked, I use scriptural expressions only.

Q. "Don't you believe they will be burned up?"

A. The prophet Malachi says, "Behold, the day cometh that shall burn as an oven; and all the proud, yea, and all that do wickedly, shall be stubble; and the day that cometh shall burn them up, saith the Lord of hosts, that it shall leave them neither root nor branch." Here I offered them one hundred and sixty-eight passages of Scripture, which I had fairly written out on the state of the dead and the destiny of the wicked, saying that these passages contained all I believed on these subjects; and that I really believed they meant just what they said. A good brother here observed that Bro. Johnston believes as firmly in vital religion as we do, and that as he held all these opinions when he united with us eighteen or nineteen years ago, we ought not to refuse him his license notice, but caution him not to disturb the peace or harmony of the church with them, but keep them to himself. To this I replied, I never use unscriptural phrases in my preaching, such as "triune God," "never-dying soul," "eternal misery," "annihilation," etc., etc.; nor will I consent to do so, but will preach Jesus and him crucified, without urging my private opinions on any one.

After much talk on these subjects, as I am an old man, it was voted unanimously to accept my report, and renew my license. May God bless the dear brethren, and enable them to see the whole truth as it is revealed in the precious Bible. Blessed be God, the time is not far distant when Jesus will come to put an end to all such disputes, and take his humble followers into his kingdom, to live with him for ever. Yours in Christ,

WM. JOHNSTON.

Newport, Pa., Nov. 2nd, 1868.

From Bro. G. A. Streeter.

BRO. GRANT:—While sitting in the Stoneham depot, some time since, waiting for the horse-car to start, these words ran through my mind: "Trust ye in the Lord for ever; for in the Lord Jehovah is everlasting strength."—Isa. 26:4. How good it is to trust in the Lord. I love to work for one who pays up so promptly. He who said, "Go ye into the vineyard and work," has also said, "whatsoever is right, that shall ye receive." Need we fear? Never will a father see his children suffer when he has the means for his support by him; neither will our heavenly Father. Will not the Master see that his word is made good, and that all my wants are supplied? He has, and I expect he ever will, as long as I am on duty; when the rations are gone, I shall conclude that my work is done. But as long as the Master wants me in the field, he knows that I must have some of this world's goods to live on, and my family also; and he knows just how to get it, and when. So I will keep at work as fast as doors open, trusting in him, and he will keep giving; if men do not do their duty, they will have to settle with God, not with me.

So, dear brethren and sisters, "trust in the Lord with all your hearts, and lean not unto your own understanding"; "in all thy ways acknowledge him, and he shall direct thy paths."

I have just returned from the mountains; have been looking up the scattered sheep; have found some new ones too; and praise Jesus' dear name, that there are some sheep scattered over hill and dale, lights to this wicked world; but they must be looked after; the old sheep must be fed as well as the young. Some seem to forget this. When I look back and see where Brn. have been and built up churches, and now have left them, it seems bad. Brn., go feed the poor sheep, as in the days of yore; they are the Master's still. I know it is more pleasing to see a nice large flock together, but the flocks of six, twelve, fifteen, twenty-five, must be fed also. They are scattered. Who will go? I, for one. I have not suffered as much as the Master did yet. Dear brethren and sisters, pray the good Lord to give me wisdom to rightly divide the word of truth to the scattered ones. Thine for the flock, wherever they are,

GEO. A. STREETER.

SR. JANE GLASSON, Bristol, Ct., Jan. 28th, writes:—"I feel it my duty, as also my desire, to acknowledge that I have been benefited very much since I have been taking and reading that highly esteemed and well beloved paper, the World's Crisis. I am rather young in the faith, but I desire the truth in Christ. I have taken much interest in the inquiries that have been answered in this paper. I must say I have been much enlightened, and am led to say from the depth of my soul, Thy word, O Lord, is true. Sanctify me through thy truth. Praise the Lord, I do feel I am growing in grace, and in the knowledge of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. To him be glory, both now and for ever. Often, when I read the interesting letters from the brothers and sisters that are laboring in the east, west, north, and south, in the vineyard of the Lord, I rejoice with them, and give God the praise, for he is blessing their labors, and adding souls to their number. I hope and trust they will be stars of rejoicing in their crowns when Jesus comes. My prayers and tears are to God for them, that he will give them grace in these last day perils. I believe Jesus is soon coming, to give to every one according as his work shall be. May God help us to watch, and be ready every hour, so that when he comes, we shall hear Jesus say, "Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world." I am trying to be a doer of the word, and not a hearer only.

Bro. S. G. Mathewson was with us two evenings, a few weeks ago. It did me good. The words have not yet lost their perfume, thank God. May the Lord bless all the dear saints scattered abroad, and give me, with them, a home in the kingdom when Jesus comes. Your sister, through the love of God in Christ."

Bro. Robert Eden, Somerville, N. J., writes:—"I wish to say to the brethren and sisters of Washington and other places where I am acquainted, that my stay in the country this summer has not improved my health much. My doctor is doubtful of my surviving another winter. So I have concluded to go to Jacksonville, Fla., as my only chance. I have been delighted with Bro. Smith's accounts of the country in the Crisis. I wrote to him, but he could not give me any encouragement, being unable to work, and having a small family; however, if the climate helps me, I may be able to do something to support my family. I trust in God for support and comfort in the undertaking, and believe we shall not want. I hope to meet with some of the saints there. I earnestly request the prayers of all the humble brethren in my behalf. Hoping to meet you all in the renewed earth, where sickness shall never come."

Obituaries.

Post. Mrs. Emeline Post, daughter of Bro. Wm. Chandler, of Monticello, Minn., died at the residence of her father, Sept. 27th, 1868, after a lingering and painful illness.

Sr. Post was several years ago converted to God and the faith of the near coming of the Lord, and was baptized by Eld. Thurber, in Canada East, before her father moved his family into this country. She has maintained her christian faith and integrity to the end, and by her faithful christian walk on the esteem of a large community, who testified their respect for her memory by a general attendance at her funeral. The writer preached her funeral sermon in the Methodist chapel in Monticello, which was kindly granted the friends for the occasion. After services, a large procession followed to her grave, and buried her beside her departed mother, where they now sleep side by side, in hope of the "better resurrection." It was a beautiful day, and with the declining sun setting unclouded, we laid her to rest, for the breaking day to dawn at the rising of "the Sun of righteousness."

O. R. Fassett.

Morrell. Died in Newburgh, Me., Nov. 11th, 1868, Sister Jane, wife of Eld. John Morrell, aged sixty-one years.

It is a painful duty to record the death of those of whom it may be said, their price is far above rubies; yet the memory of the just is blessed. In Sr. M. we have all lost a friend, the family a prudent wife and affectionate mother, the church a living member, and the neighborhood a peacemaker. For a full description of her character, please read Prov. 31: 10–31. Her end was very peaceful. Fully resigned to her fate, she entered the gloomy portals shouting, and so fell on sleep; that blessed sleep from which none ever wake to weep. May peace bind up the breaking heart of our Bro., and grant him a good hope of the better resurrection.

L. Dammon.

Cook. Died in Charlestown, Mass., Sr. Rhoda A. Cook, (colored), formerly of Belfast, Me., aged sixty years.

This dear sister embraced the faith of the soon coming of Jesus in 1843, and has ever since been a faithful and earnest laborer, sacrificing all upon the altar of her faith in God, through Jesus Christ, for the cause of truth and the salvation of the perishing. She died in the triumph of faith, expecting very soon that the last trump will sound, when they that are Christ's at his coming shall awake to sing the song of the redeemed.

Mitchell. Died in East Bowdoinham, Nov. 28th, 1868, Bro. Joshua Mitchell, father of Elder H. S. Mitchell, aged sixty-four years and six months.

Bro. M. was converted among the Methodists forty years ago, and he held the office of steward, and was class leader in the Methodist church many years. In 1854 he embraced the blessed hope of the Lord's coming, and all its kindred truths. He selected a text (Col. 3: 3, 4), from which a sermon was preached at his funeral.

H. D. Reed.

Allen. Died in North Springfield, Vt., Nov. 7th, 1868, Sister Lucy C., wife of R. Clark Allen, aged thirty-two years.

Our Sister has been a great sufferer for months, but has borne all with great fortitude and patience, while leaning ever on the arm of her Savior in whom she trusted. May the light of the gospel promises cheer our brother in his affliction, and prepare him to meet the loved one in a better world, where party is never known.

O. P. A.

Jameson. Died at Bradford, N. H., Nov. 29th, Louisa, only daughter of Sharon and Rosilla Jameson.

The funeral services were conducted by the writer. Sermon from Job 14: 14.

Joseph W. White.

Stewart. Died in Exeter, N. H., Nov. 17th, 1868, of disease of the lungs, Sarah Abbie, daughter of Wm. C. and Sarah E. Stewart, aged two years, two months, and twenty-four days.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

Cable News.

Constantinople, Dec 6. The Sublime Porte has decided to act vigorously against the Hellenic government if its open assistance to the Cretans is continued. This resolution has been communicated to the ambassadors of the powers protecting Greece. Positive instructions have been sent to the Turkish minister at Athens, which will probably result in the suspension of diplomatic relations. Troops are being sent outside the Dardanelles. The Porte in its ultimatum to the Hellenic government grants a short delay, demands positive explanations, and declares it must have re-assuring guarantees for the future, otherwise the commercial and diplomatic relations will be immediately suspended. The Turkish minister will demand his passports and leave Athens. A new officer has been sent out to take command of the Turkish fleet in the Archipelago. M. Gilesco, the new foreign minister of Roumania, has presented to the Sultan an autograph letter from Prince Charles, reiterating his protestations of allegiance and disclaiming all projects hostile to Turkey.

Paris, Dec. 8. The Moniteur says Bismark, soon after his return to Berlin, had an interview with the Embassadors of France, England and Russia, and assured them of his confidence in the maintenance of good feeling between the European powers.

Vienna, Dec. 9. The Emperor Francis Joseph has issued a manifesto addressed to the army, in which he says: "The country wants peace and we must maintain it. I am satisfied with the laws recently adopted for the reorganization of the army throughout the empire. Austria and Hungary are now equally interested in the grandeur and security of the empire. It is my wish that the army, navy and Landwehr ever remain truly united."

Volletta, Dec. 9. Dispatches from Sicily report a fresh eruption of Mt. Etna on Tuesday night. The volcano broke out with increased violence, ejecting flames and lava until five o'clock this morning. The torrents of lava devastated the surrounding country. The ashes from the crater fell on the town of Aci Real and were blown even into the streets of Messina. At last accounts this mountain was enveloped in smoke, and labored with deafening detonations. Great crowds have gathered on the northern shore of Malta to witness the magnificent spectacle, which, though one hundred miles distant, is distinctly visible.

Madrid, Dec. 10. The insurrection has assumed a more alarming character than was at first reported. The telegrams from Cadiz announcing the surrender of the insurgents prove to have been erroneous. On the first day of the revolt the insurrectionists succeeded in taking some pieces of artillery and have occupied an important position. General Cabellerodo Rode, at the head of a considerable military force, is preparing for a vigorous assault on Cadiz. The National Guards are employed to keep order and protect property in Madrid. Great excitement prevails in Malaga and other towns at the alarming state of affairs. As yet Cadiz is the only town in revolt. A rising is expected momentarily in Catalonia.

Arms and munitions of war have been landed in Cadiz, and it is said that the party in revolt are well supplied with them. They have also plenty of money and are determined on fighting to the last. The American flag is respected by both parties, and hundreds seek protection from the American Consul at Cadiz. There is no American war vessel in port, and the Danish and Italian vessels are placed at the disposition of the American Consul. Many rich families are leaving Spain for the present. Gen. Prim has gone to Andelusia. The Government is much embarassed, owing to the unsettled state of the country and the impoverished condition of the finances.

News from Cadiz up to a late hour last night has reached here. The insurgents in that city still occupied the Hotel de Ville and the surrounding houses, and have erected barricades. The government troops occupied the custom house and the buildings in the neighborhood up to the city gate.

All the foreign consuls have taken refuge in the custom house. The civil governor of Cadiz fled to San Fernando. The insurgents have forced into their ranks all able-bodied men. The prison convicts and the former rural guards have joined the insurgents.

Telegrams from San Fernando say the movement is reactionary, carried on in the name and with the elements of republicanism. The insurgents were seen to be well supplied with money.

The civil governor of Sarragossa telegraphs that the republicans there intended to attempt to release and arm the convicts, but precautions were taken which prevented the plot from being carried out.

Dec. 11. The proposals of capitulation made by the insurgents in Cadiz were rejected. At the expiration of the armstice, hostilities recommenced. A desperate conflict took place, in which artillery was used by the troops and the insurgents. The loss in killed and wounded was heavy on both sides. The result of the battle was indecisive, and the insurgents still occupy the Hotel de Villa and surrounding district. The rebels have detained within the Hotel de Ville all the foreign consuls they could seize, and hope by this means they will be able to prevent the threatened bombardment of that portion of the city by the vessels of war lying in the harbor.

A great political excitement prevails in Xeres, Malaga, and Tarragona. Gen. Prim is now on his way to the southern provinces, and it is hoped that his presence there will restore tranquility.

Paris, Dec. 11. The Gaulois asserts that the insurrectionary movement at Cadiz is instigated by the Ex-Queen Isabella.

London, Dec. 11. No news has yet been received of the bombardment of Cadiz, telegraphic communication being interrupted with Madrid. A dispatch from Madrid, dated Thursday, the 10th inst., says a large number of workmen employed by the Municipality on public works yesterday armed themselves with carbines and with bayonets fastened to sticks, and assumed a threatening attitude, which they still maintain. The national militia were ordered to proceed against them, and several battalions are preparing to march against them. Great efforts are being made to raise a revolution here and the citizens are much alarmed. Placards are posted in the Estramadnia, threatening assassination of all rich citizens who take part in the elections for the Cortes.

Madrid, Dec. 10. An armistice of two days has been agreed to with the insurgents in Cadiz, for the burial of the dead and to allow the women and children to leave the city. At its conclusion a combined attack will be made by the troops and fleet upon that quarter of the city which is occupied by the rebels. The latter have set free and armed seven hundred convicts from the prisons and galleys. It is estimated that the rebels in Cadiz number three thousand fighting men.

London, Dec. 10. The following intelligence from Crete has been received via Athens;

The Turks have captured a strong position in Spakia, where the insurgents had erected block houses. They have also seized a quantity of provisions and war materials intended for the Cretans, and taken possession of the two landing places on the shore of the Island nearest Greece. It is reported that in consequence of these advantages gained by the Turks, the insurrection is dying out.

Paris, Dec. 10. It is reported that the Emperor on his return from Campeign to Paris will accord an audience to Olagaza, and will formally recognize him as the accredited Ambassador of Spain to France.

London, Dec. 10. The new Parliament opened this afternoon by Royal Commission.

Pesth, Dec. 10. The session of the Hungarian Diet was closed with a speech from the throne. Emperor Francis Joseph, speaking as King of Hungary, eulogized the labors of Parliament as tending to establish harmony in all parts of the Monarchy. The army bill, he declared, was a pledge for the integrity of the kingdom and for the continuance of peace. He concluded with the hope that the most cordial feeling with Prussia will be maintained.

London, Dec. 13. Dispatches from Madrid show that affairs in Spain are rapidly approaching a crisis. Admiral Topeta has been dispatched to Cadiz to negotiate with the insurgents, but, according to the latest reports, he has met with no success. An interview was held there between the leading rebels and the representatives of the Provisional Ministry, at which Admiral Topeta was present. The rebels demanded a share in the Government, which was refused by Topeta, who told them that, having long submitted to a worse Government, they must momentarily obey the present one. A proclamamation of the Government, declaring the port of Cadiz blockaded, has been promulgated.

A fleet, consisting of two iron-clads and transports with three thousand troops, will sail on the 15th inst. for Cuba.

Madrid, Dec. 14. The insurrection in Cadiz has terminated with the surrender of the insurgents. Many of them desired to deposit their arms at the American Consulate, instead of delivering them up to the government authorities, but Gen. de Roda refused to allow them so to dispose of their weapons, and held them to a strict compliance with the terms of his proclamation.

About thirty persons have been arrested for attempting to incite workingmen of the city to rebel against the government. The insurgents have given up their arms to the military officers, and the people generally are returning the arms which they had secreted at their homes.

The Late Fatal Colliery Explosion in England.—The explosion of fire damp in the Corley coal mine at Wigan, about fourteen miles from Manchester, England, on the morning of Nov. 26, is thus described in an English paper:

"The explosion occured just after the men had breakfasted. In its immediate vicinity, the whole of the men and boys were killed or seriously injured. There was at once a rush of those uninjured to the pit-eyes, and large numbers were rescued, suffering only from fright. The injured, about twenty in number, were brought away and at once attended to. The task of removing the bodies of the killed was necessarily a very slow and painful one, as the workings took fire. By two o'clock in the afternoon, thirty-eight bodies were brought to the surface, and a large number, variously estimated at from forty to eighty, were missing. The origin of the accident is unknown, as the ventilation was said to be excellent. It is supposed that some workman must have removed the top from his lamp, and that a sudden rush of gas caused the explosion. The atmosphere was very heavy at the time. The bodies were in many cases fearfully disfigured, rendering indentification very difficult.

It is remarkable that all the men brought out were young men, the oldest not being apparently over thirty years of age. A portion of the workings were on fire, rendering it difficult to get at the whole of the bodies. The number of those left in the pit was unknown. Fifty-seven persons, it is thought, were killed and ten others seriously burned by the explosion. At six o'clock in the afternoon the firemen made an inspection and reported that all was safe. Both of the firemen were killed. The workings extend east and west. On the east side, one hundred and fifty men worked, and on the west sixty or seventy. All on the east side escaped; nearly all on the west were killed. Several escaped with burns. A few penetrated the choke damp, and one was restored by artificial respiration; but fifty-six were suffocated, and one died from his burns. The extremity of the workings was not reached until six hours after the explosion."

☞ Numerous Frenchmen having been observed in Baden studying the military aspect of the country, the Baden Government has ordered the arrest of all persons discovered making landscape sketches.

DOMESTIC.

New York, Dec. 10th. An Havana letter of the 5th says that the insurrection was still in progress. Although the Government troops claimed to have triumphed over the insurrectionists at Cabre, the latter are by no means despondent. It is averred that they have twelve or thirteen thousand men in the field and an abundance of current funds wherewith to procure arms and ammunition from the United States. They declared, moreover, that they had already established a Provisional Government, with Aquiles as President and Cespedes as Chief Executive Officer. The state of affairs in the Eastern Department of the Island is pitiable in the extreme.

A Good Move.—The New York Times says there is a rumor that some of the great capitalists of that city propose to erect, near their wonderful establishments, perfect and complete houses for their clerks and workmen, supplied with every convenience, to be furnished at the smallest cost. There will be reading rooms, rooms for games and for exercise, a good public table, a co-operative laundry, bath house, &c. The Times hopes that this is true, and that the millionaires propose to use their money as well as to get it, and thus to mark the civilization of the New World by a beneficent use of wealth, and not by its vulgar display.

Traces of the Chinese Rebellion.—"Carlton" writes to the Boston Journal from China:—"Upon every hand, not only in Nankin, but every mile along the river, are ruins. Residents here say that the destruction of life may be estimated at twenty-five millions. The struggle commenced in the southwest province of Yuuan, on the borders of Burmah. It spreads to Canton; it rolled down the valley of the Yang-te-ze to Shanghai, and down the Yellow river to Peking. Every one of the great cities of the interior fell into the hands of the rebels. They took possession of town and country. It was a struggle in which no quarter was shown by either party. Heads of prisoners were chopped off without compunction, that vengeance might overtake them in the future world. The rebels consumed all that came in their way. Desolation marked their progress. Disease and famine followed them. It was a struggle which lasted nearly twenty years. We look out from the deck of the steamer upon heaps of ruins which mark the site of towns once populous. Captain Friend, of this steamer, saw the last victorious attack of the Imperial troops upon the rebels in this city, the cutting off of heads on the shore, the sinking of thousands of rebels in the river as they attempted to escape. There was no mercy, no compassion, no humanity. The Imperial troops were animated by one desire only—to kill; and that had been the policy of the rebels. It was a terrible harvest which was reaped on these meadows during those years."

Items.

☞ Postmasters are obliged to receive all Treasury notes for stamps and postages, if clearly genuine, no matter how torn or defaced they may be, provided one-twentieth part thereof be not missing; and fractional currency, if not one-tenth part be missing. Such notes and currency received as are unfit for re-issue should be kept separate and distinct, and returned, as occasion requires, to the Treasurer of the United States, Washington, in sums of not less than three dollars, to be exchanged for new.

☞ The questions to be discussed at the forthcoming Ecumenical Council at Rome include the policy of uniting the Catholic and Greek churches; the regulation of the relations between the Church and State, in view of the almost universal transformation of absolute into constitutional governments, and the best mode of providing religious instruction, as a barrier against "the atheism of the day, so destructive to faith and morals."

☞ The London Times has a long editorial on the message of President Johnson. Alluding to the Alabama negotiation, it says: "The English Government show every desire to make an arrangement, and it is difficult to believe that the President's Cabinet, or a hostile majority in Congress, will throw over a settlement arrived at after long and laborious negotiations."

☞ Indian troubles continue in Texas. Llane county, for example, is subject to almost monthly incursions of Indians. They have stolen nearly every horse in the county. Within the past year a number of men, women and children have been scalped in that locality.

☞ C. C. Coffin, familiarly known to our readers as "Carlton," completed his tour "Around the World," last evening, when, after an absence of two years, he reached this city. Mrs. Carlton accompanied her husband in his protracted wanderings, and bore the fatigue incident to the trip with great courage.

☞ The grading of the Central Pacific Railway has been completed, one hundred and ten miles west of Salt Lake, and the remaining eighty miles to the Pacific end of the track will be graded in three weeks.

☞ The Rothschild who died lately in France, is found to have left an estate of about four hundred millions of dollars. His family is consequently in easy circumstances. In this country he would have passed for a rich man.

☞ The Sultan's eunuchs, chamberlains, pages, pipe bearers, grooms, cooks, etc., number over two thousand persons, for whom some six thousand dishes are daily prepared, which are served at five hundred tables.

☞ In the upper portions of Piscataquis county, Maine, the snow is said to be very deep and badly drifted. Between Monson and Moosehead Lake it is piled up even with the fences, and it is with difficulty that stage teams can force their way through the drifts.

☞ The church of the Good Shepherd, now building in Hartford, Con., by Mrs. Samuel Colt, as a memorial to her deceased husband and children, will be finished in season to hold services on Christmas Day. It is said to be the handsomest ecclesiastical structure in Conneticut.

☞ Kansas City, Dec. 11th. The weather yesterday and to-day was the coldest since 1855. The thermometer this morning was 15 degrees below zero.

Notice.

Elder Miles Grant will deliver a course of lectures in Washburn Hall, Worcester, Mass., commencing Tuesday evening, Dec. 22d, and continuing every evening through the week. The lectures are to be a review of several sermons, recently delivered in one of the Methodist churches of this city, against our views on several important points of doctrine contained in the Scriptures.

The week following the review, the church in W. purpose to hold a protracted meeting, commencing Wednesday evening, Dec. 30th, and continuing day and evening through the week, and over the following Sunday. The object of the meeting is the diffusion of gospel light, and the salvation of our fellow men. A cordial invitation is extended to preachers, and all others who feel that God would have them come to this meeting, and labor with us in the cause of truth.

H. M. Blackmer,
N. Lazelle, } Committee.
Wm. F. Collier,

Ministerial Conf. at Richmond, Me.

The sixth Ministerial Advent Conference will meet at Richmond, (Reed meeting-house), Tuesday, Jan. 12th, 1869, at half past six o'clock P. M. Preaching at a quarter past seven o'clock. Our preaching brethren are earnestly requested to report themselves, either in person, or by letter, and all preachers in the State, in fellowship with the conference, wishing to become members, are invited to signify their desire by writing to the Secretary before the meeting. Come with hearts filled with love, that we may advance the gospel of the kingdom, and work together for the salvation of the perishing.

N. G. Reed, President.
L. F. Cole, Secretary.

Notice.

The Conn. A. C. Conference, which was noticed in the Crisis to be held in New Haven, Wednesday, Jan. 6th, 1869, is postponed until Jan. 27th, 1869. The church in New Haven are building a chapel, and it will not be finished until the 27th, and ready for the reception of the conference, at which time their hearts will be open to receive us with cordial welcome. We have some very important business to attend to at this conference, and we hope that every church in the State will send one or more delegates, and all the ministering brethren will be present. Let all pray that God will crown our efforts with everlasting good.

B. Hitchcock, President.

Notice.

The Lord willing, the adjourned meeting of believers in the speedy coming of the Lord, held at Bristol, Conn., on Nov. 5th, will meet in New Market Hall (junction of Broad and High streets), Providence, R. I., on Thursday, Jan. 7th, at seven o'clock P. M., and continue over the following Sunday. Bro. George W. Brown of Orrington, Me., William N. Pile of Newark, N. J., and others, are expected to preach the word of life.

For the brethren, Caleb Thompson.

Advent Chris. Conf. of N. Y. State.

The Quarterly Advent Christian Conference of New York State will meet at Honeoye, Ontario Co., N. Y., Dec. 17th, 1868. Those who attend the conference will stop at Livonia Station, on the New York and Erie R. R., where teams will probably be in attendance to convey them to Honeoye. It is hoped there will be a full attendance.

J. R. Cooper, Secretary.

Notice.

The Maine Westerly Quarterly Conference will be held in the Lancaster school-house, in East Bowdoinham, on Thursday, Dec. 24th, 1868, at 10½ o'clock A. M., and hold over the following Sunday. We hope to see a general attendance of brethren and sisters at this conference, prepared to work for the Lord.

C. Goud, President.

R. I. and E. Ct.

This conference will hold its annual session at Bristol, R. I., commencing Wednesday, 2 o'clock P. M., Jan. 6th, 1869. I intend to be there this time. Come and see.

H. F. Carpenter, Clerk.

Notice.

Having resigned my position as corresponding Secretary for the Portsmouth church, expecting to leave for a season, all preaching brethren, therefore, wishing to visit the Portsmouth, N. H. Church, will correspond with Bro. Thos. J. Spinney.

T. E. Wood, Ex. Cor. Sec.

Minnesota.

The second quarterly meeting for the present conference year, will meet (Providence not preventing) in the school-house, five miles north of Eyota station, Friday, Dec. 25th.

T. K. Allen, Secretary.

Notice.

There will be a protracted meeting and quarterly conference in West Gardiner, Me., on the evening of Jan. 7th, and continue over the Sabbath, and longer if thought best. Come, brethren and sisters in the Lord, to labor for the salvation of sinners. Call on James Spear.

H. B. Sevey.

Dedication.

The Lord willing, the new Second Advent Chapel at Bonny Eagle Falls, Me., will be dedicated to God's service on Thursday, Dec. 24th, 1868; after which will be continued a conference meeting the remainder of the week, and over the following Sabbath. Eld. Wm. H. Mitchell and others are expected to be present to preach the word. Brethren and sisters scattered abroad, and preaching brethren, are cordially invited to attend this meeting, and join with us to labor for the advancement of the cause of Christ and truth, and for the salvation of the perishing. Homes will be provided for all who may come.

In behalf of the church, T. P. T. Hampson.

Notice.

I shall be at home from Dec. 22nd to Jan. 1st, and I would say to those who have requested me to visit them,—write immediately. I shall come prepared to stay as long as seems duty. I have made up my mind that running from place to place amounts to little. Brethren, let us go to work in earnest; the harvest is almost ripe, the summer is almost ended. Address A. D. Flagg, 339 South Sixth St., Jersey City.

Appointments.

☞ We would say to our preaching Brethren that it is necessary we should receive their appointments as early as Tuesday Morning, as our paper goes to press about noon; otherwise they will not be inserted till the week following.

LINES.

Written on the Death of Henrietta Young.

Come with me to yonder cottage,
There a weary sufferer lies;
On her cheek the flush of fever,
Light unearthly in her eyes.

Hear her gentle voice of music,
List, she speaks in accents low;
"From your tender, loving presence,
Dearest friends, I soon must go.

Do not mourn in bitter anguish,
Let no tear drops dim your eyes;
Think how soon in Jesus' likeness
Darling Etta will arise.

Soon our King will come in glory,
As the prophets have foretold;
Soon a harp and crown he'll give me,
Soon I'll walk the streets of gold.

I have many precious keepsakes,
Long held sacred in my heart;
Now I leave them with my loved ones,
Peace and comfort to impart.

Take this dollar, bright and golden,
Send it to my suffering friend; *
Tell her 'tis love's last fond token,
Precious gift to her I send.

O may it impart some comfort
To her weary, suffering soul;
Long she's laid in sad affliction,
Blessed Father, make her whole.

Tell dear Thera I will meet her
When our Savior dear shall come,
And with him we'll dwell forever
In our happy, blissful home."

O they can forget her never,
Those who stood around her bed;
In their hearts shall live forever
All the precious things she said.

The soft light of sixteen summers
Rested on her guileless brow;
But the pure and loving maiden
Cheers their hearts no longer now.

And with chastened hearts they're waiting
For Christ's coming in the skies;
And he'll wake their darling Etta,
In his likeness she'll arise.

ANNIE E. MCELLISTER.

Her parents and friends have my heartfelt sympathy in this deep affliction. A. E. M.

For the World's Crisis.

THOUGHTS ON A FEW THINGS.

THE END AND CUTTING OFF OF LIFE.

We commented in a previous article on the finis, fixed in God's counsel, and declared in his word, to the wicked and their wickedness. We hinted at the singular notion, dominating in an alienated theology, that the end is only in seeming; that of sin and sinner there is no end; that a real finis is perpetuity; that under the guise of death the victim is only intensely, dreadfully, and eternally alive, and his wickedness is everlastingly and ineradicably rooted in him, sprouting and fruiting with an augmenting luxuriance in the fierce, tropical nursery of hell. We quoted apostolic authority for a future finis of sin in the death that overtakes and obliterates the sinner. How strangely it strikes the mind, once emancipated from its mis-taught routines of thought, that so much of the prevalent belief on these topics is in unison with the deadly fallacy of the serpent. Did the Lord say that Adam, if disobedient, should die? The devil said he should not. Upon the decree of the Creator, the creature became mortal. But the philosophic pride and dogmatism of man claims and champions his own immortality. If a promised gift through faith in the sinless and second Adam, it is nevertheless affirmed as a present possession. If the menace of death impends over the impenitent, forthwith the genius of the culprit, respited for a little by Divine mercy, has invented a doctrine of eternal life, through the infection of the first falsehood. Theology, of all things, under the highest obligation to simple and perfect loyalty to the word of God, has by demoniac magic become a repository of the very contradiction that let sin, like a black sergeant of dragoons, into the world. The very faith of Christendom has become a harbor for the refuge of the disastrous lie. The practical synonym of immortality with eternal life, as the achievement and reward of patient search and supplication, is destroyed by the subtlety of the Devil's negative of the divine word to Adam; and, behold, presumptuous man reaching forth his unhallowed hand to sunder the twain and proclaim the baseless dogma of immortal life in sin and misery, and the monstrous absurdity of eternal life in death.

But in the name, not only of revelation, but of reason, how can the sinner be immortal? Does sin ever, any how, or any where, conduce to life? Is it not the infallible forerunner and potent producing cause of death? Does it not disorganize and destroy the work of God in the human organism? Or if it at first seem to introduce merely disorder, does not this precede and entail dissolution? Nor can it be denied that death is provided as an effective check to a deranging force, by extinguishing the life which is unworthy of preservation. With the sinner perishes his sin. The loss of life is thus a penalty, as well as a lawful consequence. There are two questions, —one of propriety, the other of possibility.

First, why should the sinner live? and second, how can the sinner live? Sin works, and draws and drives on to death. It is for ever at war against life; it is an enemy to life; it is inconsistent with life. If it is an evil here, and a remedy is not accepted through grace, then the real effect of death, according to orthodoxy, is to perpetuate the evil. A life vitiated here, becomes a life far worse vitiated hereafter, and intensifying for ever in both wretchedness and wrong. Let us rather believe God.

Suppose we glance at a little scripture. The Psalmist prays—notice the invocation—"Oh! let the wickedness of the wicked come to an end." If ever a prayer was a prophecy, is not this? If ever a prayer was an inspiration, is not this? If ever a prayer was accepted and remembered, is not this of that number? Aye, we have the answer in an assurance following almost immediately. This is it: "He [that is, God] hath prepared for him the instruments of death." But mind it well, not the instruments of torture as protracted as eternity. Death is the sinner's doom, if he turns not. The instruments are, the sword whet and the bow bent and ready. The glittering edge, the flashing blade, are dreadfully eloquent with executive purpose and power. The arrow aimed waits but the fatal spring of the bow to leap to its mark, and the target is hit in the heart; the thoughtless sinner falls. Here are hinted two ways of the end of wickedness, and beyond comparison the best, by repentance. If this be neglected, then the one only and inevitable alternative is death. There is no mistake about it. God will do the thing exactly which he has threatened. The wicked man is assigned to death, and that is the end of his wickedness. If he is dead, he will certainly never sin any more. If he is preserved alive in hell, he will sin all the ages of his imprisonment. Will not his rage be as fierce as the fire that shoots its intolerable stings into his soul? Or if wrath and enmity have lapsed into despair, eternal despair will be eternal wickedness; for in despair there is neither love nor faith toward God; and surely whatever is not of faith, or charity, is sin. But, we may be sure that wickedness will end. The Son of God will destroy that old revolted Titan, him that had the power of death; to wit, the devil; and shall a miserable sinner outlive the leonine outlaw, the destroyer, the leader in rebellion, the historical and apocalyptic arch-rebel and liar? No.

Again. "But the transgressors shall be destroyed together; the end of the wicked shall be cut off." By what license from the Almighty shall a prophesied destruction be so misapprehended and metamorphosed, as to signify a miserably and eternally enduring life? Does destruction signify to continue un-destroyed? to resist destruction? to elude it, to oppose it, to defeat it, through a fearful and fatal "immortality"? is this to be destroyed? O, thou frenzied, and, must we say, demented theology; from whence is thy dismal nativity? from what cranny hast thou come forth, in thy ghostly stature and habiliments, to range sepulchral and unchecked through Christendom, and to paint thine antrums and eyeholes in reflected ghastliness on our walls? When a farmer wants the caterpillars destroyed in his orchard, he expects the keen flame of the lifted lamp or torch will reach and annihilate the worms' nests. Does he conceive, or connive at a mere mutilation, or semi-combustion? What monster of a man would devise means to torture the reptile he most abhors, a cobra di capello or a rattlesnake, for a single day, much less for a week? Every instinct in him would prompt to stamp and strike and crush the venomous thing in an instant. Do wolves transgress, by catching and devouring the sheep? The thought of punishment is death to the depredator. Does the hawk swoop down on the precious brood of the mother-hen? The rifle bullet, as the effective finis to his predatory career, is sped on its errand of fate by the guardian of the invaded domain. Will not "the transgressors be destroyed," as declared? Does not God mean what he says? Why is it such an offense to some, that we do so "literalize the Scriptures" as to receive and believe a plain declaration without doubt or debate, eschewing the snares and labyrinths of spiritualization? O, objector, is it not possible thou mayest some time be convicted to thy confusion, of prejudice or pride in thy disaffection? Not one by one, at death, in an endless immortal-soul procession, have the transgressors been going to their hypothetical perdition of torment, these ages past, to try the mazes of a hell intermediate between death and the judgment, to try a kind of experimental or prefatory life in misery. No! They are not thus destroyed, one by one; destroyed before the judgment; destroyed in disembodied foretaste of woe; destroyed by that misty fiction of a perdition which is only a mutilated, monstrous immortal-life. The Bible contains no such four wonders. "But the transgressors shall be destroyed together." I believe it. They will be destroyed at the coming of the Son of man. It will be destruction; it will be judicial; it will be entire; it will be a simultaneous perdition of wicked men.

A few words upon the second clause: "the end of the wicked shall be cut off." By what fallacy or sophism shall this be made to disaccord with the other clause? By none at all. Let us see. Suppose it were adduced or alleged that the end of the wicked is not an end in reality, but a continuation of life. Suppose the end is something endless. Call it existence without end. Call it an endless life of woe. If that is the logic of evasion, we can come down on such an un-Whateleyism by just citing attention to the very short notice—"the end of the wicked shall be cut off." By cutting off this eternity of being, we certainly make an end of the sinner. There is no way to invalidate such a conclusion. But suppose it were submitted in evasion again, that by this expression was meant that when the end of the wicked is cut off, his extinction does not in fact occur, but that the end being death, the act of cutting off this death in fact restores him to life, or indefinitely perpetuates his being. That would be a very singular expedient, if not almost a desperation of reason, and might be met by a not one whit more unreasonable hint, that cutting off the end of linear extension shortens the line, and this would simply be to shorten a limited life. But the simple fact we conceive to be that the end of the sinner shall be a cutting off. By no possibility will he have either an indefinite extension of life, or an eternal languishing in a fruitless and futile drifting to an end. There will be an end, unlike a natural death, which is practically but a suspension of life, while the judicial end is a final terminus, and an executive act.

If it was necessary to be yet more exact to the reading, we might put it thus: The sinner runs a course; he accomplishes a career. He passes over every point of space in his probation, from his birth to his death, and (the intervening unconsciousness being counted nothing) to the judgment. Here, in unmitigated guilt and remediless ruin, he stands condemned. Thus disclosed, and disallowed at this supreme hour, what shall be done? This, then, is the dreadful end of his iniquity; to wit, detection, conviction, and condemnation. There remains but one act more, the execution of the sentence and the infliction of the penalty of the law. And so the end of the sinner is cut off, and his life is lost. This is the grand catastrophe; and the sinner, in the cutting off of the end, is himself finally and forever cut off; for there is where he is, and he can neither go forward nor backward. His fate is everlasting death, and there is no remedy. CLINTON COLEGROVE.

Nov. 30th, 1868.

SCANDAL.—It was the saying of an old acquaintance when his attention was called to anything that had a smacking of scandal in it, "I have so much to do, that I cannot hear it. One half of my time is taken up with my own business, the other half with letting alone that of my neighbors." How many excellent opportunities of letting alone other people's business are slighted! and the world is troubled with the interference of people with what does not concern them. Neighborhoods are driven crazy by reports of idle or mischievous people, who watch for occasions of scandal, and lose no opportunity of making it public, regardless of its truth, or of the injury it inflicts upon the feelings of others. Gossip passes for fact, and surmise for history; and the nimble lie runs many a league while the truth is putting on its boots.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCH OF NAPOLEON III.—No. 3.

BY M. D. W.

The summer passed rapidly away. It was spent at a very retired watering place, called the baths of Geiss, among the mountains of Appenzell. But the Bourbons, who were sustained on the throne of France by foreign armies, could not feel secure so long as the heirs of Napoleon I. were so near them. Accordingly, in the year 1817, the Grand Duke of Baden received peremptory orders from the allies to immediately expel Hortense and her child from his dominions.

In the extreme north-eastern border of Switzerland, on the southern shores of the Lake of Constance, there is the little canton of Thurgovia. Hortense had occasionally in drives entered the canton, and greatly admired a very beautiful estate called Arenemburg. The authorities of this remote canton granted her permission to take up her residence there: she therefore purchased it for sixty thousand francs. This continued to be her home until her death. Here she devoted herself assiduously to the training of the young Louis. He studied the ancient classics, and several modern languages. His mother never failed to instill into his mind those political principles and moral precepts which she had imbibed from the Emperor, who was then languishing upon the rock of St. Helena. She taught him that his uncle was the chosen Emperor of the French people; that an army of a million of foreigners—combined from despotism, who hated Napoleon, had seized him, torn him from France, and imprisoned him on a rock in the ocean, leaving him there to die miserably; that his brother and himself were the heirs of Napoleon, and the time might yet come when the French people would be strong enough to rise again, and drive from France the kings whom foreigners had imposed upon them, and re-establish the empire in one of his heirs. These instructions, of course, made a deep impression upon the mind of the young prince, and he seems to have early imbibed the idea that he was destined to the throne of France.

In the year 1818, there was a partial reconciliation between Hortense and her husband; and the two brothers, after a separation of nearly two years, enjoyed each other's society for several months. They both entered college at Augsburg.

The year 1830 came. Louis Napoleon was then twenty-two years of age. In July of that year, as he was at home with his mother, the exciting tidings reached them that the French people had again risen, and driven out the Bourbons. All Italy was instantly thrown into a tumult of insurrection. Fifteen years had passed since the allied armies of Europe had overthrown the empire, and restored the monarchy of the old regime. Count d' Artois, with the title of Charles X., was now on the throne. Alarmed by the liberal ideas so prevalent in France, he appointed a ministry, every member of which was a known opponent of liberal principles, and especially obnoxious to the French people. The press ventured to utter loud and bitter remonstrances. The king, by the advice of his ministers, issued a decree prohibiting the publication of any journals or pamphlets but such as were authorized by the government. Allison says, quoting from Lamartine, that the king hesitated some time before taking this irrevocable step. "At length, after casting his eyes to heaven, he exclaimed, 'The more I think of it, the more I am convinced that it is impossible for me to do otherwise than I do.' With these words, he signed the ordinances. The ministers all countersigned them in silence; despair was painted on every visage. None really hoped anything from the step; but all felt it was a duty to take it."

On the morning of the 26th of July, the obnoxious ordinances were issued in the Moniteur, and were also conspicuously placarded upon the walls of Paris. The excitement they produced was intense. Crowds gathered at all the corners with anxious and agitated countenances. As the ordinances were repeated from month to month, the gathering tumult and indignation indicated to every observant eye that a storm was approaching. As night came on, the tumult increased. Cries of "Down with the Bourbons!" "Death to the Ministry!" resounded through the gloom. The city lamps were extinguished. The pavements were torn up, carts overturned, and furniture thrown from the windows to construct barricades in the streets. Military companies hastily organized. Crowds of students from the military schools swept the streets, shouting the Marseillaise Hymn, thousands swelling the chorus—

"To arms, to arms, ye brave!
The avenging sword unsheathe!
March on, march on; all hearts resolved
On liberty or death."

The next morning, the people and the royal troops came frequently into collision. The strife grew more general and desperate. Whenever the king's troops, infantry and cavalry, endeavored to clear the streets, they were assailed by a murderous fire.

The morning of the 28th ushered in a day of terror and of blood. From all directions, through all the avenues, the mighty mass of an insurgent population rolled on to the point of attack. Every where the people became stronger, the king's forces weaker. On the 29th they were utterly routed, and the Bourbon dynasty was again overthrown. The king abdicated in favor of his grandson, the Duke of Bordeaux, under the title of Henry V.; but when this proclamation was made known, the multitude cried out, "It is not for Henry V. that we have fought. Down with the Bourbons!" The young prince was then ten years of age. As the king took leave of his guards, and received from them their banners, he said, "These standards, which I now take, this child will one day restore to you." This prince, now thirty-seven years in exile, is still regarded, by the old Bourbon party, as the legitimate sovereign of France, under the title of Henry V.

We must pass over the very interesting narration of the events which followed and led to the appointment of the Duke of Orleans to the throne. One brief item we will quote. Lafayette was the one who introduced Louis Philippe to assembled thousands, and openly embraced him in token of his confidence and support. He is said to have made this remark at that time to the Duke: "You know that I am a Republican, and that I regard the Constitution of the United States as the most perfect that has ever existed."

"I think as you do," replied Louis Philippe. "It is impossible to have passed two years in the United States, as I have done, and not be of that opinion. But do you think that in the present state of France, a republican government can be adopted?"

"No," said Lafayette; "that which is necessary for France now, is a throne surrounded by republican institutions; all must be republican."

For some time, the divided parties rendered it uncertain what form the government should assume. At length it was put to the vote—not throughout the empire, but in Paris, and the majority declared for Louis Philippe. Of this Allison writes thus:—

"And thus did a small minority, not exceeding a third of either Chamber, at the dictation of a clique in the anti-chambers of the Duke of Orleans, dispose of the crown to a stranger to the legitimate line, without either consulting the nation, or knowing what form of government is desired."—Allison, ii, 403.

In Dec., 1830, several members of the Bonaparte family held a secret meeting in Rome, a knowledge of which coming to the authorities of the Pontifical government, Louis Napoleon was ordered to immediately leave the Ecclesiastical States. Disregarding this command, he was arrested, and conveyed to the capital of the Grand Duchy of Tuscany, where his elder brother then resided with his father. Just as he arrived, the insurrection broke out there. The patriots appealed to the young princes to give their influence to their cause, and they joined the insurgents, struggling for the liberation of Italy from the Austrian yoke. But they were not able to cope with the power of Austria, and were obliged to retreat before their armies. The elder brother, Napoleon Louis, was taken ill from exhaustion, and died at Torli, March 27th, 1831.

MASONIC CHARITY.

"Free and accepted masons" claim that theirs is a charitable institution. Some forty years ago, when many of the lodges and chapters of Boston were broken up, and their "charters" surrendered, the records, or book of receipts and expenditures of old "Saint John's Lodge" came into my hands, to take extracts for publication, which I did. The records covered the space of nineteen years. During that nineteen years, there were entered on the accounts, which I examined, about two thousand dollars as receipts for "makings"; that is, for the making of entered appointus, then announcing to the "Fellow Craft," and last, exaltation to "the sublime degree of a master mason." The price was then five dollars for each degree.

On the side of expenditures for "refreshments," "breakage," etc., during the same nineteen years, was the same amount as the receipts, except forty dollars given in charity. There were several applications of the widows of masons during the period for aid, but the consideration of the matter was deferred to "the next lodge night," and were not afterwards brought up. The item in the expenditure "for breakage" frequently occurred, and I can best explain that, perhaps, by giving a few lines from one of their songs, which I found in a "Book of Masonic Songs," published by "Brother Isaiah Thomas," of Worcester, Mass. The song runs as follows:—

"The world is all in darkness,
About as they conjecture;
But little think a song and drink
Succeeds each mason's lecture.
Come, landlord, bring a hogshead,
And in a corner place it;
Till it rebound,
With hollow sound,
Each mason here will face it.
Fill to him
To the brim;
Let it round the table roll;
The Divine
Tells you, wine
Cheers the body and the soul."

The presumption is, that after the "song and drink," several bodies and souls become so "cheerful," that the landlord's cookery was not so well cared for as the "hogshead," and hence a charge for "breakage." D. C.

WATER BAPTISM.

BRO. GRANT:—I saw in the Crisis, Aug. 19th, 1868, an article on the above heading, from the pen of Sister B. Mathewson, which pleased me much. I am glad that there are writers east who speak out on this subject. I have for more than ten years preached that there was no promise of a baptism of the Holy Spirit this side of the day of Pentecost, and but one exception to that, which was when the Gentiles came in, which makes Paul's word true: "For by one Spirit are we all baptized into one body, whether we be Jew or Gentile." This is the "one baptism" that makes us a one people in Christ Jesus.

The apostle Peter was the leading speaker at Jerusalem, and he called on the multitude to "repent and be baptized, . . . and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost"; for the promise is to reach to all that "God shall call." Acts 2: 38. But to make it still more plain, that water baptism was a pre-requisite to the gift of the Holy Spirit, see Acts 8: 12-17. Hore Philip baptized men and women, and after this Peter and John went there and laid hands on them, that they might receive the Holy Ghost.

Paul found certain disciples, as stated in Acts 19: 1-7, who had received John's baptism, but had not heard about the Holy Ghost. They had been baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus, and when Paul had laid his hands on them they received the Holy Ghost.

THE ONE CHERISHED SIN.—Often from my window, on the seashore, I have observed a little boat at anchor. Day after day, month after month, it is seen at the same spot. The tides ebb and flow, yet it scarcely moves. While many a gallant vessel spreads its sails, and, catching the favoring breeze, has reached the haven, this little bark moves not from its accustomed spot. True it is that when the tide rises, it rises; and when it ebbs again, it sinks; but advances not. Why is this? It is fastened to the earth by one slender rope. There is the secret. A cord, scarcely visible, enchains it, and will not let it go. Now, stationary christians, see here your state, the state of thousands. Sabbaths come and go, but leave them as before. Ordinances come and go; ministers come and go; means, privileges, sermons, move them not—yes, they move them; a slight elevation by Sabbath tide, and again they sink; but no onward, heavenward movement. They are as remote as ever from the haven of rest; this Sabbath as the last, this year as the past. Some one sin enslaves, enchains the soul, and will not let it go. If it be so, make one desperate effort in the strength of God. Take the Bible as your chart, and Christ as your pilot, to steer you safely amid the dangerous rocks, and pray for the Spirit of all grace to fill your every sail and waft you onward over the ocean of life, to the heaven of everlasting life.—ED.

LIBERALITY.

"Farmer Johnson is a liberal man, is he not?" said a friend at a meeting to consider the expediency of building a new place of worship.

"I don't know," replied Bro. T.

"Don't know? why, have you not heard that he has offered us £100?"

"O yes," said Bro. T., "I have heard that, but I do not judge of liberality in that way."

"Not by what a man gives? then in what way can you judge of it?"

"Well, what would he have left after he had given it?"

"Have left! I cannot tell; but if I could, what has that to do with it?"

Every thing. I believe as Matthew Henry observes, that we cannot rightly judge of liberality by what a man gives, but by what he has left. The poor widow, who was said by Jesus to have cast more into the treasury than all the rich ones of the temple, was not judged by what she gave, for she only gave two mites; but, giving all, she had nothing left, and it was that which stamped liberality on the act."—Selected.

ANTIDOTE AGAINST TOBACCO SMOKE.—A few days since, a getleman found himself on the Orleans railway, in a carriage with six smokers, all puffing away. He said nothing until the train started, when he drew out of his pocket a vial, which he uncorked. Instantly the carriage was filled with a horrible odor, half ammoniacal and half sulphurous. All the smokers cried, "Do cork that vial; you will suffocate us!" He replied: "Beg your pardon, gentlemen; but as you did not ask my permission when you lighted your pipes, which suffocated me, I did not think it necessary to ask your permission when I resorted to the antidote against tobacco smoke." The smokers said nothing for five minutes, when they all gasped (they were really suffocated), "If we extinguish our pipes, will you cork that vial?" "Certainly." The pipes were at once put out.

A GREAT SINNER.—An old negro named Pete was very much troubled about his sins. Perceiving him one day with a very downcast look, his master asked him the cause. "O massa, I'm such a great sinner." "But, Pete," said his master, "you are foolish to take it so much to heart. You never see me troubled about my sins." "I know de reason massa," said Pete; when you go out duck-shooting and kill one duck, and wound anoder, don't you run after de wounded duck?" "Yes, Pete." And the master wondered what was coming next. "Well, massa, dat is de way with you and me; de debbil has got you sure; but as he am not sure of me, he chases dis chile all de time."

JEFFERSON'S OPINION OF WAR.—Never was so much false arithmetic employed on any subject, as that which has been employed to persuade nations that it is their interest to go to war. Were the money which it has cost to gain, at the close of a long war, a little town, or a little territory, the right to cut wood here, or to catch fish there, expended in improving what they already possess, in making roads, opening rivers, building ports, improving the arts, and finding employment for their idle poor, it would render them stronger, much wealthier and happier. This I hope will be our wisdom.—Jefferson's Virginian, page 250.

CHRISTMAS.

"Merry Christmas comes but once a year,
Then children welcome him with holy cheer;
E'en want may dry his tears in mirth,
And comfort crown the cottage hearth."

Christmas is a universal holiday with the children; the fairy day of their high anticipations. Sacred with them for the good things they hope Santa-Claus will bring from his variety store in New Amsterdam to fill their stockings, and the magic presents they expect the Christ-child to come laden with, from some fairy land, and hang on the Christmas-tree; and you hope to meet your young associates, and have a merry time; all of which is buite natural.

Dear children, are there not higher anticipations and heavenly thoughts connected with Christmas day, the anniversary of the birth-day of the Savior of the world? More than eighteen hundred years ago, Jesus was born in Bethlehem of Judea. On the same day there came wise men from the east to Jerusalem, inquiring for him that was born King of the Jews; and when they had found him, they worshiped him, and presented unto him gifts; hence the origin of Christmas gifts.

When you receive Christmas gifts, you will do well to let your thoughts dwell on the first Christmas the world ever new; the christian's day; the day in which the christian's hope apparently began. If there is one day of more importance, it is the first day of the week, when Jesus came forth from the tomb, bringing the keys of death with him; the day in which the christian's hope is consummated.

Was not the birth of Jesus good tidings of great joy to all people? We have the assurance of the angel, and also of a multitude of the heavenly host that it was.—Luke 2: 10-14. Oh! what sacred memories cluster around Christmas; doubly precious to those who have made friendship with Him who said, "Suffer little children to come unto me, and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of God." Do you not feel constrained to love and obey Him, who took little children in his arms and blessed them?

"Just as the twig is bent the tree's inclined."

Incline, then, your heart unto God, now, in your youth. Commit your ways unto the Lord. Let the precepts of the Holy Bible, be like apples of gold in pictures of silver.

Children, will you not try and see how happy you can make your parents and each other this Christmas day? Be good, and then no danger fear. Use kind words in a kind way, and if you would be very happy, begin by making others happy. Work for Jesus. Love every one that does not love you. Think evil of none expect yourself.

"Thou fairest star, thou brightest star,
In all night's diadem,
O, guide, me to my home afar,
Thou star of Bethlehem."

May you all be guided by the Star of Bethlehem, is the wish of your friend,

IDA AND ANNIE.

"You are so peculiar," said Ida Hall to Annie Thorn, "I hardly know what to think of you sometimes."

"Peculiar! what does that word really mean? Please give us the definition from Webster," said Annie, laughing.

"It is to be singular, odd, and different from any body else."

"I cannot see that I am so."

"Well, you are. Here I have walked several blocks this morning, to get you to go with us to-morrow to a pic-nic out of town, and you decline, saying you have promised to visit May Montier, and one or two other sick persons; then you dress so plain; of course you always look very neat. Now, Annie, you know you are an only daughter, and your father is as rich as mine, and you ought to dress far richer than you do. But you tell me you had rather give your money to the poor, and this I call very peculiar."

"So I had. You know the Bible tells us to visit the poor, the sick, and—"

"O, fie on the Bible; that will do to read when one is dying. I think you had better enjoy yourself while young, and leave that business for ministers' wives and old married women."

"To feed the hungry, clothe the naked, visit the sick, see the tears of gratitude follow one another down the pale cheek, and know that God approves of this act, is of more enjoyment to me than all the pleasures this world can give."

"This is all very good, Annie, but I cannot see how you can mingle in such unrefined society."

"Did you never think," said Annie, "that we were put in this world to do good to one another, and not for our own selfish motives?"

"I know I always think of myself first," said Ida.

"And last, too," said Annie.

"Well, I don't know but I do; but go on, for I am getting very much interested."

Now Ida was a very good-hearted girl, but her training had been very different from Annie's, her mother being of a worldly and showy disposition, while Annie's mother was a real christian.

"Did you ever think, Ida, of the life of Christ? there is nothing in all his life appeals to me like his humility, shown by voluntary contact with the poor and unrefined. He was rich, but became poor for our sakes. He had not where to lay his head, not even one of those poor fishing huts on the shore of Galilee to call his own."

"I have often thought," said Ida, "that he must have been very gentle and refined."

"Yes, he was gentle and kind to all; and, though they were ignorant and poor, he loved them all. He loved the rude fisherman Peter; and John you know was dressed in goat-skin, yet Christ loved him as well as if he had been dressed in fine broadcloth. He loved Martha and Mary, and loved to visit them. But when Christ comes to make up his jewels, all will be made right. The crooked will be made straight, the poor made rich, and all that put their trust in him will be refined and made like Christ. No more sickness, no more sorrow, no more death, no more parting; all will be happiness, joy, and peace. This is why I am willing to lose all the pleasures of this world, that I may gain that which never ends."

Ida listened with tears in her eyes, as the words fell slowly and deeply into her heart. Never before did she learn such a lesson. It had never before occurred to her that there was a higher favor, or condemnation, to gain than the applause and admiration of the most fashionable society in which she lived; but now the light had broken in upon her mind, and she resolved from that time onward to do all in her power to gain that better land.

"I would love to visit the poor and sick with you, some day, Annie, and see for myself."

"I should be happy to have you," said Annie.

In a few days from this, two girls, with well-filled baskets on their arms, enter the Eighth Avenue car, and ride until they come to G. street, where they enter a long court, ascend an old, rickety pair of stairs, enter a long, dark hall, up another flight of stairs, and knock at the door of a little room. They hear a faint voice say, "Come in," and there in one corner, upon a small but neat bed—made so by Annie—lay the wasted form of May Montier. One could see at a glance that she had seen better days, but circumstances had made her penniless; and though her time was short for this world, her trust was in God.

"I am so glad you have come," she said to Annie, while they were putting a few things upon a little stand by the bed-side from their basket. "I feared I should never see you again. I thought to-day would be my last day. O Annie," she said, while tears filled her eyes, "I can never pay you for all your kindness. God will pay you."

"Hush, hush," said Annie, "I have my pay already, and you will be better in a few days; then I will take you from this place."

But true, May's last day but one had come. "Will you pray," she said, "before you leave? for I feel I shall never hear you pray again; and I can die better with your prayer lingering in my ear."

Annie knelt by the bed-side, and such a prayer Ida never before heard, and she gave vent to her feelings in tears, which told more than words. As they bade her farewell, and went from street to street, Ida learned a lesson that day she never forgot. That night, as she laid her head upon her pillow, and thought of the hearts she had made glad that day, she was the happiest in all her life. Day after day, these two girls could be seen with well-filled baskets going on errands of mercy, and many a poor soul was made happy and better when Annie Thorn and Ida Hall entered their door. N. D. SISSY AND GOD.

"Are you not afraid, sissy, to go to bed in the dark?" one of the children asked little Emma Grey. "I no 'fraid," answered the little child, shaking her head, "I no 'fraid. God takes care of sissy, and he's bigger than dark; in dark night papa sleep, mamma sleep, all sleep; God take care of sissy all night; he never sleep."

"But God has so many people to take care of, maybe he will forget sissy."

The child shook her head, "God made sissy, —God never forget sissy; sissy forget God, but God not forget sissy."

"Will sissy forget God?" "Sissy sometimes not think of God; then she think, then look up in the sky, and try to see God."

"And does sissy see God?" "See God?" she asked, "see God? God here," she said, putting her little hand to her heart; "God in the sky, and God here; sissy loves God, and sissy don't want to be naughty."

Oh, yes, God will dwell in the hearts of little children, drawing their earliest affections to him, and teaching them by his Spirit to believe in him. The Son of God became a child, and when he grew up, took little children in his arms, to bless them, to convince our poor faith that his redeeming love embraces and overshadows them, and can touch the germ of life with its living warmth, while the little one is glad and trustful in its heavenly Friend. Let us not doubt God's love and care for the little one, but carefully train it for him, and a heavenly transplanting.

DON'T BE ASHAMED.

Don't be ashamed, my lad, if you have a patch on your elbow. It is no mark of disgrace. It speaks well of your industrious mother. For our part, we would rather see a dozen patches on your jacket, than hear one profane or vulgar word escape from you lips. No good boy will shun you because you can not dress as well as your companions; and, if a bad boy laughs at your appearance, say nothing, my lad, but walk on. We know many a rich and good man who was once as poor as you. There is our near neighbor, in particular, now one of our wealthy men, who told us a short time since, that, when a child, he was glad to receive cold food from his neighbor's table. Be good, my boy; and, if you are poor, you will be respected a great deal more than if you were the son of a rich man and addicted to bad habits.

— Never attempt to do anything that is not right. Just as sure as you do you will get into trouble. If you even suspect that anything is wrong, do it not till you are sure your suspicions are groundless.

☞ The Crisis is devoted to the exposition of all Bible truth; especially the doctrine of the immediate, personal coming and reign of Christ on the earth; holiness of heart; the unconscious state of the dead; their literal resurrection, and final destruction of the wicked.

For the World's Crisis.

CHRIST IS COMING.

Air.—"We are coming."

In this world of woe and sadness,
Lone pilgrims here we roam;
Looking for that day of gladness,
When we shall rest at home.
Chorus.—Christ is coming, Christ is coming,
Christ is coming, lonely pilgrim;
Christ is coming, Christ is coming,
To take his children home.

Here are trials that afflict us,
But we've a faithful friend,
Ever willing to protect us,
And guide unto the end.

All our trials and temptations
Will surely pass away,
And all our sad afflictions
Be changed for endless day.

Savior, come, thy saints are calling,
O reign forevermore;
Come and bring that happy morning,
When sighing will be o'er.

Yes, my Savior will in glory
Come, with the angel band,
Loud trumpets tell the story,—
'Tis Jesus now at hand.

Then we'll shout and sing his praises,
With all that happy throng,
When all those heavenly voices
Shall sing a new-made song.

INCREDIBILITY OF THE RESURRECTION.

A right view of faith in the resurrection seems very essential with Paul, and the only accusation that they could truthfully bring against him was that he "cried standing among them touching the resurrection of the dead." The Sadducees ignored it altogether, and tauntingly ask, "Whose wife shall she be, . . . for the seven had her to wife"? Jesus says, "Ye do err not knowing the Scriptures nor the power of God." It becomes us then, in order to avoid the dilemma of the Sadducees, (1) to understand the Scriptures; (2) the power of God. The resurrection cannot be wrought by natural causes; i. e., by the laws of nature; therefore it cannot be demonstrated by philosophy. What saith the Scriptures? To "know the Scriptures," we must learn what they say. To know the power of God, we must have some demonstrations of that power.

1st. We come to the Scriptures, expecting that by learning what they teach, we shall learn all about the resurrection, and by the demonstrations there given, we shall understand there is a power that can bring up the dead. Here let it be understood that we are talking about dead folks, not souls that have never died, neither particles of earth that have never lived to be created like the ones that have lived. The question is first asked by Job, and when under deep affliction, beset by the Devil and three very grave philosophers; the first trying to make him curse God by taking from him all he had in this life, and almost life itself; the others by taking from him all hope of future life. No wonder he should cry to God for help; and when no prospect appeared for him in this life, but that death must soon ensue, he is anxious to know if he can live again, and piteously asks, "If a man die, shall he live again?" We are not informed just how these friends answered, but probably like all other philosophers, that it was not supposable that these bodies would live again, but a sort of identity of some other particles would; but Job having sinned, must perish altogether. But this did not comfort Job, and when he got weary with these cavilers, that knew not the Scriptures nor the power of God, Job exclaims, "O that my words were now written! oh, that they were printed in a book! that they were graven with an iron pen and lead in the rock forever! for I know that my Redeemer liveth, and that he shall stand at the latter day upon the earth; and though after my skin, worms destroy this body, yet in my flesh shall I see God; whom I shall see for myself, and not another." This is Scripture, and may all those miserable comforters, such as Job had, learn them and speak right words, as God declared that Job did. Isaiah, it is said, was threatened with death, and to be sawn asunder, for supposing that his body would rise, but still he preached it. Hear him: "Thy dead man shall live, together with my dead body shall they rise." Philosophy would tell him that his body would pass off into other bodies, and vegetation, and we could not suppose that the particles that formed his body would be gathered, but some like them, and the proportion and identity alone preserved. No, says the sweet singer of Israel, "my dead body" shall rise. "Awake and sing ye that dwell in dust." This is Scripture. The Sadducees did not know it; to them the resurrection was incredible.

Mothers were in affliction in the days of Herod. Their babes were killed, and they refused to be comforted; but there was a Scripture for them; and that weeping, sympathetic prophet Jeremiah says, "Refrain thy voice from weeping, and thine eyes from tears; for . . . there is hope in thine end, . . . that thy children shall come again from the land of the enemy." But what would constitute children? Would not an identical formation of similar substance be all that could be expected? No. Unless they get back from the dust those children that they had in sorrow brought forth, and in tenderness nursed, and folded to their bosom, and sorrowed for when dead; then were these words spoken in vain; then were these words false. To call something their children that had never been born of them would be but mockery. "Miserable comforters"!

No, no, mothers! Thy children, those you brought forth, shall come. This is Scripture. People err by not knowing it, nor the power of God. Resurrection from *Re*again, and surgere to rise, means to re-erect that which has fallen, and with vigor or life, and is not properly applied to inanimate substance.

Having learned what the Scriptures teach concerning the resurrection of the dead, we desire knowledge of the power. If it is said that God has the power, and we have faith in it, that is enough; we answer, faith is not knowledge always without demonstration. Has the power of God been demonstrated in this matter, so that we may not only know the Scriptures, but the power of God? A few cases in Old Testament times are recorded; but the full development of this power was reserved for "the fullness of times," when God should send forth his Son made of a woman to redeem men. He came to save men, and to raise them up "at the last day." The time is come, said Christ, that "the dead shall hear the voice of the Son of God; and they that hear shall live." Jairus' daughter heard and lived; the widow's son heard and lived; Lazarus heard and lived. But says he, "Marvel not at this; for the hour is coming in the which all that are in the graves shall hear his voice and shall come forth; they that have done good unto the resurrection of life, and they that have done evil unto the resurrection of damnation." Till Christ was raised all was temporal life. He must be the first fruits of the eternal life, and so God raised him up to die no more, and as he said to John, "I am he that was dead." This asserts individuality as well as identity; and to make the thing positive, and place it beyond doubt or cavil, he says, "Handle me, and see; for a spirit," or an angel, "hath not flesh and bones, as ye see me have." "It is I myself"; "reach hither thy hand, and thrust it into my side"; and put your fingers into the prints of the nails, "and be not faithless, but believing." Here we have the matter demonstrated, and we need not be ignorant of the Scriptures, or the power of God.

But, says the objector, these had not corrupted or turned to dust, therefore the thing is not fully demonstrated. But God will have us without excuse, so he raiseth up Lazarus after he was corrupted. "But he had not been scattered to the winds of heaven, or to the depths of the sea." No, but he got him from corruption; so he has power to get them four days after they are dead. "Yes, but after they are all gone into dust, vegetation, and other creatures, it is 'incredible.'" Let us see. "And many bodies of the saints which slept arose, and came out of the graves, ... and appeared unto many." Had not these returned to dust? This is Scripture, and demonstrates the power of God to fulfill his promise. Here were the first fruits; the harvest must be just as literal, tangible, and individual, or it is not a resurrection of the dead. Job believed and said, "whom I shall see for myself, . . . and not another." Jesus says, "It is I myself." Isaiah says, "Thine eyes shall see the king in his beauty." But supposing a bone or leg is in California, and an arm in England? "And the bones came together, bone to his bone," and "sinews and the flesh came upon them, and the skin covered them," and they lived. Ezk. 37. This looks like God. It will not make his back ache to scrape earth and sea to get the dead. He speaks and it is done in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, and the dead are raised. Blessed be God, this brings comfort, and so says Paul, "Comfort one another with these words." Just as though God would ransack the sea to bring up the dead, when there is enough of the same material in the earth to make up men just like them, and give them a perfect identity. God grant that none of the saints are in the sea, if that be the case; if so, they are lost.

But "what saith the Scriptures"? "The sea gave up the dead which were in it; and death and hades delivered up the dead which were in them, and they were judged, every man according to their works." What, make a man just like me out of matter that never entered into my composition, and judge and reward it instead of me, who have suffered with him? Miserable comforters! There is now a process for embalming, invented by Clark & Co., New York, known as Nekrosozoic process, by which decomposition is at once arrested in all its parts, and the corpse looks precisely as it did just after life departed. "Bodies that had been thirteen months embalmed were dissected in New York (so says the Rochester Union), in the presence of the most eminent physicians, surgeons and chemists, and found to be as perfect as when first embalmed; . . the flesh soft and flexible, and no rigidity in the muscles." It is supposed that such a body might be raised, and yet it is thought that another body just like that, made up of other matter, would be equally the same, and answer all purposes of the resurrection of the embalmed body, giving it the same mind.

If ever I should die, and this mode of embalming alone would give me myself again, as Job says, I do pray that my friends will have me embalmed; for I do want to live for myself, and not another. There is a philosophy that teaches that the essential particles of which man is composed—the handful of dust, after the gasses and fluids are passed off—is not nutritious, and does not help form other bodies of beasts or men; but is distinct, though it may pass through other bodies; and this seems to be in harmony with Paul's teaching, for he says, "All flesh is not the same flesh; but there is one kind of flesh of men, another flesh of beasts, another of fishes, and another of birds." As these are all distinct, one from the other, may it not be possible that there is an individual distinctiveness; and is not this asserted in the text, "To every seed his own body. It is sown in corruption; it is raised in incorruption"; the same it that is sown is raised. This was the faith of David, and in view of which he exclaims, "How precious also are thy thoughts unto me, O God! how great is the sum of them." "Thou knowest my down sitting, and mine uprising." Thou "art acquainted with all my ways. There is not a word in my tongue, but, lo, O Lord, thou knowest it altogether. Such knowledge is too wonderful for me; it is high, I cannot attain unto it. Whither shall I go from thy spirit? or whither shall I flee from thy presence? If I take the wings of the morning, and dwell in the uttermost parts of the sea; even there shall thy hand lead me, and thy right hand shall hold me." "If I ascend up into heaven, thou art there; if I make my bed in (sheol) the grave, behold, thou art there." "I will praise thee, for I am fearfully and wonderfully made; marvelous are thy works, and that my soul knoweth right well. My substance was not hid from thee, when I was made in secret, and curiously wrought in the lowest parts of the earth. Thine eye did see my substance, yet being unperfect, and in thy book all my members were written, which in continuance were fashioned, when as yet there were none of them." Ps. 139.

These were precious thoughts to David, and they are very precious to me. If God recognizes, and records our members ere there are formed; if he regards them when they are formed, so that the very hairs of our head are all numbered, and is watchful over us in the grave, as he was of Moses and of Christ, can we doubt that he that raised up Christ from the dead, will "also quicken" our "mortal bodies by his Spirit that dwelleth in" us? Even change these vile bodies, and fashion them like "his glorious body"? If that that dies rises not, then there is no resurrection of the dead; then they that are fallen asleep "are perished." "Let us eat and drink, for to-morrow we die." To say that something lives that has never lived; or that something will rise that has never suffered or died, is but mocking us in our warfare, and deeply saddening those hearts that God has bid us comfort. May the Lord help us to feed the flock of God with "the sincere milk of the word, that" they "may grow thereby," is the prayer of yours in hope, H. Pratt.

MATERIALISM.—ITS DEFENSE.

There seems to be all abroad a great outcry against "Materialism" in our day; and this is destined to increase the more and more, as "Spiritualism" abounds. The Christian church at large, having greatly departed from the "faith once delivered unto the saints," and left the old landmarks of truth, and fallen almost unconsciously into the lap and embraces of "Spiritualism," now and then arouses from her spiritual reverie, alarmed at its presence in her midst, and lifts up her note of warning throughout all her ranks, that something effectual must be done to stay its progress.

What, then, is "Materialism"? Is it deserving of christian censure and public odium? Let us "prove all things," and "hold fast that which is good." Let us, like the noble Bereans, search "the Scriptures daily," to see if its doctrines be true or false. Let us "in understanding be men."

Materialism in the past, against which the church has uttered her protest and been so justly arrayed, is set forth in the following graphic language of the late Dr. Harris, in his "Posthumous Works," pp. 297–301. He says:—

"According to it, the world may have been indebted for its origin to the will of God; but every thing ever since has proceeded according to law and natural development. According to it, all that we behold is only the result of an impulse given far back in eternity, by a Being ever since far off in space. According to it, creation is now independent of its Creator. It denies his providential government, as if, forsooth, we could conceive of a self-sustained universe, any more than we can of a self-originated creation. It pleads the regularity of nature as a proof that all is resolvable into law; as if, forsooth, law had any meaning apart from mind; or as if God would govern in any way except by law. It represents the Omniscient as if he saw nothing, the Omnipotent as doing nothing, the Omnipresent as universally absent; the All-Sufficient as the author of a universe which excludes his own activity."

"Pantheism," he says, "by its creed goes to the opposite extreme. It professes to find God everywhere. Every sound is his voice, not poetically, but literally; every object is an aspect of him, not sentimentally, but really; every change is but his substance entering into a new relation. Mind and matter in all their boundless varieties are but a modification of him. Materialism gives us a universe without a God—this, the universe itself is God. The Scriptures declare: 'In Him we live, and move, and have our being.' No, says Pantheism; we are him—portions of his very essence. And multitudes are smitten with the pretended sublimity of the notion. It even exceeds the first promise of the tempter: Ye 'shall be as gods,' and assumes that they are gods. We even outstrip Polytheism and Materialism in the career of error. Strictly speaking, it outstrips both these former errors in denying to God any true personal existence."

Thus does Dr. Harris clearly set forth these twin errors, against which the church of God has raised her voice, and most justly, in the past: "Comely are the apples that spring from the dead sea's cursed shore; but within are they dust and ashes, and the hand that plucked them shall rue it."

But what is the Materialism of to-day, against which we are forewarned, and admonished to beware? Strange as it may appear, the Scriptural promises of the Most High, which constitute the only and "blessed hope" of the church of God, have come to be regarded, and called "Materialism"; and the advocates of a literal interpretation of these "exceeding great and precious promises," Materialists. Thus a name, in bad repute from its past association with error, has been given to the truth and its advocates in our age, to bring both into disfavor, reproach, and scorn. It is the old cry of "mad dog" revived, to alarm the people needlessly, and to their disadvantage. It is dressing up the beautiful form of truth, symmetrical and charming in the extreme, in its own native loveliness, with the hideous and unseemly costume of falsehood, to frighten "children in understanding," and make them think that they see a Bug-a-boo! But men of understanding know and discover the deception, and shall expose the mask; and those who hope to conceal the truth of God by an unseemly caricature, shall have "their folly" made "manifest unto all men" in due time. Let us not be alarmed; let us approach and see what this "Materialism" is in reality.

1. "Materialism" believes and maintains the doctrine of this Scripture: "God is." Heb. 11:6. That is, Materialism claims that God exists in identity, and in person; and is a personal being; as he says, "I AM." But says the critic, Jesus declares, "God is a spirit." John 4:24. Yes, and furthermore, he adds, "They that worship him must worship him in spirit and in truth." What do you understand by this clause of the same verse? That we must resolve ourselves into a mere spiritualistic state, and become mere "spirit" in order to worship God acceptably? Who will maintain the absurdity? What, then, are we to understand by the text, "God is a spirit," etc., more than this,—that intelligence is an attribute of the Divine Being, and that he seeks and demands intelligent and truthful worship. Who will reason, then, that God is mere intelligence, and thus make a mere attribute of his being, God himself. Away with such ignorance and stupidity of thought in the reading of the word of God, lest we sin against this attribute of the being with whom we have to do, and merit the rebuke of our Lord and Master, as did the Samaritans, through the woman at the well in Samaria: "Ye worship ye know not what."—John 4:22.

That God is a personal, material being, with organism of shape and parts, is evident from the whole tenor of the Scriptures. The following Scripture is plain: "Let us make man in our image, after our likeness."—Gen. 1:26. This was true in the creation of the "first man," as "the Son of God" (Luke 3:38), and prophetic of the final glorification of the second man (Heb. 1:3), in whom the work is complete in moral, intellectual, and physical glory. The same language of Gen. 1:26, and 5:1, is used as descriptive of Adam's son: "Adam . . . . begat a son in his own likeness, after his image." Gen. 5:3. Hence we reason from this Scripture that as Adam resembled his Maker in conformation, so did Adam's son resemble him in physical organism. That "the moral image of God" alone constituted this "likeness" of Gen. 1:26, as is mantained, can not be true; for subsequent to man's fall, the same "image" is referred to in the following Scripture: "Whoso sheddeth man's blood, by man shall his blood be shed; for in the image of God made he man" (Gen. 9:6); thus teaching us that man, after his moral fall, retained the "image of God," and that the murder of a man becomes the most heinous of crimes, inasmuch as the murderer strikes at the very image of his Maker.

Again, the promise is given that "the pure in heart . . . . shall see God."—Matt. 5:8. This promise is given by Jesus Christ himself, and refers to the Father, of whom it is written, "No man hath seen God at any time."—John 1:18. How can we see God if he has no personal form or shape? And how can we see his face (Rev. 22:4), if he has no face, or countenance, or physiognomy, to see and behold, study and enjoy?

The Scriptures teach, too, that God is personally resident somewhere in the universe; and not the visionary idea that he is everywhere alike, and no where in particular. He is ever represented as in "heaven," "the heavens," "the heaven of heavens," "the high and holy place"; and Jesus has taught the church to pray thus: "Our Father, which art in heaven." Why has he thus instructed us to address his Father and our Father, his God and our God, if he in person is not there? And why does he affirm that he "came down from heaven," "from the Father," and was to "ascend up where he was before," and "go to the Father," if his Father was not resident in person somewhere in the universe, or if he was equally everywhere in infinite and boundless space?

Dr. Dick, after referring to the grand central sun of the universe, discovered through modern science, thus discourses:—"Here the grandeur and glory of the Deity, of his physical and moral perfection, and the immensity of his empire, may strike the mind with more effulgence, and excite more elevated emotions of admiration and rapture, than in any other province of universal nature. In fine, this vast and splendid central universe may constitute that august mansion referred to in Scripture under the designation of the 'throne of the Eternal,' 'the heaven of heavens,' 'the high and holy place,' where God dwells in the light that is inaccessible and full of glory."

Spiritism makes God mere spirit, as do the heathen who have not the "oracles of God," and who are filled with wild fancies and imaginings concerning God and the future state. "The spiritual God of Plato resembled an idea rather than a substance," says Gibbon. And is not this the true conception of many professed orthodox divines, writers, and churches? Dr. Huntington, one of the ablest divines and writers of the age, says: "God absolute has no corporality, no shape or lineament," etc. What is he, then? If he has no tangible, actual, palpable substance of some kind, he is nothing, a myth, and without existence. Mohammed made God mere "light," glorious and inapproachable. Modern Spiritualists assert that "God is electricity, is motion and light." And says Dr. Dick, "The image picture presented to the minds of the christian world is a splendid chaotic mass, a dazzling meteor." What is the difference in all these views of the living God, the maker and sovereign ruler of all things? It is mistaking the government of the divine being for God himself, "who . . . dwelleth "in the light which no man can approach unto." 1 Tim. 6:16.

Materialists, I think, having a knowledge of the true God, can say with Jesus, our Savior and Lord, "We know what we worship; for salvation is of the Jews." To them were given the Scriptures to make wise; and of them came the Redeemer of men, who has revealed his Father unto us. We worship a real, personal, great and good Being, whom we expect, if faithful to his grace, one day to see face to face; even our Heavenly Father; not a mere phantom, a non-entity. We worship no such God; but we worship "the living God." O. R. Fassett.

HOLINESS.

"Holiness, without which no man shall see the Lord."—Heb. 12:14.

I offer you this text as a subject for self-inquiry. It is a question that concerns all ranks and conditions of men. Some are rich, and some are poor; some learned, and some unlearned; some masters, and some servants; but there is no rank or condition in life, in which a man ought not to be holy. Reader, are you? Holiness is the habit of being of one mind with God, according as we find his mind described in Scripture. It is the habit of agreeing in God's judgment; hating what he hates, loving what he loves, and measuring everything in this world by the standard of his word. He who most entirely agrees with God, is the most holy man. A holy man will endeavor to shun every known sin, and keep every known commandment.

Time would fail me if I were to mention all the things which go to make up holiness of character; still I must ask you to bear with me while I name a few things which come uppermost in my thoughts. The days in which we live make me anxious that there should be no mistake upon this subject. How can we know whether we are holy, unless we have a clear view of what constitutes holiness? A holy man will follow after meekness, long-suffering, gentleness, kind temper, and government of his tongue. He will bear much, forbear much, overlook much, and be slow to talk of standing on his rights.

Again, a holy man will follow after temperance, and self-denial; he will labor to mortify the desires of his body; to crucify his flesh with its affections and lusts; to curb his passions; to restrain his carnal inclinations, lest at any time they break loose. O what a word is that of the Lord Jesus to the apostles, "Take heed to yourselves, lest at any time your hearts be overcharged with surfeiting, and drunkenness, and cares of this life, and so that day come upon you unawares." Luke 21:34. Wisdom out of Christ is damning folly. Righteousness out of Christ is guilt and condemnation. Sanctification out of Christ is filth and sin. Redemption out of Christ is bondage and slavery. Would you be holy, would you be partakers of the divine nature, then go to Christ. Wait for nothing, wait for nobody. Linger not, think not to make yourself ready; go and say to him in the words of that beautiful hymn—

"Nothing in my hand I bring,
Simply to the cross I cling;
Naked, flee to thee for dress,
Helpless, look to thee for grace."

CHURCH ORDER.

After what form churches should be organized is a question of interest with those looking for the Lord. That some system is needed all are led to feel, to a greater or less extent. But we as a people have educated ourselves to be startled at the word organization. It may be said, I came out from human organization, and if I undertake to "build the things I once destroyed, I make myself a transgressor." Hence, as the result of this wrong education and this fear and dread of system we exist in fragments; whereas, we should be like a well disciplined army, or a building fitly framed by joints and bands, which every part supplieth. Church organization (or a church order, which to some minds would be a term less objectionable) grows out of two considerations:

1. Something to be done.
2. The best method of doing it.

That there is a work of righteousness in this fallen world, at the head of which stands the adorable Redeemer, and for the accomplishment of which Christ hath taken into commission with himself his church, all must see who are at all conversant with the Scriptures. But the best method of executing this work is the question. I think order, and systematized action are needed in the church as well as in other things. An army disorganized is in no condition to operate against a hostile foe. They are demoralized. They are incompetent for the work before them. In order for the mixed multitude to operate successfully against an enemy, order must be brought out of confusion. The army must be organized into companies, regiments, brigades, and divisions. So in planting a State. The first consideration to secure success is order.

All the order we see exemplified in the human character and conduct has been copied from the Divine; so it may be said truthfully "Order is heaven's first law." Order is seen in the planetary system and in the revolutions of the seasons. Order is one the most observable things in vegetable, mineral, and animal kingdoms. We also see one of the most striking exhibitions of divine order in the great and glorious plan of redemption.

First, the promise, and from that in perfect order the different stages of progressive development are seen, until the whole work is represented as a temple completed by the Head Stone being brought forward with shoutings of grace, grace unto it.

From the foregoing considerations, none will deny the propriety of Christ's church, which is taken into company with himself in carring on the work of redemption ("we are workers together with God"), as we shall be in the execution of the work of judgment, ("Know ye not that the saints shall judge the world"), adopting order and rule; but the great question comes home again, What shall that rule and order be? Every loyal subject of the grace of God will say, Bible rule and Bible order. Yes, and let all the people say Amen. But we have now reached the real question to be discussed, which is this: Does the New Testament, as to its elements of church government, deal in principles or in detailed actions; or in other words, is it a code of laws of action, or a code of principles of action. I claim for it a code of principles, never to be varied from under any consideration whatever. It is in all cases the principle we are to seek to understand, and labor to carry out. As to the best mode of carrying out the principles of the New Testament, it may be to some extent discretionary, and in the exercise of such discretionary power, we have need to seek for that "wisdom which cometh down from above."

Forms or modes of action may be suited to circumstances and in this there may be variations, and at the same time no departure from right principle. For example, take our Lord's sermon on the mount; in this we have an embodiment of cardinal principles, suited to all circumstances; but subject somewhat to contingencies in their practical workings. So with the prayer that Jesus taught his disciples to pray, "when thou prayest say," etc. Now shall we conclude that we are always to confine ourselves to the same form of words? Of course not. If so we are all common transgressors; for it is a rare thing to hear the Lord's prayer repeated in the assembly of the saints, even where there is much praying; but where do you ever hear one pray in the spirit, but what always breathes fully the sentiment of that prayer. Again, take the commission, "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel," together with the last crowning message of truth with which this world will ever be favored,—"This gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations." Now here again is brought out a principle of action, and it is this: the widest extention of "the gospel of the kingdom" as the last and mightiest exertion of the church for the benefit of mankind. But while our Lord makes plain the principle of action, he did not at the same time mention in detail the mode by which this should be accomplished. That is discretionary to quite an extent. Hence we have many things, such as religious periodicals, tract societies, missionary institutions, book concerns, and the like; all of which are designed to contribute something to the accomplishment of this great object; though not one of them is specially named in the Bible in any book, chapter or verse. The earnest zeal manifested on the part of our people to push forward these religious and benevolent enterprises is virtually an indorsement of what we have suggested upon this subject, viz., that prudentialism is not only allowable, but needful. Yet, when we come to the subject of church organization, the enrollment of names, etc., they say, Show us an example in the Scriptures and I am with you. But this we cannot do in so many words, any more than we could give you in Scripture language, an example for a camp-meeting, or the papers, called World's Crisis, The Christian, or the Voice of the West; yet none will deny the utility of all of these in carrying out some very important principles, very plainly stated in the Bible. If we realize the necessity of adopting prudential measures, in order to carry out the great principles of action in extending the knowledge of God, by publishing papers and tracts, and sustaining evangelists, why not, if it will facilitate the working of the plain Scripture principle of social embodiment, have our names enrolled under a sacred agrement to live as the grace of God teaches, while we wait for the mercy of our Lord Jesus Christ, unto eternal life.

I am satisfied in my own mind, could the various societies of Advent people see the importance of a step like this, it would give stability and permanence to the great cause of our coming King, in many places, where now we see the flock of God scattered and distracted.

If we are always to act o na plain principle, and we are left to select the best means circumstances surrounding us will allow, to carry out the principle; then it seems to me there is nothing presumptious in brethren coming together, and as a matter of convenience enrolling their names as a church of Christ. At the present time, I think it a prudential and necessary measure in the most of places. There may be places where such action would add nothing to the interests of the cause, but in my judgment, such places are few. Brethren, let us have right system, which will help and not embarras, the action of a principle. If we are meek God will guide us in judgment. The apostle Paul said he, as a wise master builder, had laid the foundation and another buildeth thereon, but let every one take heed how he buildeth. This shows that it is just as right to build, as it is to lay the foundation; but we are exhorted to take heed how. There is a right way attended with a glorious reward; and there is a wrong way, the results of which will be loss. The right way is to comprehend the proper principle of action, and carry it into practical effect. The wrong way is to have so much system as to become oppressive, intolerant, and dogmatical; or by ignoring all system, and throwing aside every safeguard, to throw open the doors to a promiscuous multitude, who will turn the grace of God into lasciviousness. Many, I am aware, are fearful that should the people called Adventists adopt a system of church organization they would grow into a sect, separate and distinct from other sects; but they, by such means, would become no more an independent sect than they are already; for generally they have either come out from other sects, or been thrust out; so that already, in a separate capacity, they claim the right to establish meetings, administer the ordinances, and ordain ministers; and how could they be any more a sect if they adopt order and system?

I have been induced to offer these suggestions through the Crisis. I trust I am understood by the reader. My only motive is to stir the pure midned to a course which will contribute something to the stability of the cause of Christ. A. Ross.

SPIRITUAL RESURRECTION.

Of all the absurdities arising from spiritual interpretations of the Scriptures, none are more glaring than that of a spiritual resurrection. It is said, "The resurrection is a rising from the grave of spiritual darkness and ignorance to the light and knowledge of spiritual regeneration." Is it? Well let us see how this will fit the ears of the righteous. They have already experienced this kind of resurrection; yet they are promised another. What will the next one be? Is it quite consistent to talk of raising a live mass to life?

Let us now see if it will fit the ears of the wicked any better. They are in a condition which may be fitly compared to death, and bringing them out of that condition might be compared to a resurrection; but the Bible accounts of the resurrection no where representthem as being any better, or in any way morally different after the resurrection from what they were before. They "shall come forth to the resurrection of damnation," (or condemnation). They shall awake "to shame and everlasting contempt," is the language of the Bible concerning them. Most of the fallacious theories with which poor mortals deceive themselves have some specious point to commend them; but this theory does not fit anywhere. It will not apply to the righteous or the wicked. It is loose at both ends, and does not hold together in the middle. Now when we turn to our standard lexicographers, and find the definition of the word resurrection to be, the coming to life of one that was dead; and to our Bibles and find that a resurrection is promised to the just and the unjust, we had better believe it, all of it, and then we shall have a theory of the resurrection by which we can abide.

DUTY OF CHRISTIANS.

The privilege of voting, and the duty of fighting are conjoined. He who votes for magistrates binds himself to fight for them also; for in voting, he agrees to abide by and conform to the magistracy. They may not elect the person he chooses, or enact the laws which he approves; but yet the compact is that the will of the majority shall be the law of the whole. As the Devil always has a majority in every government in this world, no christian can consistently enter into a compact to abide this pleasure; hence he should not vote. The ballot box and the cartridge box are united. Bullets enforce what ballots express. Men who cannot fight to the bitter end have no business to vote for rulers who must fight or perish. One vote makes a foreigner a citizen of this country, and renders him liable to military duty. Christians are pilgrims and strangers on the earth. "Jerusalem which is above is free, and is the mother of us all." Gal. 4:26. Our citizenship is "in heaven from whence also we look for the Savior, the Lord Jesus Christ." Phil. 3:20. We can not be citizens of two countries at once. We cannot be loyal subjects of two opposing governments. We cannot consistently make "lower law," and then obey "higher law". The will of the majority makes "lower law," the voice of God makes "higher law." Can we swear to obey the one without swearing to disobey the other? "But," says the objector, "if bad men control the government, the world will be ruined." Would it be any worse than it is? Bad men do control every government under heaven, and they will, and good men are, and always have been in the unpopular minority. Plenty of church members vote the worst tickets, and make the worst laws. No important elections are carried without bribery, bullying, and rascality on both sides. To be honest is to be defeated. Can christians meddle with such abominations? All foreigners have a right to protection while obedient to the laws of the country where they sojourn; though they are not citizens, and have no vote. Governments have no right to oppress strangers; and all that christians ask of them is, that governments will take care of their own ruffians and rowdies, and oblige those who make the laws to obey them. F. P. Ide.

Mount Hope, Conn.

— The prevalence of hypocrisy is a good proof of the value of christianity. What good man thinks of playing the hypocrite and pretending wickedness? But thousands try to ape the saint. Who thinks of counterfeiting notes on a broken bank? A bank whose notes are often counterfeited, must be known as a specie-paying concern.

The World's Crisis
AND SECOND ADVENT MESSENGER.

Boston, Wednesday, Dec. 23, 1868.

☞ Take Notice!

All subscriptions for the Crisis are payable IN ADVANCE, at the rate of $2.50 a year.

☞ Please Remember!

All remittances to this office, in the form of drafts, bank-checks and postal money-orders, should be made payable to the BUSINESS AGENT, GEO. T. ADAMS.

☞ Money Orders.

Our correspondents should remember that if they send money orders in a letter which contains the name of the sender, and the name of the person to whom the order is payable, there is NO SAFETY for their money. Any person may draw the amount named in the order, if these names are given. Neither is it safe to send us your names in advance. Somebody may open the letter, get the names, and then wait till the order comes, and get that too.

Send on the order, not writing a word; make it payable to GEO. T. ADAMS, directing it to MILES GRANT, or World's Crisis. Then, in two or three days, write in the usual way, stating that you have sent the order, and what you wish done with the money obtained on the same, and it will be entirely safe. In the second communication be sure to give us YOUR NAME AND POST OFFICE ADDRESS. AG'T.

PHENIX DISCUSSSON.

As the Phenix discussion progressed it increased in interest. It is said the town was never stirred up so before upon theological matters. Bibles long neglected were carefully examined; ministers searched the Scriptures, lexicons and commentaries with renewed zeal, to see if these things were as we affirmed. The Dr. labored hard to sustain his positions, and made strong assertions; but found it much easier to assert the immortality of the soul than to produce any Bible proof of his doctrine. The very passage on which he relied most—Matt. 10: 28—proved beyond all controversy that the soul is not immortal; for what is immortal is not susceptible of destruction. This the Dr. admitted. He was urged to produce one passage that taught the immortality of the soul; but utterly failed in the attempt, because there is no such passage in the Bible.

The following are some of his unproved assertions:—"Moses has been in the spirit-world some one thousand and four hundred years." "Man has an immortal principle." "Lazarus was not raised from the dead." "The soul is the personal identity." "Can't resurrect what has no consciousness. "The mind is never deranged." "The mind never sleeps."

The following are some of his admissions: "The dog has a mind." "What is immortal cannot be destroyed." "Moses was absolutely dead." "When pressure on the brain stops thought, the person will never think again till the pressure is removed."

The theology of the Dr. looked very rickety when compared with the Scriptures. We felt sad to see such noble talents devoted to the defense of such palpable errors. He remarked that his body after death was of no more value than his "old shoes;" and labored hard to show that the resurrection of the dead was impossible; using the same arguments as are employed by the Spiritualists; and still claimed to believe in the resurrection of the dead. We pressed him hard, to answer the question —"dead what?" He had spent much time to show the body could not be raised from the dead; and had asserted that the soul never dies. To this we replied, what does not die cannot be raised from the dead; and if, as he affirms, "the soul never dies," where the Bible says, "why should it be thought a thing incredible with you that God should raise the dead," (Acts 26: 8,) it can have no reference to something that never dies; and if the dead man in the grave is never raised, as claimed by the Dr., then, when he says he believes in the resurrection of the dead, what does he mean? Echo answers—"What does he mean?"

The last evening of the debate, the Dr. insisted upon taking a vote on the question, whether it had been proved that man is not possessed of an immortal soul in this life. We objected on the ground that such a vote would tend to stir up strife in the community, remarking that so far as we were personally concerned, we should be pleased to have the vote taken. The Dr. was persistent, and put the question; when to his surprise about four to one voted that we had sustained the position that the Scriptures do not teach that man has an immortal soul, that lives on in a conscious state after the death of the body.

After he saw how a large number voted in our favor, he seemed quite uneasy and irritated, and said he thought they did not understand the question, and proposed to put it again. The Methodist minister arose and objected, but the Dr. became more in earnest, and put the question again, and, to his greater surprise, obtained the same results as before.

It was currently reported that popular theology never before had such a shaking in that place. We trust much good will result from the discussion. The lovers of the "blessed hope" were joyful in the Lord, and praised him for his great help in the defense of his word.

The Dr. found it very difficult to advocate the doctrine of eternal torment for the wicked. We discussed this question the last two evenings, having spent four in the examination of the doctrine of the immortality of the soul. It appeared that the Dr. thought if he could prove that the Bible taught the doctrine of eternal punishment, that he had gained his case. We replied that we had not a doubt but that the punishment would be eternal; but it would be eternal death, and not eternal life in misery.

Our friends were delighted with the results of the discussion, and are satisfied that much good will arise from the debate. The Bible has become a new book to many. They can now read and understand what was before very blind and obscure. They now take pleasure in perusing its sacred truths that had been hidden by the fables taught in these last days. There is an earnest conflict between truth and error throughout the country. While the advocates of truth should manifest the meekness of the dove, they should not lack the boldness of the lion, in connection with unlimited perseverance and firmness. Remember Lot's wife. Make no provision for a retreat. Conquer or die. Never leave the battle field. Our King will lead to sure victory if we are only true to our high calling. "In the name of God we will set up our banners."

We spent the Sabbath, Dec. 13th, in the chapel at River Point, about a mile and a half from Phenix. We had a most excellent meeting. At the close of the morning sermon we had some fifty testimonies in about twenty minutes. The Spirit of the Lord rested upon us, and we felt it was good to be there. The house was very much crowded, and many had to stand up in the afternoon. It was our birthday, and a happy one in the Lord.

CHRISTMAS PRESENT.

Bro. E. C. Denning, East Cleaveland, Ohio, Dec. 2d, writes:—"The Crisis was sent to me this year as a Christmas present, and it has been a great comfort and consolation to me."

Are there not many who will make the Crisis a Christmas or New Year's gift to some poor Bro. or Sr.? One young man last year gave the money to pay for sending "our paper" to eight poor persons, who had not received the paper before; and informs us he intends to give it to twelve this year. He sent us the money last year, requesting us to hunt up eight of the worthy poor, and send them the paper. This was a pleasant task. Will not many, who have the means, help gladden the hearts of Jesus' poor disciples, by sending them the paper free the coming year?

BE PARTICULAR.

We have often requested those who write for the Crisis to write their own names, and all others, in a very plain manner; but we find it necessary to give "line upon line" on this point; and then many fail to comply with our request. We can guess out words in composition, by the sense; but when we come to names of persons and places, our guess-work fails to be accurate; hence we sometimes guess wrong; and then we are blamed for our blunders and mistakes. The other day we received an appointment, dated, as was thought, the 27th of the month. Several examined the figures, and all decided it must be the 27th, but after it was published, we received a note complaining that we made the preacher much trouble by our mistake; and informing us it should have been printed the 12th instead of the 27th. We can only say we did the best we knew how.

In the Crisis of Dec. 2nd, we published an extract from a letter from Bro. Chas. Lowe, giving some good news of his reception of the truth in So. Paris, Me.; and of his baptism at Rochester, N. H. We are now informed that it should have read South Barry, N. Y. and Rochester, N. Y. We spent some time in trying to make out the writing. The best we could make out of the first name was South Paris. The State was not given. We knew of a South Paris in Me. The other name was plainly written Rochester, but no State was named. We then reasoned as follows: If he was in Maine when he received the truth, it is more probable that he was in Rochester, N. H., at his baptism, than in Rochester, N. Y. We are glad to have the privilege of making it right.

We say again, please be particular, and write all names very plainly.

SPIRIT TEACHING.

The spirits teach directly the opposite of Jesus and the apostles. There is no possibility of harmonizing the two. If Spiritualism is true, the Bible is false, and Christ was the most notorious deceiver ever in the world. If he was not what he claimed to be, and what he instructed the apostles in relation to his character, and mission to this world, as the Son of God, our Savior, then no one could be a greater hypocrite than himself. If he was but a mere man, as claimed by the spirits, and their followers, he deserves the contempt of every good being in the universe, because of gross deception. Whoever claims he was no more than any other man, is most inconsistent when he speaks well of Jesus. If he was only a mere man, he was not our Savior, but our deceiver.

The time has arrived when the friends of Jesus should come out from the world, and let their light shine, standing up boldly for Jesus, at the risk of their all, even life itself. It is too late to compromise with the Devil and his followers. We believe the coming struggle between truth and error, light and darkness, Christ and Belial, will be a conflict without a parallel in the history of the world. Who is willing to take the front rank against the approaching foe? None can stand only as they trust in Jesus, and obey his word. He is our Captain, and will lead to certain victory. The triumph will be eternal, and the glory unending. Shall we meet around the throne of the Lamb, and share in the marriage feast of the Bridegroom King?

CONDITION OF FRANCE.

All eyes are turned to the movements of the French and their noted Emperor. His name is above every name upon our planet. It is expected that he will make some grand movements next year. His step makes the political world tremble. The editor of "The Last Vials," published in Torquay, England, says:—

"France has been converted into one large camp. Military exercises are witnessed in every direction—not only by day, but by night. New and unheard-of evolutions are invented and brought into practice. The troops are taught to throw up entrenchments (extempore) even on the battle field. Portable gunboats for the rivers have been constructed in multitudes. The light cavalry have been taught to cross the rivers by swimming. They have been taught to fight on foot, or on horseback. Unheard-of agencies of destruction have been devised, and the secret has been kept. The French are the most intelligent and the most rapid troops in the world. The Germans the slowest and most phlegmatic. The campaign of 1866 was wonderfully rapid it is true. But now, observe why it was so rapid. Because it was fought by German against German. The slow lightning of Prussia was too quick for the slower lightning of Austria, and the campaign was decided at once. The case may be far different when the swift thunderbolt of France is hurled against Prussia, while the Germans are metaphysically debating what sort of thunder they are to use. The campaign may again be decided at once, but with far more momentous results. Rapidity is, in all cases, the master-quality of this age."

COMMON SENSE IN DRESS.

We love to see exhibitions of good common sense; but if there is anything where we see a lack of it, it is in the dress of women as now exhibited by those who follow the foolish fashions of the day. Their styles of dress are neither convenient, tasty, modest, healthful, nor economical. Satan has led them, through the harlots of Paris, who originate the fashions, to depart as far from a becoming, common-sense costume as possible, and is still trying to get up something still more ridiculous in the "Grecian Bend." The Devil will keep up his immodest and costly fashions so long as professed christians will be so silly as to follow them; for by this means he succeeds in seducing them away from Christ, into the spirit and manners of the world. The professed followers of Jesus will never know what it is to "come out from the world and be separate," so long as they follow the fashions of the world. Till this cord is cut, they will find themselves bound, more or less, by Satanic bonds. Those who profess to be the friends of Jesus, and looking for his coming, should come out as decidedly against the unchristian fashions of the day, as they do against picnics, fairs, festivals, circuses, theatres, tobacco, whiskey drinking and rum selling. It is time for christian "women" to "adorn themselves in modest apparel; . . . not with broidered [plaited] hair, or gold, or pearls, or costly array," if they would be ready to meet Jesus at his coming.

Says the Providence Journal, Dec. 11th:—

"What our women need first—before the ballot, and essential to the ballot's intelligent use—is emancipation from the ever varying and ridiculous decrees of fashion in dress. The ballot will be only a mockery—only abused, so long as women wear such clothes, and change their styles so often as now."

The following sensible remarks are from the New York Evening Post:

"What is needed for women is not an ugly habit or dress, but emancipation from their slavery to the decree of fashion. . . . But we do not see why sensible women should not combine to settle upon some fashion of walking dress, like the very pretty, modest and yet convenient short dress which was generally worn last year, and adhere to that as a street costume, tolerating no arbitrary change of cut prescribed by the fashion tyrants. Then, if they would agree upon some equally sensible and tasteful style of evening dress, and absolutely refuse to change this style, no matter what Paris or London says, their emancipation would be as nearly complete as seems praticable. With such a set system of dress, there would still remain room for the exercise of individual taste in the choice and harmonious arrangement of colors, and in the selection of material. It would be possible to dress as soberly as inclination dictated, and yet woman's lives would be made much easier, and a dress once made would be fairly worn out, as a man's coat is, before it was laid aside or cut up and altered.

As it is now—if you ask your Amelia to wear next week, in a modest evening company, the dress which you thought so becoming to her last winter, and to the manufacture of which, she gave so many hours which you would like to have seen spent with a pleasant book or in the open air; tell her it is harmonious in color, excellent in fit, of the most suitable material; that it is in every way becoming to her, and what will be her answer? She will tell you—with a sigh—that it is out of fashion, that the style has changed, that to wear it would make her ridiculous; and if she is idle and wealthy, she will order a new dress from the dress-maker; if she is poor and has a quick eye, she will sit for the rest of the week in a close room, busily ripping, cutting, adding, deducting, altering, and, at the expense of more dollars and much more time than she could well spare, making the new dress of last winter into a new dress for this winter, no prettier, most probably uglier, certainly not improved in any quality which should make a dress liked or its wearer admired. And so Amelia goes at last to the evening company attired in the latest fashion, but worn out with labor and worry, and comes home cross, and with a dyspepsia.

Men sometimes complain of woman's lack of intelligence, but it is hard to attain universal excellence at twenty-five; and a woman who has to manage her household, give her children the care which a conscientious mother gives them, and then, over and above all this, must run after the ever-changing fashions in dress, has no time, no strength, and presently has no inclination for good books, and no capacity for rational conversation. If men had to pay as much attention to dress as women, they would all, probably, be as uninteresting as dandies are; and a male dandy is a much less interesting or intelligent creature than a female one."

THE BEST PARLOR STOVE.

When there are so many stoves in market, it is somewhat difficult, for those who have had but little experience, to decide which is best. We are satisfied that it is the best economy to get the best stove, as it is the best sewing machine. We have taken some pains, before making a purchase, to ascertain what parlor stove is the most economical in relation to the amount of coal used and heat produced; and the best to keep a continued fire with the least care; and we have come to a very decided conclusion that P. P. STEWART'S* BASE BURNER, manufactured by Fuller, Warren & Co., Troy, N. Y., who are the sole agents, is superior to all others.

* Mr. Stewart died Dec. 13th. The church and the world have lost a valuable man.

MASONIC OATH.—The following is part of the oath of a Royal Arch Mason:—

"I furthermore promise and swear, that I will keep the secrets of a Royal Arch Mason as inviolate in my own breast as in his own before communicated, murder and treason not excepted."

SPIRITUAL RESURRECTION.—Please notice the article of Bro. Bassett on the Spiritual Resurrection.

DR. CLARKE ON THE RESURRECTION.

There are many of the followers of John Wesley, who deny the resurrection of the body; and attempt sometimes to claim that they have Dr. Clarke on their side. After quoting Job 14: 10-12, Dr. Clarke says:—Surely, it would be difficult to twist this passage to the denial of the resurrection of the body." The text reads as follows:—

"But man dieth, and wasteth away: yea, man giveth up the Ghost, and where is he? As the waters fail from the sea, and the flood decayeth and drieth up; so man lieth down, and riseth not: till the heavens be no more, they shall not awake, nor be raised out of their sleep."

In Dr. Clarke's notes on 1 Cor. 15: 42—"It is sown in corruption"—he says:—"The body is buried in a state of degradation, decay and corruption. The apostle uses the word sown to intimate that the body shall rise again."

In the summing up of his comments on 1 Cor. 15, he says:—"One remark I cannot help making; the doctrine of the resurrection seems to have been thought of much more consequence among the primitive christians than now! How is this? The apostles were continually insisting upon it, and exciting the followers of God to diligence, obedience, and cheerfulness, through it. And their successors in the present day seldom mention it! So apostles preached; and so primitive christians believed: so we preach, and so our hearers believe. There is not a doctrine in the gospel on which more stress is laid; and there is not a doctrine in the present system of preaching which is treated with more neglect."

If man never dies, as many teach, how can he have a resurrection from the dead? It is evident that nominal christendom is fast drifting into Spiritualism, and sustaining the Deceiver, who said man should not die.

"PILGRIM'S PROGRESS" ILLUSTRATED.

Last evening (Dec. 21st) we went to see Bunyan's Pilgrim's Progress, as illustrated by a series of paintings, exhibited at Tremont Temple, Boston, by Mr. J. W. Bain. It was the richest entertainment of the kind we ever witnessed If Mr. Bain ever exhibits these paintings in the neighborhood of the reader, we would recommend him to go and see them.

DEATH.—We have just received, by telegram from Dr. Leslie, the sad intelligence of the death of Bro. Wilkins, an efficient laborer at the Memphis Mission. He died Dec. 21st, 1868. For the Board, L. BOUTELL.

IN THE VINEYARD.

The Lord having especially manifested his grace to me, in delivering me from the deep afflictions of the several months past, I wish to relieve my mind of a deep conviction of duty, by placing myself in a broader field of usefulness. The Lord has opened the way, and though but a young laborer in the vineyard, I place myself at the service of my Master to labor in his vineyard, by holding up Jesus to a perishing world, as the way may open. Any of Father's children in Western New York and vicinity, desiring me to make appointments, will please address me at Rochester, N. Y. WM. H. SPENCER.

ROCHESTER.

Tuesday evening, Dec. 8th, amid the storms of winter, we had a special meeting. One who had been interested a long time said: "After invitations from many respectable members of different churches, I have turned away from their cushioned seats, and their kind solicitations, and have concluded to cast in my lot with this despised people." Being a man in public life for the last twenty years, we shall think it strange if he is not heard from in a public position among us.

Another says: "I heard and believed in 1845, but have wandered far from God; but I want to come back." A young lady asked our prayers, and a young man who had never known Christ said he wanted that life. Another young man from Canada came to my room yesterday, and said, "My father is sick in Hamilton, and I have got to go home. I want some tracts, so that I can show our people about this blessed hope. If I could stay, I would be baptized and join your people."

I think this gospel net has caught about every Canadian that has come into our meetings. I have wondered if they were all so honest-hearted over there; if so, I should like the privilege of casting over on the other side of the lake, and filling the net.

Brethren, work. Work in earnest. Work for your own lives by trying to save others. Work, for the shades of night are upon us! Work, for the last great storm is near at hand! Endure unto the end, and the "Well done" will be sweet music to your waiting hearts.

Bro. Hobbs was with us Sunday. He says the accounts concerning Rochester have not been exaggerated. The interest in the Sabbath School is astonishing. One started for "Father's house" in the evening; and one from Dr. Shaw's church said, "I have attended here but a few times, but I am fully believing in the doctrine you preach."

Rochester is one of the most important fields in America. If we are permitted time, I hope we shall see an edifice here that will hold thousands, filled with anxious listeners and waiting believers. Pray for Rochester. Pray, believing. H. PRATT.

CORRECTION.

A mistake occurs in my article, headed, "That Church." I am made to say that "NOT ONE SOUL" has responded to my call, and yet I repeat in the same article that several have. This is the error. The article should read thus: "Not one soul" (with whom I have been associated, or have even seen in the past five years), "has responded" to the call since published. My surprise was at that. For what help came, did not come from the persons that I had expected would help, and that with a willing heart, and a ready hand and mind. C. F. SWEET.

CONCORD, N. H.—The church at Centre Street, are enjoying a refreshing from the presence of the Lord. Backsliders are being reclaimed, and sinners are giving their hearts to God. Nine came forward for prayers last night. S. W. THURBER.

THE TRACT FUND.

At a meeting of the Advent Christian Publication Society, held at the National Campmeeting, Chapin's Grove, Springfield, Mass., Aug. 27th, 1868, the following resolutions were adopted:—

Resolved, That we raise TWO THOUSAND DOLLARS for the free distribution of Tracts the ensuing year.

Resolved, That our preaching brethren be, and hereby are, requested to act as Agents in this good work, to solicit contributions to the Tract Fund, as often at least as once in every quarter, and forward the same to the Treasurer, GEO. T. ADAMS, BOSTON, MASS.

THE NORWAY MISSION.

FROM BRO. BENDIXON.

BRO. GRANT:—It is with sadness I write this time. Would to God it were otherwise, but I must be satisfied. The last letter I wrote to you, I informed you that the prospect was very bright, and it was so indeed. The Lord had done great things for us around here, and I hope that some precious fruit shall be gathered in at the harvest. I informed you our Sunday School was doing nicely, but now it looks sad. When I look back, since I commenced my labors here, I can trace the Devil all through. At first, I saw the enemy through those who professed to be christians; but he was too stupid in that way, and could not do anything. So he took the opposite course, and attacked me through his ungodly, wicked agents of scoffing, blasphemous men; but in this way he lost ground every day, and the truth took strong hold. This was too much for the Devil and his hosts; but he had one way more, and here he was strongest.

Sunday, the fifteenth of November, I came down to our place of worship, for the purpose of instructing the children, and what did I meet? One came and told me that I should not preach any more there; that I was not fit for a minister, because I did not preach eternal torment for the wicked. I was almost struck to the ground, it came so sudden upon me. I saw in the manner they met me that the Devil was the master of the course pursued. But praise the Lord, I had grace to meet it with the calmness and meekness due to a servant of Jesus. But oh, how I felt it; not for myself so much, as for the name of my dear Savior and his cause. O that wicked one! that wicked one! that great opposer to the truth and its proclaimers.

You understand, Bro., from this, the matter is all about the immortality of the soul. Shall I deny my Lord and his truth for the sake of a good name, and a good reputation? Shall I keep back what is the command of God, for the sake of being esteemed as a preacher? Shall I cut off any thing for the sake of popular opinion, and thus be a man of wisdom, loved and favored by those who oppose and deny what they do not understand, and, worst of all, what they will not understand? No! by the help of heaven! No! when I gave myself up to be a bearer of the glad tidings of the kingdom of Jesus, I gave up all,—my time, my talents, my reputation, my name; in one word, I gave myself fully, and wholly, and for ever. Praise the Lord. I expected to be scoffed at, mocked at, laughed at, cursed, and perhaps be called Beelzebub. The way to glory is not a way of "flowery beds of ease," neither a way highly esteemed by the world. No, no; it is just the opposite; but glory to Jesus, this is the way he went, and I am determined to go too, by the help of God.

Such is the state of things here. I am feared and shunned. False reports go about me, which cause people to condemn me every where. Some pity me, because I am such a good preacher, they say, and am carried away with falsehood, while the Lord has bestowed such great gifts on me. Others, again, say there was never any truth with him; he only came here to make disturbance, and make people sin as much as they please, because they shall not be tormented in fire through all eternity. All this, remember, is from those who are called the "awakened folks." Others, again, are weeping because these folks are treating me so badly. God bless them all, and lead them to the truth, is my prayer for them all.

Now, Bro., what am I to do? You will say, you must continue. Well, Bro., but what use is it? I have tried my best. I have kept back nothing of the truth, as far as I know. The Lord has blessed me with many awakened souls, which I fondly trust we shall meet in the kingdom; but now all works against me. They are working on the people to prevent them from opening any house for me; so you see the Devil has closed both hearts and doors. I have only one way left; and that is to leave them, and go back to America again. It is hard, very hard. I have no money to take me back; and to separate from my family comes very hard. I must sell the things I have in the house to pay my passage, and hope to get my family over afterwards. It seems hard, but as it is for the sake of Jesus and his truth, it will work for good. I shall try to be back as soon as possible, if the Lord pleases to help me.

When I hear of the work going on in America, and the cries for laborers through the Crisis, my prayer to the Lord is, help me over there, that I may labor in thy vineyard. I believe the Lord will hear my prayer. Forgive me, Bro., if I ask you for a little assistance. I should never have mentioned it, if I could see any other way. I have laid the matter before the Lord, fully confident that he will do everything for the good of his unworthy children. Pray that I may please him in all my doings. I shall go on my way bearing the testimony of a crucified and risen Savior, that will soon come again in his kingdom, to destroy all devils and opposition to his truth and causes, and bring eternal life, with joy unspeakable, to all his humble and true followers. I ask your prayers for me and mine. Your affectionate Bro., and fellow soldier in the warfare of the cross, patiently waiting for Jesus to come again. Lord, come quickly! Amen. O. BENDIXON.

DEATH OF BRO. IRA THOMSON.

BRO. GRANT:—It becomes my painful duty to anounce to the readers of the Crisis, the sudden and unexpected death of this well known disciple of Jesus, and patient and devoted lover of the glorious second advent of our Lord. Last Sabbath, Dec. 6th, he was as well as usual, attended meeting all day, and heard Bro. Wm. H. Mitchell preach; enjoyed the preaching very much, said it had been a profitable day to him. He was unusually fervent in prayer at the family altar that morning, when he prayed especially for his beloved wife and all his children.

On returning from church, he conversed for some time on the side walk with a sister whom he desired to see more engaged in the cause of the Savior. The valuable and faithful counsel here given ended the labors of our much loved brother. As he entered the house, it was observed that he trembled violently, and soon fell upon the floor. A blood vessel was ruptured in his head, and he was actually dying from apoplexy. Consciousness seemed to have departed, and his whole body was paralyzed. Physicians were called in who pronounced the case hopeless. Bro. Mitchell prayed for him, kneeling (with the writer of this) beside his dying bed. The scene was exciting and heart-rending. His dear companion pleaded for him to only speak to her once more. But his work was done. He had said his last word, which was in substance a word of advice, to be a faithful christian. It was about half past four in the afternoon when he was stricken down, and he breathed his life out at five o'clock the next morning, Dec. 7th.

For twenty-six years he has been a devoted lover of the second coming of Christ. There at the age of sixty-two years, lay a man of God, who had experienced the vicissitudes incident to the time of trial in the passing of the time, but who had waited for the kingdom of God. His funeral took place on Wednesday, the 10th inst., and was attended by Bro. Daniel Churchill, who spoke words of comfort, of counsel and advice, concerning a thorough preparation to meet him who was sleeping there in our presence.

On account of the long personal acquaintance and warm attachment to the deceased, Bro. Churchill was entirely overcome, and for some moments was unable to speak. When he recovered from the emotion he said, "I feel more like sitting down with the mourners, than I do like trying to speak to them." It was a time really long to be remembered. It was a time of weeping, but with the tears and sorrow of heart, there was good hope.

He wrote and received a great many letters. His letters all had one subject, which in substance may be stated thus:—"The Lord is very soon coming. At all events, be fully prepared to meet him." His numerous friends will remember in their prayers the afflicted widow and his mourning sons and daughter. One son is residing with the lonely mother; two others are at distant places, and the only daughter is the wife of Bro. Theodore Ford, of Concord, N. H. The hand of the Lord is heavy upon them. May the afflicting loss of the much loved one be sanctified to them for their spiritual good. C. P. WHITTEN.

SR. C, B. TURNER.

BRO. GRANT:—I learn from good authority that our dear beloved Bro. C. B. Turner's family is in need of help. Now my dear brethren and sisters in Christ, I propose that every one who ever heard Bro. Turner preach, shall send sister Turner 25 cts. each—every one, small or great; and any one who wishes to send more than 25cts., all the better; but do not let any one fail to send the 25 cts. Let some one in each church take it upon them to gather up this amount, and send it altogether from each church. O how soon we can relieve that dear soul of her want, and how good we shall feel when we sit down some of these cold nights, and think, well, now sister Turner has got plenty of wood and and bread, etc., so that her little ones are all comfortable. We shall very soon see our dear Bro. Turner in the kingdom, if we do our duty. Will we not feel glad to think we have provided for his lonely widow and little ones who were so dependent upon him in his life-time! Dear Lord help us all to act cheerfully in this matter. Let us all do this at once. Not put it off one week, and then sister Turner will tell us through the Crisis and Voice how much it all amounts to. D. COGSWELL.

WATCH AND PRAY.

These words of the Savior, although uttered more than eighteen hundred years ago, have not, through the long lapse of years which intervene, lost their force and meaning. They are of the same weighty importance to the child of God at the present day, that they were when spoken to the disciples. We are still in an enemy's land, subject to manifold temptations, and dangerous snares, and pits are waiting for our feet. The way seems to grow more and more narrow, and many who once delighted to walk in it, have turned away and are following after strange Gods. Few there are who are willing to come out from the world and bear the reproach of Christ; few whose love and zeal for God and his truth is sufficient to hold them amid the increasing tide of popular evil, which slowly, yet surely, is creeping in around us and quenching the peace and joy, and spiritual life of the many who do not constantly watch and pray. Never, perhaps, was there a time in the history of the church, when the powers of darkness had gained such mighty sway over the human mind, or when iniquity was more abundant than to-day.

The world lieth in wickedness, and knoweth not that the time of its visitation draweth nigh. The cup of earth's abominations runs over. And where, O where are the faithful ones, who shun not to declare the whole counsel of God, and make known unto the people the fierce wrath and fiery indignation of the Almighty upon all those who despise the riches of his grace, and have pleasure in unrighteousness.

O ye who profess to be the friends of Jesus, awake to a sense of the mighty responsibility resting upon you, as good stewards of the manifold grace of God, and watchmen set to proclaim the avenging sword. Soon the day of accounts will come, and who will be able to stand? Then gird on the whole armor of God, and consecrate your all to him, that your light may shine more brightly and clearly amid the darkness. Then shall you be a power felt and seen by the ungodly, and the name of God will be glorified. E. A. ESMEINE.

Correspondence.

From Bro. J. G. Hook.

BRO. GRANT:—God is saving some poor sinners in this great and wicked city. Sometimes I have been almost discouraged amid my labors here, and thought I should have to leave without seeing any fruit; but praise God, victory has at last turned on Zion's side, though opposition has waxed strong without, and within. There have been several conversions down town, as there is a branch church of the 9th and Spring-Garden Sts. church, lately organized through the instrumentality of Eld. Whitecar and son, and other dear children of God. They worship in a hall over the sixth National Bank, corner of 2nd and Pine Sts. They hold meetings every Sunday at three P. M., and prayer and conference meetings week-day evenings at private houses. God is with them and blessing their labors of love. We labor with them each Sunday P. M. They meet with the regular church usually, which now worships in Melon St., but will in a few weeks return to their old place at 9th and Spring-Garden Sts., as the Presbyterians are going to occupy the house on Melon street.

We had a very interesting conversion last evening in the church on Melon street,—that of a lady, whose father has for many years preached the gospel, formerly among the Baptists, but latterly he has been preaching with us the coming of Jesus. God has answered his many prayers. O will he not rejoice when he hears the glad news. It was an old-fashioned conversion. The trembling power of God was upon her. She could not leave her seat; and after the meeting was closed, we had another season of prayer for her, when she cried for mercy, and found pardon at the hand of God. Glory to his heavenly name. I will rejoice with the angels, while they rejoice around God's burning throne. O what a victory we did gain over the common foe. All glory be to Jesus. Hallelujah!

We have had one precious season at the baptismal waters on the banks of the old Delaware, and six or seven more are waiting an opportunity to be buried with Christ by baptism. Baptism, as Peter says, is a figure of the resurrection of Jesus Christ (1 Pet. 3: 21), therefore we baptize, or bury once, and not thrice, as Christ died once, was buried once, and raised once. The Father and Holy Spirit never died, and never were buried: therefore were never raised; so we are not to show such in figure. Amen. Hallelujah! JOHN G. HOOK.

From Bro. I. Damman.

BRO GRANT:—I would say to the saints that I never felt more need of living strictly a Bible christian than at the present time. Never did we live in a more critical moment since the gospel day commenced than at the present. Men's consciences are "seared as with a hot iron," and they have become quiet and easy about the future, God, heaven, hell, or the Devil. Self-love, indulgence, pride, seeking to please and be pleased with the same, is the general interest; but some are crying to God for salvation for sinners.

Since I returned from Philadelphia, I visited the town of Rome in Maine, and found the cause prostrated with a blighting influence, such as we have seen in many other places, condemning others because they don't believe the seventh day Sabbath or the non-resurrection of the wicked dead. Such an influence is to be shunned as a deadly poison. Death follows them everywhere they go. The coming of our Lord is forgotten, and sinners also. What will be the account of such men in the day of judgment? Lord help me to know nothing among the people, save Christ. I found some in Rome loving the Lord. Some few were reclaimed and commenced family prayers. A revival interest was felt. Some sinners promised me they would seek the Lord.

From there I went to China, where I felt at home among old friends, who had lately resolved to work in harmony with each other to push the cause forward. A number have been reclaimed of late, and some baptized by A. Damon. They have commenced a house to worship in. May God bless that little flock. I had a precious time with them. On my way to Pittsfield, I held a meeting in the west part of China, where they had never heard a sermon on the Second Advent before. Some feeling was manifested. An old man called on me the next morning, spoke of the meeting, and wept when I gave him my hand to leave. God will bless his word when spoken in love. I left the friends, perhaps never to see them again till the judgment.

I now am in Pittsfield, holding a few meetings, hoping to be the means of saving some in the name of the Lord. Some feeling was manifested here for the salvation of the perishing. They have a good school-house to worship in. May God bless the people. Jesus is soon coming. I. DAMMAN.

Pittsfield.

From Br. C. H. Danks.

BRO. GRANT:—I have thought for a long time that I would write a few lines and let you know how we were getting along since the Fairfield campmeeting. We have not forgotten those precious truths we heard there. I always realize the benefit of such a meeting more after I get home; though I enjoy them exceedingly while in attendance. I had not had the privilege of attending such a meeting (excepting the tent-meeting in this place last summer) for over thirteen years; but I thank the Lord he has kept me, and that the truths I heard from nineteen to twenty years ago in Mass., did not fall on stony ground; neither have the thorns sprung up and choked the word sown in my heart; but I trust it has taken root so deeply that nothing shall be able to remove it; and I pray that it may bear fruit to the glory of God.

We often speak of the good discourses you gave us at Fairfield, especially the one on "trials" and "long-suffering"; we hope we profited by it. May the Lord guide you at all times, and let you come again to this place if it is his will; if not, may some other faithful watchman come and give us a message right from God. Some that met with us a year ago have grown cold, and have forsaken the assembling of themselves together. O that the Lord would send some one to give us meat in due season, that saints may be quickened, and careless ones aroused. God's true children will be like a city set on a hill that can not be hid. God help us not to put our light under cover, lest it go out; but hold it up and let it shine, and it will light up our path and that of others, and will shine brighter and brighter unto the perfect day. Pray for us. Your sister, C. H. Danks.

From Bro. C. P. Dow.

Bro. Grant:—I am about to leave farming and move to the village, where you discoursed with Mr. Chapin, and hope to be more at liberty and less entangled with the affairs of this life, so that I may better please him who has called me to be a soldier in the "army of the great king." I preach every Sabbath, besides many funeral sermons. I held a meeting of days in Bolton last winter, and saw a precious work there. I baptized fifteen at the time, and since have had as good congregations as I have had for the last five years. I have done but little, and am an unprofitable servant, but hope to do more if God permit, while the last sands fall in time's glass, and the last foretold drama in earth's present troubled history is being accomplished. Let us all seek a right to the tree of life, and enter through the gates into the city of God.

Chas. P. Dow.

Stanbridge, P. Q. Oct. 11th, 1868.

From Bro. S. A. Tenny.

To the waiting ones scattered abroad:—Dear brethren and sisters in Christ,—I am still in this world of sin and sorrow, trying to serve the Lord Jesus; and mean to try and prove faithful while mortal life shall last. I still love the truth, and am trying to "earnestly contend for the faith which was once delivered unto the saints."—Jude 3. In so doing, I meet with trial, scorn and scoffing from an ungodly world, and from cold, worldly-minded professors; but amid it all, I hear Jesus saying, "I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world."—Matt. 28:20. I can rejoice in hope of a better life at the appearing of the Master. Then we shall be like Jesus, for "we shall see him as he is."—1 John 3:2; also Phil. 3:21. Praise God. This will be enough, not only an eternal life with Jesus, but to be made like him; this will be glorious indeed. Let us all try and be faithful until Jesus comes, and then we will have a share in the kingdom. There are some good brethren and sisters scattered among the hills and vales of Oxford county, who love the truth, and feel that it makes them free, and they are not ashamed to own it. Their number is increasing. Praise God. Eleven have been baptized at North Norway, the present season, by Bro. J. Whitman. Still there is room. Let us all labor faithfully till Jesus comes, and then he will say to us, "Well done." Your brother, waiting for Jesus, S. Tenney.

For the World's Crisis.

PRAY FOR ME.

I need not say that it is humiliating, and very crossing and painful, to be under the necessity of asking aid in temporal things of our fellow men. It is certainly so, and I trust you have never been in such straitened circumstances are thankful to him who has kept you from such a trial. I earnestly beseech all christians who read this to pray for us, and for a full description of our case, please read from the tenth to the thirteenth verse of the fourth chapter of first Corinthians.

Bro. and Sr. Chamberlain are worthy of sympathy. We know them. They are true disciples of Jesus. Give to the poor and lend to the Lord.—Ed.

Obituaries.

Heath. Died in Lynn, Mass., July 20th, 1868, Sr. Mary K. Heath, wife of Era Heath, aged fifty-six years.

Sr. Heath was one of the favored ones who, in early life, received grace by which she was prepared to listen with rapturous joy to the sweet flowing music of mercy's last message, heralding the swift-coming jubilee for Messiah's royal and long waiting friends. The evenings and mornings of twenty-seven tardily rolling years witnessed her meek and heartfelt devotions, in which was never heard a petition that earth's Nobleman might not immediately return and become her ruler; but her heart, throbbing with eternal love, sent daily despatches by the swift-footed messengers running over Jacob's ladder, to the supreme court of the king eternal, praying that the long-looked-for reign of Immanuel might immediately commence. She lived a christian life, and died in sweet hope of eternal life. She left a husband and two daughters to mourn the loss—no absence—of one much beloved.

The church of Christ has laid away another jewel to be brought out from the dust and darkness of death, polished and glorious, to shine above the radiance of noon-tide, through a cloudless and eternal day. Amen. J. Couch.

McKinstry. Died in Concord, N. H., Dec. 8th, 1868, my mother, Mrs. M. M. McKinstry, aged sixty-five years and six months.

At last the weary pilgrim is at rest. She died in peace, and fell asleep in Jesus like as a weary child sinks to repose. She was a kind, affectionate christian mother, and memory clings fondly, tearfully, around the acts and words of tender, loving care, which characterized her life. She loved Jesus, and often her testimony has been heard in the little Washington Street Bethel, in favor of Jesus and his love.

Our hearts are sad, and yet we sorrow not as those who have no hope. We asked her the day before she died, if we should read the Bible to her. She selected Jno. 14:1,—"Let not your hearts be troubled," etc. It is a precious legacy to us now that she is gone.

We carried her to Groveland, Mass., where Bro. H. L. Hastings preached a sermon of great sweetness and power, and full of sympathy and consolation, from John 14:1, 2, 3; and then we bore her away to sleep, where the river flows in beauty along, and angels guard her rest, to await the trumpet's call to life and immortality.

Her languishing head is at rest,
Her thinking and acting are o'er;
Her quiet, immovable breast,
Is heaved by affliction no more.

L. C. McKinstry.

Thompson. Died in Lowell, Dec. 7th, Deacon Ira Thompson, aged sixty-two years.

Our beloved brother attended meeting the day previous as usual, and was much interested in hearing the gospel dispensed from Bro. Mitchell, as he responded to it a number of times. At the close of the afternoon he returned to his home, but a short distance. When leaving the house of worship he was apparently as well as usual. When he came into his house, his wife spoke to him, but receiving no answer, she looked at him, and discovered that he was ill, and immediately went to him to assist in getting him into a chair, and at the same time screamed for help, but he fell partially in the chair and on the floor. Help was obtained, they got him on the sofa, and physicians were called in, but they announced there was no help. He lingered apparently unconscious, not speaking after he entered his home, and expired about five o'clock the next morning.

The subject of this notice leaves a wife, three sons and one daughter, an aged father, four brothers, and two sisters. His loss is keenly felt by a large circle of friends. The almost broken-hearted companion feels it is too much for her to bear. The general remark is, he was a good man. He experienced religion in 1842, and united with the Freewill Baptists; but in a few months embraced the doctrine of the soon coming of Christ and its kindred doctrines, of which he remained an ardent lover until his death. The church feel that they have met with a great loss. May the hand of the Lord sustain these mourners, and show them the necessity of a preparation to meet that husband and Father in the morning of the resurrection. Words of comfort were spoken by the writer, from 1 Thess. 4:18. D. Churchill.

Will the Voice of the West please copy?

Jackman. Died in North Woodstock, N. H., Dec. 3d, 1868, Bro. Lewis Jackman, aged thirty-five years, six months, and twenty-five days.

He sleeps in Jesus. The church of which Bro. Jackman was a faithful member, sustains a great loss in his death. He leaves a wife, two children, and a large circle of relatives and friends to mourn. May this bereavement be sanctified to the good of all who knew him. Funeral services were conducted by the writer, who preached a discourse from the following text: Luke 20:35-36. We were assisted in the services by Bro. Chase and Moody, of the Baptist denomination. May God greatly bless this bereaved family.

A. W. Sibley.

Parker. Died in Worcester, Nov. 23d, Bro. John Parker, aged forty-six years.

Bro. Parker had been a great sufferer for a year past, but he bore with his sufferings in hope of a glorious immortality in the world to come, where neither the chains of slavery or sin will any more trouble him. He had been among us about two years, and gave as we think good evidence of his love to God. May the blessings of the Lord rest upon his lonely companion and her children, and may this death be sanctified to their good and eternal welfare. Samuel Ayres.

Pressey. Died in Salem, N. H., Nov. 12th, 1868, Lemuel Himes, son of John and Mary Pressey, aged nine years and nine months.

He had exerted his influence to get a number to pledge themselves to help organise a company called "The North Salem Band of Hope," but death defeated the work. He was a strong lover of the Young Pilgrim, which he received from some kind hand. He will sleep in Jesus until the bright morning of immortality dawns. H. S. C.

Morrison. Died of lung fever, at New Hartford, Sabbath morning, Nov. 1st, 1868, Miss Mary Morrison, aged seventy years.

For thirteen years Miss Morrison had been the faithful domestic and friend of Chloe Lankton. Thus, having lost the last of her earthly near and dear ones, Chloe feels more lonely than ever before, and mourns very deeply the loss of her long loved companion.

Hall. Died in Whitefield, Me., Dec. 1st, 1868, Samuel Hall, aged eighty-three years.

He died in hope, and leaves a wife to mourn his loss. S. K. Partridge.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

Cable News.

Cadiz, Dec. 13. In consequence of Gen. De Roda's proclamation the insurgents surrendered their arms to the American Consul, who, according to the arrangement previously made, turned them over to the military authorities. From 8000 to 10,000 troops and nine war vessels were ready to attack the city at noon. All is quiet now. The flag carried by the insurgents was a tricolor. Over 30,000 persons have left the city. There is great distress among those who fled to the adjacent towns. All the foreign consuls and their families, except the Swedish and American, left the city. There are 537 barricades in Cadiz. The American Consul's house was filled with refugees and women and children. Gen. De Roda, who had remained about a mile distant from the walls, entered Cadis at two o'clock this afternoon with all his troops. The insurgents seem satisfied with the result. Their feelings are undoubtedly in favor of a republic. Five hundred persons were killed and wounded on both sides during the fighting of last week.

Madrid, Dec. 15. Matters are now perfectly tranquil. The government is receiving congratulations from the Provinces on the re-establishment of law and order at Cadiz.

London, Dec. 16. Dispatches from Cadiz of Dec. 10th were stopped on the road. They describe fully the situation of affairs at that time, and state that the Government troops were badly beaten in their encounter with the insurgents. While the fight was progressing, Capt. Farrell, the American Consul, is said to have mounted one of the barricades, in uniform, and holding the American flag in his hand, called upon both parties to stop the struggle and put an end to the bloodshed. The fight was shortly after brought to a close and hostilities ceased. Numerous buildings throughout the city bear evidences of the struggle and the bullet marks on the houses tell plainly of the fierce character of the contest. The City Hall was badly shattered by cannon shots. The vessels in the Bay are filled with people departing for other and more quiet localities. The Government troops are reported to have been guilty of excesses and plundered some of the many deserted houses.

War actually exists between Turkey and Greece, the Greek government having refused compliance with the Sultan's arrogant ultimatum. Fighting has taken place, and there are reports of serious action on the part of the Turks. A Turkish fleet is said to have sailed from the capital to the Archipelago. The Greeks are full of enthusiasm, and purpose carrying the war into Turkey, where, doubtless, they would be joined by thousands of the Sultan's Christian subjects. Should the contest go on, it could not fail to involve other Powers; and this is a reason for whatever doubts may exist as to its being long waged, as the Great Powers may not be disposed to engage in great war at this time.—Boston Traveller.

Paris, Dec. 21. It is reported that Prince Metternich has received instructions from Vienna to act in concert with France on the Eastern difficulty.

The Presse represents that the war excitement is as intense in Constantinople as it is in Athens, and states that a Russian flag has been publicly burned in the streets.

Passage through the Suez Canal.—The Rob Roy, an English merchant vessel, recently passed through the Suez Canal, and the Captain writes to the London Times an account of the present condition of this great undertaking, after thirteen years have been spent in its construction. The paper above mentioned, in its issue of the 2d instant, has this portion of the letter of the master of the Rob Roy, which we copy:—

"The canal, as designed, is about a hundred miles long. Of this length about half is sufficiently advanced for the sea water to reach fifty miles—that is, into the middle of the Isthmus. It is finished to its full breadth, which is a hundred yards, or the width of a considerable river, but not to the intended depth of twenty-six feet. The remaining fifty miles not yet penetrated by the sea water, are in various states of progress: parts are excavated, parts are under water, parts will have to be laid under water which is to be supplied from a great lake not yet filled, while a good many miles have to wait for large blasting operations. To English ears it must sound promising that a good deal of clay has to be cut through; for nothing can be dealt with so successfully in this country as that material. The completion of the southern half of the canal would look like a very long work but for the fact of the immense subsidiary works being completed and a vast mass of appliances being on the spot. The service Canal, from the Nile to the mid point of the salt water Canal, and branching thence to either extremity, is an immense work, not less than a hundred and fifty miles long, and in full use for the supply of fresh water for navigation, and for otherwise assisting the work to be done. The port at the Mediterranean end is an immense work, already available. The sea channel at the Suez end has difficulties, but only such as engineers are familiar with. Forty enormous and very costly dredging machines are at work on different parts of the Canal—chiefly, we conclude, the northern half—discharging mountains of mud, sand and clay over the banks or into barges. The rate of expenditure is put at £200,000 a month, or two and a half millions a year. Our informant calculates that a driving wind, after blowing a month together, will send into the canal, when finished, five hundred tons of sand a day, or fifteen thousand tons in a month. This, however, is no more than a single dredging machine would be able to keep down at a certain moderate cost in coal. The difficulty of keeping up the banks of the canal, exposed as they will be to the wash of steamers and to a surface often agitated by the wind, is a more serious matter, but one which does not enter into the present question. Upon the whole, it does seem a moral certainty that, at least in two or three years—for one year seems out of the question—this great undertaking, worthy of a heroic age, will be brought to what we may fairly call an actual completion. In the course of the year 1871 we may probably see the sea water of one ocean flowing into the other."

Passing Events.

☞ The season just closed has been more disastrous to the shipping on the Western waters than any previous one, and the aggregate accidents to and losses of vessels this year exceed those of any other by 341. The whole number was 1297.

☞ At the suggestion of Henry Ward Beecher, three deaconesses were chosen at the annual meeting of Plymouth Church, Brooklyn, on Friday evening last, to assist the deacons in their duties as visitors to the sick and poor.

☞ A car is building in California for the first through trip to New York over the Pacific Railroad. The finish is to be of California laurel.

☞ A modest and well dressed young woman lately entered a justice's office in Chicago, and requested that the oath of total abstinence be administered to her. She had a love for intoxicating liquor which she could not subdue, and wished to "swear off" entirely. The oath was duly taken.

☞ The population of the Uunited States, taken by revenue officers, approaches thirty-seven millions, and about a ninth of the whole are colored persons.

Notice.

Elder Miles Grant will deliver a course of lectures in Washburn Hall, Worcester, Mass., commencing Tuesday evening, Dec. 22d, and continuing every evening through the week. The lectures are to be a review of several sermons, recently delivered in one of the Methodist churches of this city, against our views on several important points of doctrine contained in the Scriptures.

The week following the review, the church in W. purpose to hold a protracted meeting, commencing Wednesday evening, Dec. 30th, and continuing day and evening through the week, and over the following Sunday. The object of the meeting is the diffusion of gospel light, and the salvation of our fellow men. A cordial invitation is extended to preachers, and all others who feel that God would have them come to this meeting, and labor with us in the cause of truth. Eld. J. Couch will be present, and A. A. Phelps is expected.

N. Lazelle,
Wm. F. Collier, } Committee.

Mass. A. C. Conference.

To the churches in Mass., looking for the consummation of "our hope," greeting: Whereas, the time for holding the next quarterly session of our State conference is at hand; and whereas, the Bethel church in Springfield have requested said session to be holden with them, commencing Wednesday, Jan. 13th, to continue over the following Lord's day; therefore, an invitation is hereby extended to all the Advent churches in the State to send delegates to said session of the conference; also to preachers in this and adjacent States to join with us in one more effort for God. And may God add his blessing.

Per order, E. Owen, Clerk.

Ministerial Conf. at Richmond, Me.

The sixth Ministerial Advent Conference will meet at Richmond, (Reed meeting-house), Tuesday, Jan. 12th, 1869, at half past six o'clock P. M. Preaching at a quarter past seven o'clock. Our preaching brethren are earnestly requested to report themselves, either in person, or by letter, and all preachers in the State, in fellowship with the conference, wishing to become members, are invited to signify their desire by writing to the Secretary before the meeting. Come with hearts filled with love, that we may advance the gospel of the kingdom, and work together for the salvation of the perishing. N. G. Reed, President.

L. F. Cole, Secretary.

Maine Central Quar. Conference.

The next session of this conference will be held in the Academy, in West Gardiner, commencing Thursday, Jan. 7th, 1869, at seven o'clock P. M., and continue over Sunday. Come, brethren and sisters, let us go up to this meeting prepared to work for the Lord. Ministering brethren are invited. Those coming from abroad will inquire for James Spears, who will direct to places of entertainment. W. A. Knight, Secretary.

Notice.

The annual meeting of the Missouri Advent Christian Conference will be held at the Advent Christian Hall, corner of 5th and Biddle Streets, St. Louis, commencing Saturday morning, Jan. 2d, at 10 A. M., to continue over the Sabbath. A general attendance is requested, as the election of officers for the ensuing year, and other matters of importance, will come before the meeting. Brethren from abroad are cordially invited to be present at this meeting. In behalf of the Board,

Hiram Beadle, Secretary.

Watch Meeting.

If the Lord will, there will be a meeting in Westfield, Mass., (where E. A. Eggleston may arrange,) commencing Dec. 31st, and continuing over Sunday, Jan. 3d. H. L. Hastings and others are expected to be present.

Notice.

A protracted meeting is to commence in Waverly Hall, South Framingham, Mass., Tuesday evening, Dec. 29th, and continue over the following Sunday. Preaching every evening through the week, and three times Sunday. L. Boutell.

ZION'S HEIGHTS.

What wonders does my Lord portray
In vision to my sight;
I see the realms of endless day,
And rivers of delight.

I see the city's splendor rise,
The temple of our God;
And lo! with joy and great surprise,
I see the heavenly road.

I see the saints on the highway,
Where the redeemed shall walk;
In glory bright, in heaven's noonday,
Which blessings Jesus bought.

I hear celestial harpings now,
In honor to our God;
The saints in concert all do bow
Prostrate before the Lord.

I see the new earth's paradise,
In beautiful array;
And tempted hills rise to my sight,
Where shines eternal day.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCH OF NAPOLEON III.—No. 4.

BY M. D. W.

(Concluded.)

There was no place on the continent to which Hortense could retire with her son Louis, now implicated in a revolutionary rising against Austrian despotism. By a law of the Bourbons, enacted in 1816, the entrance into France of any member of the imperial family was prohibited, under penalty of death. But a revolution banishing the elder branch of the Bourbons, and establishing the Duke of Orleans on the throne, had opened the way, as Hortense hoped, for this prohibition to be less astringent; and in view of past favors shown by Napoleon I. to the Orleans family, she ventured to enter incognito with her son Louis, then ill with fever. She wrote a letter to Louis Philippe, imploring his protection, while the prince also wrote, asking permission to join the French army. The king was greatly embarrassed. His throne was by no means secure, and he feared the consequences of granting these requests. Hortense was only allowed to remain one week in the city, and that in privacy. In a few days, an imperative command came for them to depart immediately, and they then took passage for England. Here they spent several months very pleasantly, when a document was received from the authorities of the canton of Thurgovia, conferring upon Louis Napoleon the right of communal citizenship, stating as a reason for this honor, the many favors which the canton had received from Queen Hortense.

The prince thanked them for the honor conferred, and as a result of this kindly feeling then manifested, they decided to return to Arenemburg. But this they found it exceeding difficult to do, on account of the strict law of banishment which exposed them to death if they violated its restrictions. At length, Louis Philippe granted them to pass through the northern part of France, provided the queen would go disguised, under the title of the Baroness of Arenemburg, and they should both pledge themselves not to enter Paris. They arrived at their calm and peaceful retreat amid the mountains of Switzerland in safety, and here Louis gave himself up to reflection, study, and authorship. He wrote a pamphlet setting forth his political views, entitled "Political Reveries," in which his republican principles were set forth, yet not after the pattern of our own republic. He believed that the representation of the nation should be chosen by all the people without distinction; but he "prefers the monarchial form, because" he says, "I think that government better suited to France, since it gives stronger guaranties for tranquillity, power, and liberty.

"If the Rhine were an ocean, if virtue were always the only moving power, if merit alone secured promotion, then I should wish for a republic, pure and simple. But, surrounded as we are by powerful enemies, who have at their command thousands of soldiers, who can re-enact among us the irruptions of the barbarians, I think that a republic would not be able to repel foreign invasion and to suppress civil agitations without having recourse to vigorous measures which would endanger liberty. I wish for a government which can secure all the advantages of a republic without involving its inconveniences; in a word, a government which shall be strong without despotism, free without anarchy, independent without conquests. The following should be the fundamental principles of such a constitution: The three powers of the State should be the people, the legislative corps, and the emperor. The people should have the elective power, the emperor the legislative power. . . Harmony between the government and the governed can only exist in two ways,—when the people permit themselves to be governed by a single will, and when the chief governs in accordance with the wishes of the people. In the first case it is despotism; in the second it is liberty."

We have quoted thus briefly from the pamphlet to show what Napoleon's views were respecting the form of government, as put forth in the year 1832, as it is said that he claimed to be a republican, and by guile gained the throne. This shows what kind of a republic he advocated; "and it must be conceded," says Smucker, "that the constitution proposed by Louis Napoleon in 1832, has been retained by him, in its leading ideas, through all his subsequent career, until it became, in a great measure, realized by the memorable events of 1852."

Louis Philippe had scarcely taken his seat upon the throne, ere he found himself surrounded by extreme embarrassments. Legitimists, Republicans, Napoleonists, all alike disputed his title to the crown. The first serious efforts to thrust him from the throne were made on the occasion of the funeral of Gen. Lamarque. He was one of the most distinguished generals of Napoleon 1. Arms were secretly distributed, and leaders appointed, each with his particular part assigned. We have not space to detail the scene which followed; but the effort proved unsuccessful.

The Duke of Reichstadt, the only son of Napoleon and of Maria Louisa, and consequently the direct heir of whatever rights Napoleon could transmit, died at Schoenbrunn, near Vienna, on the 22nd of July, 1832, at the age of twenty-one years, and thus was Louis Napoleon brought one step nearer the throne of France, in the line of succession marked out by the Senate, and ratified by the almost unanimous voice of the French people. The decrees which secured the crown to Napoleon I. and his heirs, were presented to the people, to be sanctioned or rejected by the rights of universal suffrage. There were 3,524,254 votes cast. Of these, 3,521,675 were in the affirmative, and but 2,579 in the negative. "History," says Allison, "has recorded no example of so unanimous an approbation of the foundation of a dynasty; no instance of a nation so joyfully taking refuge in the stillness of despotism."—Vol. 2, p. 236.

"From the day of the death of the Duke of Reichstadt, the eyes of all who desired the the restoration of the empire were directed to the young Prince Louis Napoleon. He was now the sole heir to the imperial sceptre, after his uncle Joseph, and his own sick and dying father. The hopes which Lafayette, as we have seen in his interview with Josepe Bonaparte, reposes on Napoleon's son, he now transferred to his nephew. Bitterly disappointed in Louis Philippe, whom he had so signally helped to place upon the throne, Lafayette hoped for the establishment of the long-desired republic, under the ægis of the heir of the emperor. This distinguished advocate of popular rights had ever avowed himself a republican in principle, still he affirmed that France needed monarchial forms.

"Every day the government of Louis Philippe was growing more unpopular. Very many of the Liberal or Republican party were turning their eyes to Louis Napoleon as the only hope of France. . . . In all of his writings, he had proved himself the able advocate of popular liberty, proclaiming his faith in universal suffrage, and declaring the will of the people to be the only true foundation of government. He had avowed himself the firm friend of republican principles, while at the same time he had expressed his conviction that, in the present situation of France, monarchial forms were essential to the nation."

One of the leading Republicans wrote to the prince from Paris, stating that the life of the king was daily threatened, and assuring him that their eyes were turned to him. "The great name you bear, your opinions, your character, every thing induces us to see in you a point of rallying for the popular cause. Hold yourself ready for action; and when the time shall come, your friends will not fail you."

From his retreat at Arenemburg, Louis Napoleon watched these events with hopeful eye, fully believing the hour was at hand when the people of France would welcome back the heir of the emperor Bonaparte. But he was too much in haste, after all. He did not bide his time as he ought, and the defeat at Strasburg was the result. The tide was turned by the tactics of Col. M. Taillandier, who suddenly cried out in loud and angry tones: "The man before you is not the nephew of the emperor. He is a base deceiver. He is the nephew of Col. Vaudrey. We know him well. This is a plot in favor of Charles X." Great confusion was the result, and in the midst of it Louis Napoleon was seized and imprisoned. Particulars we have not room to give. He was exiled, and came to New York.

Respecting his life during the few months of his stay in that city, there are conflicting accounts. On the one hand, it is said that he was dissipated and profligate. On the other hand, it is stated that these are utterly false, and a long letter written by the Rev. Charles S. Stewart, chaplain of the United States Navy, is given, addressed to the editor of the "National Intelligencer," Washington, D. C., in which he utterly repudiates the stories so rife respecting Louis Napoleon, stating that his intercourse with him was almost daily for two months, and that not for hours only, but of days, and ended only by his departure from New York to hasten to the bedside of his dying mother. He says that his associations were with the first and most distinguished citizens of New York, of whom Washington Irving was one, Chancellor Kent another, and the Hamiltons and Livingstons, and others. He testifies that he never heard a sentiment from him, and never witnessed a feeling, that could detract from his honor and purity as a man, or his dignity as a prince. This letter is very full, and flattering to the character of Napoleon, so far as it came under his own observation, and he published it in 1856. He says there was at the same time, and for about the same period, a Prince Bonaparte resident in New York, whose antecedents in Europe had not been favorable, and his reputation here was not good, and he thinks the acts and character of the one may have been confounded with the other.

Now we are far from believing that Napoleon is a saint, but you know the old adage, "Give the devil his due"; so we give him the benefit of this eulogy, and that of others who testify from acquaintance. But we must not detain you longer to describe the events which followed his return to Arenemburg, and finally led to his establishment upon the throne of France. We are interested in his history, for we believe the Napoleon dynasty to be marked in the prophetic word. We trace a guiding hand in his career just as clearly as we trace it in that of Cyrus, whose work was predicted centuries before his birth. If Cyrus was the Lord's servant, so is Napoleon. Yet this does not constitute them saved men by any means.

We firmly believe that the present form of government in France constitutes the last of the Papal beast; yet we may be mistaken in our application of prophecy. All the world have wondered after its head, whether he be the one predicted, or otherwise. Important events are rapidly culminating. "Earthquakes in divers places," "the sea and waves roaring,"—what are they but precursors of final doom?

"SEARCH THE SCRIPTURES."

John. 5: 29.

It is very desirable that men should believe aright, and as a consequence act alike, or at least harmoniously. That this will not be effected to any great extent, man's present condition forbids; yet, as far as may be, we should seek a conformity to God's perfect standard—"see eye to eye." The great reason, we apprehend, for the want of harmonious views on the divine plan, is a failure to comply with the injunction of our dear Savior, whose words have a depth of meaning, and an importance of interest not easily expressed, and perhaps never fully understood.

"Search the Scriptures." If any class of persons might be exempt from personal effort in this direction, surely it was those favored with Christ's personal teachings. But no, Jesus, and also his apostles, although teachers sent of God, are ever referring their pupils to the Word as their rule of action. The Bereans understood this. Timothy was thus instructed (if we rightly understand Paul's language) by his devoted mother, Eunice; at least, from childhood he knew "the holy Scriptures." How can Christ's prayer be answered "santcify them through thy truth," if we fail to search and understand it? Truth, like earthly gain, to be appreciated, must be earned; not accepted second hand, but dug out by personal effort. The manner of doing this is that to which we wish to call attention. Get right in the sight of God; become childlike, exchange self-will for God's will; receive the Holy Ghost, then "follow on to know the Lord; read and hear freely, then take a good concordance and "try the spirits (doctrines) by the word." Take time, go through the Bible from Genesis to Revelations; get the Bible expression as a whole on the point of inquiry (remember, the witnesses are unimpeachable, any discrepancies, therefore, are only seemingly so), then sum up and bring forth your verdict; declare humbly yet fearlessly your convictions of truth; talk it out, live it out; then shall your righteousness be "as the light," and your "judgment as the noonday."

This is emphatically a fastage; so fast that men have almost lost sight of God's order for the attainment of any thing, be it earthly or heavenly. This impetuosity, this recklessness may do to "drown men in destruction and perdition," but to those who "are heirs of salvation," God has appointed a "more excellent way." O, my dear brethren, "cease ye from man;" accept no doctrine from him, be he ever so holy or wise, without proving it by the Word. Then shall we "stand" not "in the wisdom of men but in the power of God." A. BOYNTON.

"I ONLY SAID IT FOR FUN."

Did you? And still you profess to be a follower of the meek and lowly Jesus, and are looking for his speedy coming. Yet you crack your jokes, join in frivolous and foolish talking, and when your jokes set rather tight, you turn it all by saying, "O, I only said it for fun." How many times we hear this expression coming from the lips of those that profess better things. To such let me ask, Do you believe Christ to be a perfect pattern for us to follow? If so, let me ask again, Do we read of his ever cracking jokes, joining in foolish talking, or joining in any sinful amusement whatever?

Dear brethren and sisters, if Jesus is our example, let us follow him to the letter. O for more Israelites indeed, in whom there is no guile. How few there are at the present day that seem to realize that by their words they shall be justified, and by their words condemned; and that for every idle word they must give an account in the day of judgment. May the Lord help us so to live that the words of our mouths and the meditation of our hearts may be acceptable in his sight, is the prayer of your unworthy sister in Christ, MARY C. WHITAKER.

ACTIVE IN DOING GOOD.

In perusing a letter the other day, written by an earnest christian young man to his friend, we found this passage: "I believe in being active in doing good," and we thought the saying was a very suggestive one. The great demand of the church and kingdom of Christ to-day is for active, earnest, wide-awake, christian men and women! Satan is in earnest; all the forces of evil are awake; wicked men are on the alert; time is short; life is passing; souls are perishing; and eternity is just at hand! God calls! duty urges! the Master is near! A great work is to be done!—the world to be redeemed; the gospel preached "to all nations."

These passing moments are golden, eternal in their results! We are living for the future; traveling to the vast, mighty hereafter! The young man above alluded to has the right idea of life—a season of "active" labor for Christ. Not following after the vanities and follies of a wasted existence, but consecrating all, all to Jesus. Noble thought: "Active in doing good." Work for the dear Savior anywhere, everywhere, by thought, word, and deed.

Reader, go into the Sabbath school, the prayer-meeting, to labor and pray; circulate the tract and religious paper; remember the temperance cause also; improve your talent. Live for eternity. "Be active in doing good." Let not your life be a failure. Live for God and souls.—S. S. Times.—Selected by Chloe Lankton.

MASONIC CHASTITY.

A friend of mine belonged to a lodge, where a brother had been "overtaken in a fault," or an act so regarded by a christian community. The Masonic Fraternity, although they have a law of chastity, it is chastity peculiar to themselves; but they could not well avoid dealing with this erring brother in discipline, to save their own credit. He had not technically violated Masonic law, as an appeal to that law on chastity will show. The obligation of an Entered Apprentice does not come specially under the law in question, neither so does the Fellow Crafts-man. They are only taught generally that the white Masonic apron, so ostentatiously worn when parading the streets, is an "emblem of innocence." But the law is brought to bear directly upon the Master Mason, in the third degree, and forms a part of his oath and obligation. It is as follows:—

"I furthermore promise and swear, that I will not violate the chastity of a brother Master Mason's wife, mother, sister, daughter, I knowing them to be such."

No female, unless a relative of a brother Master Mason, is protected by this law. But as the Fraternity confine their charities, and other special kind offices, to their own "mystic brotherhood," why not that of chastity? They tell us, that if two Masons meet in opposite armies, and in the midst of a battle see on the opposite side "the grand hailing sign of distress," they are bound to "help to a brother's relief, so as to save his life at the risk of their own." That may be a very good Mason, but a very bad soldier.

But to our case of discipline. Unfortunately the offence was committed on the relative of a Master Mason. But the culprit was dependent on the saving clause of his obligation,—"I knowing her to be such." He satisfied the Lodge of his ignorance in this case, and was acquitted. Such is the excellency of Masonic law, in this case, over that of the Bible! Masonic law will be found so generally when put to the test. D. CAMPBELL.

— The cure of an evil tongue must be done at the heart. The weight and wheels are there, and the clock strikes according to their motion. A guileful heart makes a guileful tongue and lips. It is the work-house where is the forge of deceits and slanders; and the tongue is only the outer shop where they are vended, and the door to it. Such ware as is made within, such, and none other can come out.

COVERING THE TRACKS.

BY THOMAS M. CLARK, D. D., LL. D., BISHOP OF RHODE ISLAND.

It is not very easy for one who walks in miry places to cover his tracks. Where men go and what they do, is better known than they suppose. By picking their way carefully, and stepping very cautiously, some persons manage to evade observation for a long time; but, sooner or later, their sin is almost sure to find them out. Occasionally a transgressor tries to cover his tracks by assuming the show of extraordinary virtue. This, however, requires, a degree of watchfulness and skill, and I may add, of depravity, of which few are capable. An ingrained, systematic, conscious hypocrite is a rare monster. Nothing viler is conceivable. The sharpest anathemas that ever fell from the Savior's lips were hurled against those who, for a pretence, made long prayers. Whited sepulchres! What a picture this epitaph presents—polished, lustrous marble without; and within, dead men's bones and all uncleanness.

I have had dealings with one or two persons of this class; thank God, only one or two. If such creatures abounded, the world would be uninhabitable.

The following is a true story; I wish it were not. It is possible that the subject of it lives; if he does, I trust that he has long since repented in dust and ashes.

About thirty years ago, a young man presented himself at my door, decently but plainly clad; whose name, slightly altered, I will give as John Slyder. He entered the room with an air of great exhaustion, and after waiting awhile to recover his breath, proceeded to give me his history. It was very brief and simple, he had been left an orphan in early life, and and adopted into the family of a Connecticut farmer. Here he had been treated with shameful neglect and harshness; so overworked and under-fed, and exposed to such severities of weather, as to induce pulmonary disease, under the effects of which he now felt himself to be rapidly approaching his tomb. In order that the short remainder of his days might be passed in peace, he had escaped from the scene of his wretchedness, and found his way on foot to the city of Boston. Friendless and penniless, he now threw himself upon my christian sympathy, and begged my aid. He then went on in a strain of beautiful simplicity and fervor to speak of the comfort he had derived during all those long years of loneliness and sorrow, in the blessed support of the gospel, and all that he desired during the brief space that remained to him on earth, was to be able to do something for his Divine Master, when he should rejoice to lay his poor body in the grave and enter upon his eternal rest.

As he said all this in a tone of tremulous emotion, while at intervals a tear found its way down his pale and haggard cheek, I felt that if ever there was a case where the good offices of christian charity ought to be liberally exercised, it was in behalf of this suffering and saintly youth. I at once assured him, in the name of the church of which I was the Rector, that during the few weeks or months which might be allowed him here, all his temporal wants should be amply provided for. One of the first things to be done, was to buy for him a wire respirator; at that time considered a great protection to consumptives against the rawness of the atmosphere. This he usually wore when he called upon me, but I doubt if he often appeared with it in public at other times.

For nearly a year this young man went in and out amongst us, a pattern, as we thought, of godly living; no one in the parish seemed to be more active in every good word and work; if the weather was such as to allow his presence, he was always at church, and as a teacher in the Sunday school, he was considered to be eminent for his faithfulness and devotion; and whenever he came to my study, I felt rebuked by his superior goodness, and often wished that I could feel myself as far removed from all the vain attractions of the world, as his conversation and demeanor showed him to be.

So it went on until a certain morning, when the door bell rang, and a repulsive, rough-looking man was ushered in.

"I understand, sir," he said, "that you pay John Slyder's bills."

"I have done so, in some cases."

"Well, I've got an account against him, and I can't make him settle. I called to see if you would pay it."

"And may I ask, who you are?"

"My name is T——. and I keep a dance house down in Ann street."

"What are the items in your bill?"

"Why, there is quite a variety of charges; you may look over the account and see for yourself."

"Do you mean to tell me that John Slyder is a visitor at your establishment?"

"Yes, indeed; he'd be a first rate customer if he only paid."

I dismissed the man with the remark that I was not accustomed to discharge such accounts as this, out of church funds, and sat down to meditate.

"Can it be," I thought, "That this young man has been playing a part all this time, and actually obtaining his living by the practice of the vilest hypocrisy?"

"It was a terrible shock to be thus undeceived, but there was no resisting the melancholy conclusion. He had not only come to me, from week to week, with a lie in his mouth, but he had been guilty of the most awful blasphemy. He had not only

"Put on the livery of the court of heaven
To serve the devil in,"

but had earned his livelihood by the display of that livery.

I dreaded the next interview with the young imposter, and rather hoped that he would never cross my threshold again; but in a day or two he turned up, respirator and all, pale and short-breathed as ever, and took his seat in my study. It was evident that he had no suspicion of my having uncovered his tracks, and so he began to talk in his usual strain, which now was so revolting that I could not allow him to work himself up to any of his higher raptures, but, as soon as possible, interrupted him, with the remark:

"Mr. Slyder, I have found you out."

"What do you mean by that?"

"I have had a call from Mr. T——, who says that he keeps a dance house in Ann street."

"How came he to call upon you?"

"He brought a bill against you, which he wished me to pay."

"That is very strange."

"I consider it so."

"I am very much astonished that he should have presented such a bill to you."

"I should think you would be."

Then followed quite a long pause, during which I waited to hear if he had any explanation to offer; but he remained silent. At last I inquired, "Have you anything to say?"

He evidently saw that his case was desperate, and with an air of cool, impertinent assumption, that cannot be described, without the slightest faltering, replied:

"I have this to say, sir, I trust that the present experience may prove to be of service to you. You are not as well acquainted with the ways of the world—you are not as shrewd—as a man in your position should be. Let me tell you this for your information, if you should make careful inquiry, you would find a great many cases among your communicants that would surprise and trouble you as much as mine seems to have done."

Thereupon he rose from his seat; and, before I had time to say a word, bade me good morning very civilly, retired, and I saw his face no more.

Is there any reader of this narrative weak enough to suppose that such an instance as this throws any discredit upon genuine and earnest piety. Remember that, if there were no good money in circulation, there would be no counterfeits, and that even the hypocrite unwittingly testifies to the value of the virtue which he simulates.—Ledger.

"THAT'S ME!"—A poor Hottentot, in Southern Africa, lived with a good Dutchman, who kept up family prayer daily. One day he read, "Two men went up to the temple to pray." The poor savage, whose heart was already awakened, looked earnestly at the reader, and whispered, "Now I'll learn to pray." The Dutchman read on: "Lord, I thank thee that I am not as other men." "No, I am not, but I am worse," whispered the Hottentot again. The Dutchman read: "I fast twice in the week, I give tithes of all I possess." "I don't do that; I don't pray in that manner. What shall I do?" said the distressed savage. The good man read on until he came to the publican who "would not lift so much as his eyes to heaven." "That's me," cried his hearer. "Stood afar off," read the other. "That's where I am," said the Hottentot. "But smote upon his breast, saying, God be merciful to me a sinner." "That's me; that's my prayer," cried the poor savage, and smiting on his dark breast, he prayed, "God be merciful to me, a sinner," until, like the poor publican, he went down to his house a saved and happy man.

BE GENTLE.—When you cannot drive, you can always persuade. A gentle word, a kind look, a good natured smile, can work wonders and accomplish miracles. There is a secret pride in every heart that revolts at tyranny. You may order and drive an individual, but you cannot make him respect you. In the domestic circle especially kind words and looks are most essential to connubial felicity. Children should never be spoken harshly to. It does them no good. If they commit a fault, they should be corrected for it in a mild but firm manner, and the impression it makes will prove salutary.

THINK.—Thought engenders thought. Place one idea upon paper—another will follow it, and still another, until you have written a page. You cannot fathom your mind. There is a well of thought there which has no bottom. The more you draw from it, the more clear and fruitful it will be. If you neglect to think yourself, and use other people's thoughts, giving them utterance only, you will never know what you are capable of. At first your ideas come in lumps, homely and shapeless; but no matter—time and perseverance will arrange and refine them. Learn to think, and you will learn to write; the more you think, the better you express your idea.

SELECTING COWS.—"A Vermonter" gives the following as his rules for selecting a cow:

"First, I get a broadside view of the animal, at the distance of about two rods, as I have noticed for years that there was a great similarity in the general proportions of all first-class milkers, being very small in girth just back of their forward legs, as compared with the girth just forward of their hips. I never knew a first-rate milker, of any breed not thus proportioned; so that if this form is wanting in an animal recommended to me, I do not care to look at her more, unless I want a breeder for some other purpose than the dairy. For breeding oxen, I should want a cow of reverse proportions—i. e. larger girth forward. I next feel the size of the milk veins, and trace them to their entrance into the chest, which, in superior cows are large, admitting the ball of the larger finger; if divided, or sub-divided, as is sometimes the case, I judge of the size of each orifice, as I care less for the vein itself, than the orifice. Next I examine, by sight and touch, the udder or bag, which must be capacious in order to hold much milk, with teats wide apart and free from large seed warts, or sores of any kind; I then inquire how long she goes dry before calving, as I don't want a family cow to give milk less than forty-six weeks out of every fifty-two; also as to the quality of milk; and to close, I milk her with my own hands."

— True religion begins in prayer, and in prayer more than anything else is it exercised.

— Some men make themselves a great name by the perpetual ruin of their good one.

— Keep aloof from sadness, for sadness is sickness of the soul.

— Avoid evil speaking, and give your counsel to him who will accept it.

— Keep thy tongue carefully; it may honor, it may also condemn thee.

— If thou wax angry, speak little, and that little not vehemently.

— One contrition in man's heart is better than many flagellations.

— Care for what you say, or what you say will make you care.

— He who approbates wickedness condemns himself.

— God hears the heart, though without words; but he never hears words without the heart.

— No man has a right to expect the approbation of his neighbors, while he has the disapprobation of his own conscience.

— Fancy and humor early and constantly indulged, may expect an old age overrun with follies.

— He who receives a good turn should never forget it; he who does one should never remember it.

— Ceremony is always the companion of weak minds; it is a plant that will never grow in strong soil.

— Said a member of a church to another member: "I can give five dollars for this object and not feel it." "Then," said his companion, "give ten and feel it. Did not the Savior feel what he did for you?"

— Work with a will, and also with your hands and head. It is such that achieve the great things of the world. Nothing is easy that has value. Laziness and sloth never raised a man above the grade of a monkey. Work does the thing, the right thing, and the whole thing.

— It is an easy matter to sit at ease and let the ship go with the wind and tide to leeward, but hard to suffer the fate that awaits her on the lee-shore. So it is an easy matter to float with the multitude down the broad road to ruin; but a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God.

— Prayer is a retirement from earth to attend on God, and hold correspondence with him that dwells in heaven. The things of this world, therefore, must be commanded to stand by for a season, and to abide at the foot of the mount while we walk up higher to offer up our sacrifices as Abraham did, and to meet our God.

— If you do not wish to speak ill of any, do not delight to hear ill of them. Give no countenance to busybodies, and those who love to talk of other men's faults; or if you cannot decently reprove them on account of their quality, then direct the discourse some other way; or if you cannot do that, by seeming not to mind it, you may sufficiently signify that you do not like it.

— The moment a man parts with moral independence, the moment he judges of a duty, not from the inward voice, but from the interest and will of a party, the moment he commits himself to a leader or a party, and winks at evil because divisions would hurt the cause, the moment he shakes off his particular responsibility, because he is but one of the thousand or million by whom the evil is done; that moment he parts with his moral power. He is shorn of the energy of a single-hearted faith in the right and true.

PHYSIOLOGICAL LETTERS.—No. 11.

Before dismissing the topic which I was considering in my last paper, I would offer the following practical suggestions which may be of use to some persons; they will be of no use to to those that have the extraordinary faculty of going to sleep on any and every occasion, and who cannot even keep awake to hear a dry lecture. Such sleepers are often seen at church, resting their brains. By the way, it is wonderful, since some persons sleep so much, that their brains are not more active when they are awake. They ought to be exceedingly intellectual people, if sleeping has anything to do with brain-making. It is not such persons; it is the nervous, restless, careworn—those that find it hard work to go to sleep when they go to bed—that I am addressing. Never go to bed with your mind revolving the transactions of the day. Read a chapter from some interesting story, a page from "Katharina," just to kindle the imagination a little, and break off the predominant current of thought. Then, when you go to bed, go in a mood for pleasant reverie, and you will luxuriate in sleep.

Another hint, I have said that anything which earnestly engages the attention is antagonistic to sleep. All uncomfortable sensations are in this category; then don't oppress the stomach. The latter is not a very sensitive organ, and in a state of health the brain is not cognizant of the work of digestion. Therefore, don't let your brain know that you have a stomach, and your sleep will not be disturbed by dyspeptic sensations.

"To be easy all night,
Let your supper be light,
Or else you'll complain
Of a stomach in pain."

I have said that in sound sleep people never dream. Dreams are to be considered a mark of imperfect sleep; as an indication either that we have had about sleep enough, and that the brain is spontaneously waking up, or that some source of irritation exists in some part of the body, which disturbs the brain, and has the power to awaken some, though not all of the cerebral faculties. Hence, if your sleep be too dreamy, you awake unrefreshed. That bit of pastry, or that rich custard may cause bad dreams. If we would take good care of our brains, we must take good care of our stomachs.

I spoke of dreaming as being a stage in advance of sound sleep. There may, however, be an absence of this, as of the preliminary stages. There are some persons that have the power to go to sleep instantly, and who seldom or never dream. H.

OAT MEAL PUDDING.

We take pleasure in commending to our readers oat-meal pudding as an article of diet. We have used it for several years, and should not like to be without it. It gives animation to the system, as well as nourishment. It is a cheap article of food, and very healthy. The following is from The Church Union:—

"It is one of the strangest considerations in our whole system of living that the laboring classes will not learn to eat that kind of food which will give them the most muscle. A hard-working man does not want food that will repair the waste of the brain. But he wants something that will impart strength to his sinews. Oat meal will do it. Children that are romping and playing like young colts all day, will feast on oat meal pudding and milk. Nothing is better for them. And if mothers would have their children grow up clear-eyed and comely, with frames of bone and not of cartilage, with transparent complexions instead of muddy ones, with full and well rounded limbs instead of scrawny ones, they should not always set before them bread of fine flour and highly seasoned meats, but give them four or five times a week a breakfast of oat meal mush. Do not say that they don't like it. Perhaps you don't know how to prepare it properly. The Scotch method of preporing oat meal is to make a very thin mush, a little thicker than gruel. The water should be salted when the meal is stirred in, and the boiling should continue three to five minutes (not more) after the thickness is finished. This eaten with sugar and milk, with milk alone, or with syrup, is highly palatable, and is generally liked by children whose tastes are not vitiated by indulgence. Oaten bannocks are made by mixing the meal with water and a little salt, and baking it in little patty-pans about twenty minutes, or they may be baked on a griddle."

TO WHOM IT MAY CONCERN.

☞ PREACHERS INCLUDED PARTICULARLY.

I must and I will enter my decided and most earnest protest, now and ever, against the mean, dirty, disgraceful SIN of using tobacco. I will not go into the baneful effects of the vile narcotic upon your system; everybody almost, excepting yourselves, can see and smell the effects of the nauseous weed. Why, in the name of common decency, do you indulge in its use? How it looks to see a christian, especially a minister of the gospel, and more so, one of the gospel of the kingdom, having a huge, nasty pipe in his mouth, or a cigar, puffing away with all the gusto of a bar-room loafer, or contemptible prize-fighter, rough cut-throat, and pickpocket! How your breath smells—ugh! awful! Aren't you ashamed of yourselves, all of you, individually and collectively; and you who don't smoke, but chew the miserable stuff? What good does it do you to roll it over and over in your mouth just like a North-street, Five-Points, and Water-street ruffian, or plug-ugly? What are you thinking about, when you stand in the desk to rebuke people for sin, when perhaps you have a quid in your mouth? Supposing you don't swear, or fight, or steal, or get drunk? You chew tobacco! and almost every low-lived vagabond does the same. You are not obliged to use it. You LIE, if you say you cannot live without it. I use strong language, for it is a strong evil. Now don't, for conscience' sake, and in the name of decency, don't use the stuff any more, either by chewing or smoking. Quit it! quit it! QUIT IT! for even sinners find out that you use the weed; and your preaching, or prayers, or exhortations, will not affect them as they might for good. You might as well try to drill a hole in the Bunker Hill Monument with a carrot, as to expect to do the good you ought and might, with your breath smelling of tobacco; or your hair, whiskers and clothing verily stinking offensively in the pure air of heaven, to the sense of decency, with the outrageous scent of a nasty old, or new pipe, clay or meerschaum, or a cabbage-leaf, or tobacco-plant cigar!

I've heard wicked men sneer at and about a minister, only because he chewed tobacco. I read of an old lady who dreamed that she died, and knocked at the door of the heavenly mansion for admission. The porter demanded her business there. She said she wanted to go in, and gave her name; he looked over the book, but could not find it. She declared it must be there, for she had been a christian for thirty years and more. He looked, and finally found her name in one corner, almost obliterated by tobacco-smoke, which had to be cleansed away before her name appeared plainly. On awaking, the dream frightened the old lady so that she smashed her pipe and threw away her tobacco, and the Lord kept her from using it, so long as the idol was banished.

Now, you smokers, smash your pipes, put your tobacco in the fire; chewers, take out your quid, throw it away, with all you have not tasted; and don't buy, borrow, nor beg any more. Take the money you are tempted to spend for it, and put it to some good use. Don't burn it, don't chew it. Stand up independent, free, straight, as a christian should, and ask the Lord to help you, and he will do it; I tell you. J. N. BERRY.

CURE FOR FITS.

BRO. GRANT:—My husband has had fits for about four years. I heard that the blood of box turtles would cure fits. I got two, and he took the blood, and he has had none since. A child who had fits was cured, and a young man also, in the same way. I thought some of the brethren or sisters might be glad to know of this, and try it for those who had fits.

Cut off the head, and let it bleed on sugar, and eat it. There is a joint on the under shell, by which they shut themselves in.

THE HEALTH OF CHILDREN.

The following rules have just been included in a report made to the New York Board of Health, by Dr. Stephen Smith. They have been approved by several eminent physicians, who have made the dieting of children a special study. They are worthy of preservation:

1. Preserve cleanliness of room, clothes and persons of children, and secure fresh air by open windows, resort to parks, ferries, etc. 2. Use light flannel covering of chest and bowels at all times, and other clothing to suit the change of weather. 3. Infants under one year, should, if possible, have a wet nurse. Until six months old they may nurse, not oftener than every two or three hours; over six months, five times in twenty-four hours. 4. If the child does not nurse, it must still take milk, which should be prepared as follows: Boil a teaspoonful of barley (ground in a coffee mill, or take prepared barley,) with a gill of water for fifteen minutes, to which add a little salt; to this add half the amount of boiled milk and a lump of loaf sugar; give it to the child lukewarm from a nursing bottle. The bottle and mouthpiece should be always kept in water when not in use. 5. If the child is over six months old, the boiled milk and barley water should be in equal quantities, with salt and loaf sugar. If the child is slightly costive, use farina instead of barley flour; if very costive, use oat meal gruel strained before it is mixed with the milk. 6. If the child is partly nursed, it should be fed sufficiently with food prepared as above directed; the child being nursed and fed alternately. 7. Beef tea or beef soup may be added to this food for infants of five months or older; when ten or twelve months old they may suck rare-done beefsteak. No child under two years of age should be allowed the miscellaneous diet of the table. 8. On the first appearance of the symptoms of the summer complaint (vomiting and purging) place the child under the care of a physician.

A HINT TO BALD-HEADED PEOPLE.

Frederick Kemp writes from the silver mines of Montana to the Herald of Health, giving the following hint in reference to a cure for his bald-headedness:

"A friend of mine, who had the misfortune to be bald-headed, knowing that there is a wonderful invigorating power in the sun's rays, last spring threw away his hat, and worked in the gulch all spring, summer, and fall, bare-headed, and also for the first few days at mid-day. For a few days the rays of the hot sun on his head were almost unendurable, (we think the dangerous point in the experiment is just here,) after that time he experienced no uneasiness whatever. The result was that in the fall he had a good head of hair. And in this experiment he was not alone: several of his aquaintances, who were bald-headed, having followed the same plan, they were all fortunate enough to experience the same result."

The editor adds that a similar case once came under his observation, and professes to have no doubt "the exposure of the skin to the air and sunshine, under proper circumstances, stimulates it to a healthy action, and with it those glands upon which the growth of the hair depends."

A HOME FOR THE WEARY.

Air.—"Love at home."

There's a home for all the blest,
When my Savior comes;
Where the weary ones shall rest,
When my Savior comes.
In that land of glory bright,
Saints shall walk with him in white,
Faith shall then be turned to sight,
When my Savior comes.

Chorus.—Jesus, come; come and reign;
O, my Savior, quickly come,
Come on earth to reign.

Signs are seen on every hand,
Jesus soon will come;
Signs in heaven, on sea and land,
Jesus soon will come.
Nations angry now appear,
Men's hearts failing them for fear,
For the things they see and hear;
Jesus soon will come.

All that sleep beneath the sod,
When my Savior comes,
Will awake to meet their God,
When my Savior comes.
All our friends we then shall meet,
All the faithful ones we'll greet,
At the lowly Jesus' feet,
When my Savior comes.

Then with all the ransomed throng,
When my Savior comes,
We will sing redemption's song,
When my Savior comes.
Glory be to Jesus' name!
Glory to the Lamb once slain!
He has come on earth to reign,
Glory to the Lamb.

For the World's Crisis.

THOUGHTS ON A FEW THINGS.

"In exchange for his soul."

A SCRIPTURE SEARCHED OUT.

A Baptist brother, an earnest worker, and a good man, in a practical exposition of the closing verses of Matt. 16th chapter, distinctly intimated the probable proximity of the Lord's second coming. He even thought it quite possible it might transpire in his own lifetime. So far, pretty well. He then dwelt with much earnestness on the "immense value of the soul," warning and exhorting his hearers to give attention to the business of salvation. So far, very well, too. Although adopting a line of remark, in which I looked every moment for a positive affirmation of soul-immortality, yet I believe he did not make an explicit asseveration of such a doctrine at that time. Doubtless with many of his hearers it was broadly inferable, and possibly he designed that it should be, from the general tenor of the exposition with the application. Especially would this inference be drawn from a declaration which he uttered with great positiveness and emphasis, in connection with the latter clause of the 26th verse,—a passage as familiar as almost any in the Bible. "For what is a man profited, if he shall gain the whole world and lose his own soul? Or what shall a man give in exchange for his soul?"

The language employed was substantially this: "This latter question, whatever interpretation may be given to it by some, teaches unequivocally one fact, and that is, that this man, of whom Jesus speaks, is in hell. And I am not afraid to meet all the teachers of a different view, that can be produced from Maine to the Gulf of Mexico." This, if not the exact phraseology employed, was nearly so, as well as I can recollect.

Precisely what value the speaker designed to have imputed to this language is implication of the immortality of the soul, or of the wicked, or in support of the tenet of eternal misery, I did not then, nor do I now feel perfectly certain; but it appeared very probable, that he intended to intimate the suffering of the soul, as a conscious entity, disembodied, and of course agonized with awful pangs, in a state intermediate between death and the judgment; or else the state of the wicked, after the resurrection, alive in misery, for ever.

Well, now then, in answer to this brother, if that was the real allegation he meant to make, I have to say simply, that no confidence, no boldness, no explicit or positive affirmation, will in itself constitute a guaranty of truth. No! As one of his congregation, and a humble searcher and teacher of God's word, I believe I feel a confidence every whit as strong as he can have, that the passage can not possibly bear his interpretation. And with every whit, the earnestness, the emphasis, and explicitness of his own affirmation, I would subjoin a deliberate negative. But affirmations settle nothing, so let us try argument.

Could I conveniently see this brother, or cite his attention, in some interval of arduous labor, to the subject, I should not utterly despair of an important modification of his view. I must candidly acknowledge that in view of the uniform teaching of Scripture, the tenacity and immense prevalence of faith in the immortality of the soul, seems to me something not merely unfortunate but awful. A perversion of the truth, so radical, so zealous, and still so unperceived and disowned, not merely alarms; it almost appalls. Compacted in the thoughts and beliefs of Christendom, and almost universal perhaps in their confessions of faith, it lies a deformity and a blot, inspiring the deepest sadness, and exciting a murmured wonder, that it should have been so falsely and fatally intercolated in the Christian system. A falsehood from the beginning, it has nevertheless become powerfully invested with a character of sanctity. Elevated to a position of the highest eminence in the confidence and regard of the church, through a persistent denial of necessity it evades, or of possibility it disdains every proposition to disprove or overthrow it. It is well content, like every proud and cherished lie, to be let alone. It hates agitation and examination. And it abhors every menace to the security it enjoys from having become sanctified in the popular esteem. It pleads immunity from question, and impregnableness to assault, from two considerations: First, because it is an axiom, and axioms can not be debated. Second, because it is so universally believed! Yes, and that is the victory of Satan. The power of the deceiver over men. The subjugation of the race to the original dogma (conveyed with the most flattering and plausible speech) that ruined mankind, through the first mother. But the word of God remains. The doctrine of Christ will stand. Man is not immortal, no! And if Jesus come not to raise the dead, he never will be. "Let God be true, but every man a liar." To the word and to the testimony.

The verse next preceding the one mentioned above is this: "For whosoever will save his life, shall lose it; and whosoever will lose his life for my sake, shall find it." The word life in this verse is psuche in the Greek, and is undeniably a correct rendering. It is precisely the same word rendered soul in the next verse; but why do the two renderings of the same word occur in immediate succession? That is a pregnant question. It is perfectly plain that, in the first place, to have translated psuche by the word soul, in the popular sense of an immortal soul, would have been utterly inconsistent. For then he who seeks his soul's salvation is miserably misguided, and is taking the very course to lose it; and he who will lose this imperilled immortality (by neglect, or intent,) will save it. No words need be wasted in showing the untenableness of such a view. But he who will sacrifice temporal pleasure, ease, honor, gain, to secure eternal glory, or will lose his earthly human life, to gain a heavenly, eternal life, shall realize the immeasurable compensation for the sacrifice, and vice versa. Now, then, why have we soul for life in the next verse? That is the question. Answer it who can! The fact is, it is unwarranted. The word life answers the meaning of psuche there, as perfectly as possible, and perfectly well in both cases. We have no right to wrest the Scriptures. We are compelled to reject the idea of an immortal soul in the first case. Let a man pause and beware, before he affirms that we are compelled to accept it in the second. When Jesus inquires, "What is a man profited if he shall gain the whole world, and lose his own life?" we find the language harmonious with the uniform tenor of Scripture, that "the wages of sin is death," and "the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord."

Relative to the second clause, "Or what shall a man give in exchange for his soul?" it is still true that the word life, which is the actual and necessary rendering in the previous verse, is the really proper one here also. The brother declared that this question demonstrated beyond possible cavil that the man must be in hell. But just take the reading suggested, "What shall a man give in exchange for his life?" and we shall presently find a difference. This we will proceed to show. Of all the race of man, God is the sovereign and rightful owner. "All souls are mine," he says; every creature lives by his power. But between the righteous and wicked there is a marked difference. Of the first, the apostle says, by direct address, "Ye are not your own, ye are bought with a price." This is a happy and wonderful relation of the christian to God, through the purchase of Jesus' blood. He belongs to God. But of the sinner, it is manifest that he is under condemnation. "He that believeth not, is condemned already." His life is entirely and absolutely forfeited to justice. "The soul that sinneth, it shall die." His life is already lost, in the light of his real relation to God as a moral being, and he only lives through the intercession of the Son of God, in a probation of pure mercy, and for the sake of making salvation yet possible through the gospel, upon repentance and faith in the great Sacrifice. "The Son of man is come to seek and to save that which is lost"; not will be, but is already; a door of mercy standing, however, yet open to him who will enter. The case is therefore plain. The sinner lives indeed on reprieve and probation, but his life is forfeited to justice. The law has a tremendous claim on him; he cannot escape it, and he can only answer it with his life. Now what can he give to gain his life? What will he furnish as a ransom for it? What will he produce in exchange for it? How can he satisfy justice? How can he redeem himself? He is "sold under sin." What purchase money will he provide, that he may obtain the release of his forfeited life? It can not be done. Suppose he gain the whole world; his life is forfeited, and if it is lost eternally, it will prove utterly useless and unprofitable to have achieved a momentary though vast emolument. What profit to gain infinite worldly good, with a forfeited life? Nor can such a man, with all his vast accumulations, cancel the forfeiture. What can he give in ransom for his life? Is this in hell? If so, the impossibility of the ransom is sufficiently obvious in the case of one who has gained, perchance, the whole world, but eternally lost his life. He would then be dead and extinct, and there would be lacking for his use not only the treasure he had gained, but lacking also the man himself. He could give nothing, certainly, in exchange for his life, if he did not exist.

We submit, then, that it is a case of suggested exchange, while a man is yet on earth, and condemned to die, and certain to die if he continue on as he is now, and as he does now. But if he is in hell, he can not be there forever, for of the wicked there shall be left "neither root nor branch." I am glad Bro. G. did not positively say he would be there forever. If the question of exchange applies to a man in hell, it applies to him while he is in the awful ordeal of destruction, in atticulo mortis, not when already destroyed, or dead. Or, again, it might apply to the wretched culprit at the judgment, when all the terrors of the coming doom of death are crowding on him, and when he would give uncounted millions for his life. O, the penalty of death is fearful enough! And methinks it is fearful to add to God's words, and impute to man that which he does not possess (an immortal soul), or impute to God that which he will not do, that is, torment an immortality eternally. He will never do it. And the sooner the falsehoods of this Romanism are recognized and recanted, the better, the better!

There is another fact or two in this connection. In the two verses, are two different verbs, both rendered alike; apolese, in the first, and zemiothe, in the second, each translated lose. The lexicon that I have, renders the latter word by "suffer detriment," as the first signification. The Bible Union version reads "gain the whole world, and forfeit his soul"; and the Diaglott, "forfeit his life." Says the great New Haven lexicographer, To forfeit, is "to alienate a right of possession by some neglect or crime." This is it exactly, and perfectly meets the case. Amplification seems needless. Let this thing be looked at. A teachable frame is the desideratum. Every thing taught is worth scanning. Not every thing taught is true. Neither belief nor assertion assures a truth. Neither can make a falsehood true. The fact is, then, the poor sinner can give no ransom, neither in this life, nor at the judgment, nor when he is dying, nor when he is dead. Blessed be God, if he will, he may now plead a ransom, to wit, the death and blood of Jesus. O, let him forthwith plead the mighty sacrifice of the Lamb of Calvary.

Only a word more. Does it not seem extraordinary that, in view of the very next verse in this series, which teaches the second coming of Christ, and the administration of rewards at that event (but neither before nor after), there are so many who unscripturally and categorically assign rewards to the dead before the judgment? Is it not a sight to see, that of so great a company of instructors inculcating the exerucìation of "immortal souls" in some abyss of agony before the Lord's return? Could we reach them with a humble word of admonition, we would ask, Is it not enough? Shall the error be cherished and championed still? Shall Jesus be dishonored by a representation that greatly reduces the necessity, the glory, and the moral dignity of his second coming? Is honor, is revenue, is temporal advantage, is sectarian bias or association, an impediment both to a detection and repudiation of the error? Where is heroism, where is honesty, where is faith to the doctrine of Christ, instead of a false tradition? The times are perilous, and it does seem at least a question worth propounding, whether in a perfect preparation for the coming and kingdom of Christ, there is not needed an intelligent and resolute rejection of the corrupt theologism which gives such dire advantage to the Devil, to the open detriment of the blessed doctrine of God? Woe be to that vain imagination that subserves, or subverts, or subjects to pride, to prejudice, or to expediency, the only and absolute hope of the church,—the coming of Jesus in power. Then, and then only, can come immortality; and if Jesus never comes, the whole host of God's elect will remain eternally dead! C. Colegrove.

FAITH IN GOD.

We require sinners to believe God, believe the word, the plain simple statement, and accept it confidingly: but, brethren, would it not help them in this direction to show our faith by our works? Do we believe in God? Let us see; "Is any among you afflicted, let him pray." Is not this a general rule? Certainly. Well, "Is any sick among you, let him call for the elders of the church; and let them pray over him, anointing him with oil in the name of the Lord; and the prayer of faith shall save the sick, and the Lord shall raise him up; and if he have committed sins, they shall be forgiven him."—James. 5: 14–15. Is this obsolete? Perhaps it is almost in practice, but have we any warrat to efface it from the statute book? If not we had better follow the prescription, instead of running after all the quack nostrums of men, who are given over to all manner of "deceivableness of unrighteousness."

Suppose James, instead of his simple prescription had given us a specific similar to one of the learned Drs. of our day—a compound of costly ingredients (?), attested too by a long array of witnesses as to its wonderful efficacy; think you we should be slow to obtain, or faithless to use this elixer appointed by a servant of God? No. This generation forcibly reminds one of a circumstance narrated in Israel's history, of a man of nobility coming to one of God's prophets to be healed, and of his simple prescription, "Go wash seven times in Jordan, etc.," He went away in disdain of the simplicity of the divine arrangement; but a faithful Jewess convinced him of his error, and was God's agent to lead him to the truth. Would that some simple minded child of faith might now lead the church to accept God's true way of healing, that we might show to an unbelieving world that there is even now "a God in Israel." We are no advocate of fanaticism. We would not encourage a visionary faith, wild extravagance, or anything at all tending to such things; but we would beseech our brethren to believe God; to rest in the plain statement of the word.

Our teaching has led us to base faith on impulse and things of fancy quite too much; let the same law govern us as to faith in God's word which does towards each other. Our confidence is proportionate to the character or worth of the individual; then should our acceptance of God's words be without doubt, coming as they do from our Father, and confirmed by the mediatorial love of Jesus, our elder brother, he who bore our sickness—carried our griefs. Will not God who so freely gave his Son for us, "with him also freely give us all things?" All things promised certainly. "Is there no balm in Gilead? is there no physician there? why then is not the health of the daughter of my people recovered?"

We do not claim James' direction as a universal specific, for many afflictions are God's agents, working salvation for his suffering people; but if he is pleased that we should be healed, he has in his word defined the way and the means. Many can certify to the efficacy of these means; why not, then, fully commit ourselves to God's appointed way, and suffer willingly, cheerfully, as for the Lord, or be made whole as he may please, and by a way that shall honor him?

HAIL, NEW-BORN DAY!

All hail! thou morn of Zion's glory,
That brings the saints' long-looked for day;
That prophets, kings have sung in story,
For lo! thy beams doth round us play.
Hail, new-born day!

We hail the fair creation morning,
That brings new life to sleeping saints;
The throne of God the earth adorinng,
The crystal river proceeding thence.
Hail, new-born day!

The song of Moses and the Lamb,
The saved millions now will sing;
And waiving there the conqueror's wand,
Will make the very new earth ring.
Hail, new-born day!

O hail! thou coming King of kings,
We love the impress thy name gives;
Thy kingdom come and change all things,
That we may live with him who lives.
Hail, new-born day!

MATERIALISM.—ITS DEFENSE.

2. Materialism believes and maintains the doctrine of this scripture—"And the Word was made flesh, and dwelt among us," etc. John 1: 14. We, as materialists, affirm that "the only begotten Son of God" is a material, physical being; that in his divine nature and essence he "came out from God," and "forth from the Father," as "the begotten Word," and "the first-born of every creature," and became incarnate, as described in Luke 1: 26–35. Therefore, we recognize in "the babe of Bethlehem" the son of the Virgin Mary, first begotten, "the Son of the Highest"; and like Archbishop Fenelon can say, "I adore thee, O Infant Jesus; naked, and lying in a manger." We recognize in "Jesus of Nazareth, a man approved of God . . . by miracles and wonders and signs, which God did by him," the "man of sorrows, and acquainted with grief," who "went about doing good"; "the only begotten Son of God," whom God sent into the world, that "whosoever believeth on him should not perish, but have everlasting life" (John 3: 16); and we worship him and say, "Thou art the Christ, the Son of God."

We recognize in the crucified Nazarene, under the title written by Pilate and put on the cross—"Jesus of Nazareth, the King of the Jews"—"the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world"; and hope to ever sing, "Unto him that loved us, and washed us from our sins in his own blood, and hath made us kings and priests unto God and his Father; to him be glory and dominion forever and ever."

The Spiritists of this age, had they lived in Christ's day, when on earth in humiliation, like the Jewish church—"Scribes and Pharisees"—would have "despised and rejected" him; and because he was a material being! for they would have nothing to do with materialism. Who among these Doctors of Divinity, who scout at materialism, would have acted differently from the Jewish Sanhedrim, and the teachers and instructors in the law, at the enunciation that "his star" had appeared? Would they have been found journeying to Bethlehem with the "wise men" of "the east" to pay their respects unto the infant child Jesus, and give of their treasures, and more, the adoration of their hearts? Would our teachers, instructors, and members of our churches, have been among those "waiting for the consolation of Israel," like Simeon and Anna, and many others, and happy to live in the day when their eyes could see his salvation, and when "the day-spring from on high" had visited them, in the person of a helpless, infant material babe, in the arms of a lowly virgin? Would our haughty sisters who walk up the aisles of our beautiful churches, arrayed in their silks, satins, and costly apparel, and sit on cushioned seats, and kneel on carpeted ottomans, have soiled their garments, or so degraded their delicate, lady-like persons, by entering a stable and an ass's stall, and taking from the manger a "babe wrapped in swaddling clothes," and adored him as the Messiah which was to come? Doubted. This would be too humiliating to feet so delicate as only to walk on rich carpets to hear the gospel, and hands so fair as only to minister to self-pride, and fancied and imaginative souls so spiritistic as to feed on airy and etherial nothings, as a fulfillment of God's word, instead of the "substance" God has promised as an inheritance to his people.

And where are the churches, ministers, and people, who would have "left all and followed" the "Nazarene," among the spiritists of this age? "What! he the Messiah?" "Nay, verily. We are not materialists." "God's Son won't be manifested in such a manner." "He won't come in the form of man." How could they have borne this test truth—"Every spirit that confesseth that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh is of God; and every spirit that confesseth not that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh is not of God; and this is that spirit of Antichrist, whereof ye have heard that it should come; and even now already is it in the world."—1 John 4: 2, 3. But are not our ministers and churches "materialists"? Do they not at the communion table of the Lord attest their faith in "materialism"? or do they eat and drink damnation to themselves, "not discerning the Lord's body"?—1 Cor. 11: 29.

3. Materialism believes and defends this scripture: "He rose again the third day." 1 Cor. 15: 4. Mark! that "Christ," who "died for our sins according to the Scriptures; and . . . was buried; . . . rose again the third day according to the Scriptures") 1 Cor. 15: 3, 4); that "he showed himself alive after his passion, by many infallible proofs" (Acts 1: 3); "was seen" by "witnesses" who attested, "This Jesus hath God raised up, whereof we all are witnesses," even to the number of "five hundred brethren," who saw him at one and the same time; "the greater part" of whom remain living witnesses down to A. D. 59!—1 Cor. 15.

Materialists believe his own words: "Behold my hands and my feet, that it is I myself; handle me and see; for a spirit hath not flesh and bones, as ye see me have." "And when he had thus spoken, he showed them his hands and his feet," and while they were filled with "joy" and yet "wondered" in unbelief, he ate and drank with them, after his resurrection, to disperse all unbelief, and fully convince them without a doubt; and whose doubts and unbelief all gave way under the evidences of the marvellous and miraculous event, even to that of the most unbelieving of them all—Thomas, who said, "Except I shall see in his hands the print of the nails, and put my finger into the print of the nails, and thrust my hand into his side, I will not believe"; and who had the privilege of handling "the Word of life." They, believing in this truth, rejoiced and were blessed; and so are materialists blessed, even down to this day; for, says Jesus, "Because thou hast seen me, thou hast believed; blessed are they that have not seen, and yet have believed."—John 19. Believing the declaration, "I am he that liveth, and was dead; and behold, I am alive forevermore, Amen; and have the keys of hell and of death" (Rev. 1: 18); and that "his flesh did not see corruption," we know we have a living Redeemer, even the same Christ who came in our humanity to save and redeem us from sin and the curse. Like Job (chap. 19) and Peter (1 Pet. 1), we have been begotten to "a lively hope by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead." Therefore, we confess the doctrine with the mouth, and believe it in the heart (Rom. 10: 9, 10), and we shadow it forth by immersion. Rom. 6: 3, 5; 1 Cor. 15: 29.

Spiritism denies his actual resurrection, and declares that his body was either "stolen" from the sepulchre (Matt. 27: 62–66; 28: 11–15); or was dissipated in dissolution and death; and thus confronts the testimony of the Scriptures—"Neither did his flesh see corruption"; "Thou shalt not suffer thine Holy One to see corruption." Ps. 16: 10; Acts 2: 31; 10: 35.

4. Materialism believes and maintains the doctrine of the resurrection of the dead, based upon the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead, or what the apostle terms the gospel. Hence, believes and teaches these Scriptures:—"Moreover, brethren, I declare unto you the Gospel, which I preached unto you, which also ye have received, and wherein ye stand; by which also ye are saved, if ye keep in memory what I preached unto you, unless ye have believed in vain. For I delivered unto you first of all that which I also received,—[and mark the fact, as he says in another letter, 'Though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that ye have received, let him be accursed,' etc.—Gal. 1: 8, 9],—how that Christ died for our sins according to the Scriptures; and that he was buried, and that he rose again the third day according to the Scriptures. . . . Now if Christ be preached that he rose from the dead, how say some among you that there is no resurrection of the dead?" This departure from the faith and hope of "the resurrection of the dead," was seen in both the Corinthian and Galatian churches in Paul's day, and merited this rebuke in the above passage, and the following language to the Galatians: "I marvel that ye are so soon removed from him that called you into the grace of Christ unto another gospel; which is not another; but there be some that trouble you, and would pervert the gospel of Christ. . . . As we said before, so say I now again unto you, if any man preach any other gospel unto you than that ye have received, let him be accursed." (Gal. 1: 6–9.)

The apostle then argues at length the doctrine of the resurrection, maintaining that the only hope of future life was dependent upon it; and that "if Christ be not raised," and "if the dead rise not, . . . then they also which are fallen asleep in Christ are perished!" That "if the dead rise not at all," he "protested" that as to any future "hope" or "advantage" to be realized to himself or others for trusting in Christ, and suffering for and with him, there was none; and declares, if this be so, and it be really true, that "the dead rise not, . . . let us eat and drink; for to-morrow we die." 1 Cor. 15. As says Bishop Whatley, "To deny the resurrection is to represent christians as having hope in this life only, and those who have fallen asleep in Christ as having perished (vs. 18, 19). As for any future existence, as the ancient philosophers described, I do not consider it worth a thought."—Whately's Future State, p. 26.

In Dr. Adam Clarke's Notes on 1 Cor. 15, he says: "One remark I cannot help making: the doctrine of the resurrection appears to have been thought of much more consequence among the primitive christians than now. How is this? The apostles were continually insisting on it, and inciting the followers of God to diligence, obedience, and cheerfulness through it; and their successors in the present day seldom mention it! So apostles preached, and primitive christians believed. So we preach, and so our hearers believe. There is no doctrine in the present system of preaching which is treated with more neglect." And if this was true in Dr. Clarke's day, it is verily true in ours, and even more so!

Wm. Tyndal, the translator of the Scriptures into the English language, and who labored so indefatigably for years to give his countrymen the word of life, earnestly says: "Concerning the resurrection, I protest before God and our Savior Jesus Christ, and before the Universal Congregation, that believeth in him, that I believe according to the open and manifest Scriptures and Catholic faith, that Christ is risen again in the flesh which he received of his mother, the Virgin Mary, and body wherein he died. And that we all shall, both good and bad, rise both flesh and body, and appear together before the judgment seat of Christ; and that the bodies of all that believe, and continue in the true faith of Christ, shall be endued with like immortality and glory as is the body of Christ."

Here is the man who said to the Papal priests of his day, who rebuked his endeavor to give the Scriptures to the people in their own vernacular tongue, "I will cause the boy that driveth the plough to know more of the Scriptures than you do"; and whose prophecy has been most wonderfully fulfilled. And he is the man, too, who said to the Spiritists of his own day, in the persons of the Catholic priesthood, so ignorant of the Scriptures: "In putting departed souls in heaven, hell, or purgatory, you destroy the arguments wherewith Christ and Paul prove the resurrection; for tell me, if the souls be in heaven, in what better condition will the angels be; and then what need of a resurrection?"

Calvin, stirred to the very depths of his being by the absurdities of the Spiritists of his age, says: "We hear these gallants speaking of nothing but spirit, that the word of God is only spirit, that Jesus Christ is likewise spirit, and that we are to be spirit with him."

We need something of the noble boldness of these men, with an increased light upon the word of God in this "the time of the end," to rebuke the Spiritualists of every name and place in our apostate age, and, like "men in understanding," to stand up for "Jesus and the resurrection." O. R. Fassett.

"DO ALL TO THE GLORY OF GOD."

1 Cor. 10: 31.

Man looks at the act; God looks at the motive. Man judges from outward appearance; but the Lord judges the heart, and Jesus says, "Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God." Many seemingly noble deeds are prompted by base motives; and many little kindnesses that win the hearts of the undiscerning, are only the selfish means of obtaining objects that could not otherwise be gained. Many dollars have been given to gain the admiration of men, and many pleasant words have been spoken solely with the desire to win favors and friendship. Many meetings are held, articles written, prayers recited, and tracts and papers distributed, not with a pure desire to glorify God, spread the truth, and save sinners, but to please and get honor of fellow laborers.

And many wonder why the spoken word has so little power; why the story of redemption and the glad tidings of salvation move only the sympathies of the hearers, not touching the heart. "Not by might, nor by power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord." God never blesses a good deed done with a selfish motive.

When the hearts of men are laid bare before God and judged, many whose imperfections and crooked paths and errors have shocked the self-righteous, will be found pure, having "washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb"; and, being clothed with the righteousness of Christ, will be counted worthy to receive a crown of life; while many who have scrupulously cleaned the outside of the sepulchre, will be found inside full of filth and impurity.

HOLINESS.

"Holiness, without which no man shall see the Lord."—Heb. 12: 14.

Reader, how shall we ever find a place in the kingdom, when Jesus comes the second time to judge the world, if we die unholy? Death works no change; the grave makes no alteration. Each will rise again with the same character in which he breathed his last. Where will our place be, if we are strangers to holiness now? Suppose, for a moment, that you were allowed to enter upon the earth made new without holiness; what would you do? what possible enjoyment could you feel there? to which of all the saints would you join yourself? and by whose side would you sit down? Their pleasures are not your pleasures; their tastes are not your tastes; their character is not your character. How could you possibly be happy, if you had not been holy on the earth?

Now, perhaps you love the company of the light and the careless, the worldly-minded and the covetous, the reveller and the pleasure-seeker, the ungodly and the profane. There will be none such admitted into the kingdom when Jesus comes. Now, perhaps you think the saints of God too strict and particular and serious; you rather avoid them. You have no delight in their society. There will be no other company in the kingdom when Jesus gathers his jewels. Now, perhaps you think praying and Scripture-reading and hymn-singing dull, melancholy and stupid work, a thing to be tolerated now and then, but not enjoyed; and you reckon the Sabbath a burden and a weariness. You could not possibly spend more than a small part of it in worshiping God; but remember, when the earth is restored back to its Eden beauty and glory, it will be a never-ending Sabbath. How could an unholy man find pleasure in occupying such a place?

Think you that such an one would delight to meet David, and Paul, and John, after a life spent in doing the very things they spoke against? Would he take sweet counsel with them, think you? and would he rejoice to meet Jesus, the crucified one, face to face, after cleaving to the sins for which he died? Dear brothers and sisters, let us strive with all our might to honor Christ, our blessed Lord, so that when he comes to gather the dear saints, we may be honored by him.

COME HOME.

Poor backsliders, come home. Dear wanderers, how you are to be pitied! What a journey you have taken! and every step you take leads you further away from home.

What friends do you find? and what kind of living? We think you live on husks. Poor soul! how can you stand it? You say you will come home some time. That is the devil's time, but God's time is now. Satan makes many think they will start some time, but to delay is dangerous. Your thoughts sometimes turn back to the time when you were happy in the Lord; but oh, it is hard to return. You say, "A few more husks"; "a little while longer with swine"; "a few more days with those that hate God and his people." O, what business for one that has once loved the Lord! Yet we once heard you pray, and talk and sing about that beautiful land, the home of the blest. Perhaps to-night you are in a rum-shop, or some other bad place. The Lord have mercy on you. Thank his holy name, he does. Yes, he remembers and pities you.

I remember reading of a boy who thought he could do so much better away from home, that he settled his business and went away; but he had a hard time. But although he was ungrateful and wicked, his father loved him. I think that father often looked down the road before he saw his boy coming. We can almost imagine him talking of the robe and ring, saying, "These are for my boy who left home; I expect he will get sick and come back sometime." And when he looked down the road and saw him coming, and cried, "That is my boy; I know his step; I must go and meet him"; it seems as if we can hear the people say, "Don't be so foolish; he had no right to leave here as he did; and when he comes and says he did wrong, and is sorry, and wants you to forgive him, then it will be soon enough to speak to him." But the father ran and welcomed him, and was so glad to see his lost son that he made a feast. The elder brother did not like it, but that made no difference.

That is the way it will be with you, poor backslider, if you will come back to Father's house. What joy there would be if you would come back. You want to; why don't you come? God wants you to come; angels want you to come; all God's people want you to come. God wants to hear you praise him; Christ wants to hear you pray; the angels want to hear you sing; and we want to hear you again talk of the love of God. God wants to help you serve him. Come! We beg, we pray, we plead, we wish, we hope, we write; what more can we do? Will you come? We leave this with you, hoping you will come before it is forever too late. J. T. Kimball.

THOUGHTS ON THEOLOGY.

Bro. Grant:—I saw in the Crisis an account of a conversation between Bro. Ferguson and a Baptist minister, some points of which I wish to notice.

B. M. "The soul is immortal and cannot die." "I give thee charge, ... that thou keep this commandment without spot, unrebukeable, until the appearing of our Lord Jesus Christ, which in his times, he shall show, who is the blessed and only potentate, the King of kings and Lord of lords; who only hath immortality, dwelling in the light which no man can approach unto, whom no man hath seen or can see, to whom be honor and power everlasting."—1 Tim. 6: 13—16.

Questions. If "God only hath immortality," how can man have an "immortal soul" that "cannot die"? "The soul that sinneth, it shall die."—Ezek. 18: 20. Please notice it is the soul that dies, not "the house" (body) it lived in, as that (the body) could not be responsible for any thing it could not do of itself. "The wages of sin is death."—Rom. 6: 23. "But the fearful etc., . . . shall have their part in the lake that burneth with fire and brimstone; which is the second death." Rev. 21: 8.

Bro. F. "What part of man was it that rebelled and broke God's law, the body or the soul?"

B. M. "The soul, of course, it being the seat of all knowledge. Your soul is a part of God, and consequently cannot die."

The above amounts to just this, "the soul (a part of God)" sins, that is, it is God and not man that sins, consequently making God and not man the sinner. Truly, if the above is not infidelity what is?

The World's Crisis
AND SECOND ADVENT MESSENGER.

Boston, Wednesday, Dec. 30, 1868.

☞ Take Notice!

All subscriptions for the Crisis are payable IN ADVANCE, at the rate of $2.50 a year.

☞ Please Remember!

All remittances to this office, in the form of drafts, bank-checks and postal money-orders, should be made payable to the BUSINESS AGENT, GEO. T. ADAMS.

☞ Money Orders.

Our correspondents should remember that if they send money orders in a letter which contains the name of the sender, and the name of the person to whom the order is payable, there is NO SAFETY for their money. Any person may draw the amount named in the order, if these names are given.

Neither is it safe to send us your names in advance. Somebody may open the letter, get the names, and then wait till the order comes, and get that too.

Send on the order, not writing a word; make it payable to GEO. T. ADAMS, directing it to MILES GRANT, or World's Crisis. Then, in two or three days, write in the usual way, stating that you have sent the order, and what you wish done with the money obtained on the same, and it will be entirely safe. In the second communication be sure to give us YOUR NAME AND POST OFFICE ADDRESS. AG'T.

CLOSE OF THE YEAR.

This is our last visit for the year 1868. We hope our readers will be willing to throw a mantle of charity over our faults, and breathe a prayer in our behalf, that we may be more like Jesus during the remaining portion of our pilgrimage. No doubt we have often grieved the friends we love, but in the language of the poet, we would say:—

"Father, grant me grace,
That I may not grieve thee."

It is a fit time for reflection, and for heart examination. Let each reader inquire, am I indulging in any habit that I would not like to have upon me when Jesus comes? Am I in possession of any wrong feeling towards any living soul? Have I knowingly wronged any one by word or deed? If so, would it not be well to have it all made right before a new year begins? We lose nothing when we confess and forsake our faults. It is the only way by which we can be forgiven. How sweet the peace, how bright the hope, how pure the joy, when all is given up to Jesus, and we have no hatred or variance towards any living soul. Let us all try to begin the new year with a pure heart.

The year now closing has been a period of interest in the history of our planet. Important changes have transpired in many parts of the world, which have been noted in the news of the day; but there have been many sad scenes unheeded by the passing world, unknown and unfelt, except by the lonely widow, or some poor orphan child; whose ears were greeted last new-year's morn with the cheerful voice now hushed in death. Home has been desolated; sorrow's tears have flowed in the silent watches of the night; long, dreary hours have passed slowly away; the comforts of a happy home have been scattered to the four winds, and the mourner sings:—

"I'm weary of loving where all pass away,
The brightest and fairest, alas! cannot stay;
I look to the place where these partings are o'er,
Where death and the tomb can divide us no more."

Cheer up, lone pilgrim, we are almost there.

NAMES.

Some very good writers send us articles with only their initials attached. Such must not expect to see their contributions in the paper. Do not be ashamed of your names. Readers have but little interest in anonymous articles. A nameless article is not worth half price. Come, throw aside this false modesty, and be willing to pass for just what you are worth; and all will prize you higher than when ashamed of your own name.

WRITE PLAINLY.

It will be a great favor to our compositors if all who write for the Crisis will use good black ink, a coarse pen, and wide-ruled paper. Do not have your lines any nearer together than common ruled paper. Some attempt to get so much into a small space, that it is very difficult for the compositors to set from their manuscript. Take pains with your writing so that it can be easily read. Please remember this, and we shall be much obliged for the favor.

RULES OF LIFE.

Last year, we published some rules of life, which we hope were adopted by our readers, and carried out successfully during the year now closing. We republish them again, with the earnest request that the one now reading them will adopt and keep them to the end of the present life. They are as follows:—

RULES OF LIFE FOR 1869.

By the help of the Lord, I am resolved,—

1. To speak evil of no one.
2. To speak no unkind words to any one.
3. To bear every thing patiently.
4. To avoid all joking.
5. To forgive every one.
6. To return good for evil.
7. To judge no one.
8. To allow no evil imaginations.
9. To give one-tenth of all I receive.
10. To do all to the glory of God.

BAD HABITS.

Dear reader, will you not break that bad habit, and not allow it to accompany you into the year 1869? Part with it now and for ever. You have borne the burden already too long. Like Bunyan, look to the cross of Christ, and ask Jesus to remove the grievous load. Bad habits are very unsafe companions, if we purpose to be ready for the coming of Jesus. It is Satan's object to lead all into some bad habit, bind him firmly, and then persuade him that it does him good; though it might injure others. This is especially true of tobacco and intoxicating liquors, as well as all other stimulants and narcotics. Will it not be well, from henceforth, to eat and drink to the glory of God?

DRESS.—Our readers will find in this paper a part of a very sensible article on "Dress," from the pen of John Wesley, selected by Bro. Thomas J. Whitecar, Philadelphia.

A NEW HEART.

Are there not some of our readers who need a new heart? Why not go to Jesus and ask him for it as a new-year's gift? He would delight to do it for you, if you would only let him. Will you consent? Come, decide now to be a christian, and let Jesus take off the heavy load of sin, and become one of his loving disciples. No time is so good as now. Do not delay. You will be an infinite gainer. Why hesitate? Decide at once, and then write us, and publish the glad tidings to the world. Will you? Say yes, by the help of the Lord I will be one of Jesus' friends.

THE FREE METHODIST.

The Free Methodist, of which Bro. A. A. Phelps was connected in the editorial department, is earnest in the defense of a pure christianity; much in advance of most religious journals. It is published by the same denomination as is the Earnest Christian. Both are published in Rochester, N. Y.

The following platform of principles, published in the Free Methodist, we most heartily adopt:—

"The Free Methodist is devoted to the promotion of pure Bible religion,—the promulgation of pure Bible truth.

The Free Methodist is opposed to slavery, serfdom, and aristocracy, in all their forms.

The Free Methodist is opposed to balls, lotteries, oyster suppers, fashionable parties, etc., gotten up to obtain money for religious purposes. The appeal should be to man's moral sense, and not to his love of carnal pleasure.

The Free Methodist is opposed to the erection of extravagantly, costly and ornamented churches, with sold or rented pews for the accommodation of the rich to the inevitable exclusion of the poor, to whom the gospel is specially sent.

The Free Methodist is opposed to worshiping God by proxy, as is attempted to be done in churches that give their singing into the hands of a few trained performers.

The Free Methodist is opposed to the substitution of reading for preaching, and its usual accompaniment of standing or sitting in time of prayer.

The Free Methodist is opposed to secret lodges for moral or benevolent purposes, as it believes, in the words of Jesus, that 'whosoever doeth truth cometh to the light, that his deeds may be made manifest that they are wrought in God.'

The Free Methodist is opposed to intemperance in all its forms and phases, and in favor of the enactment of a most stringent prohibitory liquor law.

The Free Methodist is opposed to the pernicious literature of our time embodied in novels and the various publications designed to feed and develop the evil propensities of human nature, which is flooding the land and infecting our people, especially the young, with its deadly miasmatic influence.

The Free Methodist is opposed to ministers lording it over God's heritage, (1 Pet. 5: 3), or over one another; is in favor of ministerial equality, and opposed to the dogma that a certain class or order in the ministry, has, by divine right, the exclusive power of ordination; but believes that different offices may obtain among the ministry as seemeth best for the general good of the church after godly deliberations in her general gatherings.

The Free Methodist is opposed to the sentiment that ministers have, by divine right, exclusive authority in the government of the church, and in favor of fully incorporating, in due proportion, the lay element in all her legislative, executive, and judicial departments.

The Free Methodist is devoted to the promulgation of 'the truth as it is in Jesus,' and all who adhere to these principles, will find an ample opportunity for doing good in helping extend its circulation."

SPIRITUALISTS' GOD.

The Spiritualists' God is not the God of the Bible, but one of their own invention. The spirits deny that God is a personal being outside of man. Among other questions put to the spirits, as reported in the "Banner of Light," Aug. 8th, 1868, is the following:—

"Do you recognize him [God] as distinct and separate from human beings?"

Ans. "No, certainly not. I recognize him as one with them."

The spirit goes on to say:—"Spiritualists and spirits have no belief in the literal resurrection of the body of Jesus . . . He whose senses are so benighted as to believe it, is to be pitied."

Let us notice the contrast between this teaching of the demons and that of Jesus and his apostles. After Jesus was raised from the dead he said to his disciples:—"Behold my hands and my feet, that it is I myself; handle me, and see; for a spirit hath not flesh and bones as ye see me have. And when he had thus spoken, he showed them his hands and his feet." They then "gave him a piece of a broiled fish, and of a honeycomb. And he took it, and did eat before them." Luke 24: 39–43. In his revelation to John upon the isle of Patmos, he said: "I am he that liveth, and was dead; and, behold, I am alive for ever more." Rev. 1: 18.

Says the apostle Luke:—"He showed himself alive after his passion, by many infallible proofs, being seen of them forty days." Acts 1: 3. Says Peter: "Ye denied the Holy One and the Just, and desired a murderer to be granted unto you: and killed the Prince of life, whom God hath raised from the dead; whereof we are witnesses." Acts 3: 14–15. Paul testifies, "that Christ died.... and that he was buried, and that he rose again the third day according to the Scriptures." 1 Cor. 15: 3–4. The spirits deny all this, and thus make Jesus and the apostles false witnesses.

WHAT IS THOUGHT?

Thought, in the abstract, is no more an entity than is love, hatred, or pain; none of which can exist in action without a conscious living organism. When the brain is dormant there is no thought, love or hatred, or any other mental operations. Man can no more think without the brain organ, than he can walk without legs, or talk without the organs of speech. Hence derangement of the brain may produce derangement or suspension of thought. A case of this kind recently occurred in a store at Rutland, Vt., and is reported as follows:—

"Mr. Brooks Bennett, of Shrewsbury, Vt., while trading at a store in Rutland on Thursday, was taken with an epileptic fit and fell heavily on his face, apparently dead. Medical aid was summoned, and in about a quarter of an hour he revived. His first words on reviving were, 'What did you say that was a yard?' showing how the mind, when temporarily aberrated, resumed its journey at the place of its last halt."

In the case before us, suppose the man had not recovered from the fit, but had remained in it till death; when would he begin to think again? Certainly not till the resurrection of the dead, when the brain and the whole man will be restored to life and normal action again, just as Lazarus was raised from the dead, and again mingled in the society of his friends. No fact is more clearly established than that when a man's breath goeth forth, . . . in that very day his thoughts perish."—Ps. 146: 4. This point is so plain, so self-evident, it would seem that we do not need a revelation from the Lord to convince us of the fact, that "the dead know not anything."

"ENTER INTO THE ROCK."

Christ is compared to a rock. He is called the "Rock of Ages." All who hide in him are safe from the coming storm. He who has "all power" can not be moved. When he protects, none can harm. How pleasant to feel that he is our shelter and defense. The more fully we lean upon him the safer our position. His arm is all-powerful. Let us cling close to the Rock. These thoughts have been suggested by the following:—

"A long train of cars, fourteen or fifteen, were recently passing over the Allegany mountains, on their way eastward. They were crowded with passengers. As the iron horse snorted and rushed on, they began to descend, and needed no power but the invisible power of gravitation to send them down with terrific swiftness. Just as the passengers began to realize the situation, they came to a short curve cut out of the solid rock, a wall of rock lying on each side. Suddenly the steam whistle screamed as if in agony, 'Put on the brakes, put on the brakes!' but with no apparent slackening of the cars. Every window flew open, and every head that could be, was thrust out to see what the danger was; and every one rose up in their places, fearing sudden destruction. What was the trouble?

Just as the engine began to turn in the curve the engineer saw a little girl and her baby brother playing on the track. In a moment the cars would be upon them. The shriek of the whistle startled the little girl, and every one looking over could see them. Close to the track in the upright rock was a little niche, out of which a piece of rock had been blasted. In an instant the baby was thrust into the niche, and as the cars came thundering by, the passengers holding their breath, heard the clear voice of the little sister, on the other side of the cars, ring out, 'Cling close to the rock,!' Johnny, cling close to the rock!' And the little creature snuggled in, and put his head as close to the rock as possible, while the heavy cars whirled past him. And many were the moist eyes that gazed, and a silent thanksgiving went up to heaven.

"HE SLIGHTED ME."

There are some people who are very unfortunate in their mental constitution. If they do not receive special attention, they are tempted to believe that some one intended to slight them. They are naturally of a jealous disposition. Such people destroy their own peace and comfort, and render themselves disagreeable to others. The course they pursue is well calculated to produce the very thing they so much dislike.

The following from an exchange, sets forth this subject in its true light:

"There are some people always looking out for slights. They cannot pay a visit, they cannot even receive a friend, they cannot carry on the daily intercourse of the family, without supposing some offence is designed. They are as touchy as hair-triggers. If they meet an acquaintance in the street who happens to be pre-occupied with business, they attribute his abstraction to some motive personal to themselves, and take umbrage accordingly. They lay on others the fault of their own irritability. A fit of indigestion makes them see impertinence in everybody they came in contact with. Innocent persons, who never dreamed of giving offence, are astonished to find some unfortunate word, or some momentary taciturnity, mistaken for an insult. To say the least, the habit is unfortunate. It is far wiser to take the more charitable view of our fellow-being, and not suppose a slight is intended, unless the neglect is open and direct. After all, too, life takes its hue, in a great degree, from the color of our own mind. If we are frank and generous, the world treats us kindly. If, on the contrary, we are suspicious, men learn to be cold and cautious to us. Let a person get the reputation of being touchy, and everybody is under more or less restraint; and in this way the chances of an imaginary offence are vastly increased. People who fire up easily miss a deal of happiness. Their jaundiced tempers destroy their own comfort, as well as that of their friends. They have forever some fancied slight to brood over. The sunny, serene contentment of less selfish dispositions never visits them."

"HOLY GHOST DISPENSATION."

In "The Spiritualist," published in Cleveland, O., we find Spiritualism called the "Holy Ghost Dispensation." This is blasphemous. They might as well call rum shops and brothels nurseries of temperance and virtue. They also call their system of lies the "everlasting gospel." We do not think it possible for Satan to invent another system so directly opposed to God, Christ, and Christianity, as is Spiritualism; and thousands of church members are dabbling with it through the Planchette, or in some other way.

Under the head of "The Respectability of Spiritualism," we find the following in the Spiritualist of Oct. 24th, 1868:—

"Let us give ourselves no uneasiness about the 'respectability' of this child of the skies, which already claims notoriety in its youth, whether popularity or not. Some of its friends seem to be uncomfortably anxious about it, and to think it devolves on them to give it rank and position; begild, bejewel, and bedizen it in order to make it presentable to its associate seniors the religions of the past. 'It must,' say they, 'not fear to appear a little like Orthodoxy, although its heart may be vastly different; its garb must be something after the old style, or else people will be frightened away from all connection with it, and thus be shut out from the benefits it might give them.' They would pray verbally at the beginning of every lecture to an imaginary God, and hang on all the oratorical flourishes about him and his Son, that any Catholic could, and be sure and conjure up a double meaning; one for the conservative portion of the audience, and one for the reformers, provided they are well enough versed in allegory to make any sense out of it. They would make frequent reference to the Holy Bible, as if they really deemed it infallible, when they know well enough that a truth uttered by Tom Thumb is just as good as one found in the Bible."

Spiritualists are beginning to lay aside the hypocritical veil which has covered their hideous moral deformity. All they lack now is political power. Let them have that, and christianity would find in their hands no better protection than in the French Revolution, should it dare to expose their blasphemous system.

In the same paper, already noticed, we find the leading editorial speaking of Spiritualism as the "Incoming Dispensation" to take the place "of a departing and enslaving Christianity." He goes on to say:

"Spiritualism . . . is the only ism that permits you, without censure, to speak and act whatever you believe—not even requiring of you that you shall believe in the ministry of angels before it extends the hand of fellowship, much less that you shall admit the Personality of God, his Unity, or Trinity, the Divinity of Jesus, or the Inspiration of any Scriptures."

Is it not time for the soldiers of Christ to gird on the "whole armor of God, that" they "may be able to stand against the wiles of the Devil"?

THE SPANISH REVOLUTION.

The revolution in Spain is of much importance in its relation to the Pope, and the support of the Papal power in Europe. Spain has been one of the chief supporters of the Catholic power; but now it has thrown off the yoke, and she seems determined to preserve her independence, and be in bondage to the Pope no more.

A Paris correspondent says:—

"To me the most interesting aspect of the Spanish revolution, is its bearing on the rest of Europe, and especially on the great contest which is going on everywhere between the priestly party and their antagonists. You will probably have seen the Pope's various addresses to the world upon the occasion of the Œcumenical Council, and in particular his earnest request to Protestants, and to the non-Catholic world in general, to enter into communion with him. Take that letter, with the fact that the Œcumenical Council avows itself to be held as a sort of recognition of the principle that henceforth Church and State are regarded as separate and—this is not said, but is implied—antagonistic bodies; that Austria has flown into the face of the Pope; and Italy is in open rebellion against him; that France is a most slippery and questionable friend; and the Spanish revolution will show you that at the very moment when the temporal and spiritual powers are dissolving partnership in the worst and most violent of moods with each other, the last of the faithful—the only nation which professed to uphold the old principles in their full perfection and development—has seceded. I do not think the importance of this can be exaggerated; and I do think it possible that you in America may be specially tempted to undervalue its importance.

The papers are calculating 'that more than twelve millions of reals are sent annually from Spain to Rome to pay for dispensations and bulls, and in the form of Peter's pence.' It is very certain that this item of the Papal revenue will be very greatly diminished in future years. The present state of things in Spain is indeed a terrible blow for the Papacy. Spain was the one portion of Europe which the Pope thoroughly relied upon. Should the ruler of France fail him, and French bayonets be no longer forthcoming to prop him upon his temporal throne, at least faithful Spain would come to his aid, and would send a strong contingent to his assistance. The twelve millions of reals, too, must have formed no insignificant item of the Papal revenues. Now all this is at an end. His revenues are diminished, and the Papal prestige is decreased by this wholesale defection of 'most Catholic' Spain. Italy is openly hostile, Spain will henceforth be neutral, Austria is indifferent, France is his sole dependence, and France, in the event of war, and with Italy offering alliance at the price of Rome, France is indeed a very weak staff upon which to lean.

QUESTIONS.

BRO. GRANT:—I wish to ask a few questions. Why is the angel Michael called Christ? See Dan. 10: 13. It appears he is "one of the chief princes," or angels of Persia, who came to help Gabriel. He was the angel who had charge of the Jewish church. In Dan. 12: 1, the same angel came to stir up a time of trouble, and wake the dead, etc. He is not necessarily Christ. In Jude 9, this same angel disputed with the Devil about the body of Moses, and said, "The Lord rebuke thee." Why, if he was the Lord himself? If the "man-child" (Rev. 12: 4–7) was Christ, he could not be Michael that fought the battle for Christ against Pagan Rome. Is there another set of angels brought to view in Revelation to do the same work that the angels did in Daniel's day; i. e., to deal with the nations? If not, then the judgment angels are the same, and Michael is one of the chief princes still, and will do a work after Christ comes.

As Christ has had charge over the angels since he went up (see 1 Pet. 3: 22), why may he not send his angel Michael and wake up the dead, instead of doing it himself? This idea harmonizes with Matt. 24: 31. Before he comes to earth, he is only in sight with his bride, or first fruits, to judge the world. Angels cannot give immortality, but they may wake up the dead to judgment.

THE BIBLE READERS MAP.

We have just received by express a "new map of Palestine and Bible Lands" with the above title, published by H. H. Lloyd & Co., N. Y. It is a beautiful and valuable map, such as we have long desired to see, and have not before found. Its size—29 by 39 inches, makes it convenient. Its value and beauty, on stiff, heavy paper, mounted on rollers, cloth bound and varnished, make it an almost indespensible ornament for the study, sitting-room, or parlor. The countries of Palestine, and the lots of the tribes of Israel, are given in various colors, the ancient and modern names of all known places, a table of seasons, weather, and products, the journeys of Israel from Egypt, the world as known to the Hebrews, the travels of the apostle Paul, the city of Jerusalem, the altitudes in English feet on the locality, texts of Scripture cited where any of these places are mentioned in the Bible, together with many other items, which make it a map much to be desired by all Bible students, old and young, and admired by all who obtain it. Sold by S. M. Green, Westerly, R. I., Publishing agent for New England.

A SUGGESTION.

BRO. GRANT:—In an article in the Crisis of Dec. 9th, 1868, entitled "Orthodoxy, Torment, Hell-fire," "J. M. T." gives quotations from the theological writings of several eminent men to show "to what lengths acknowledged orthodox divines have been in describing the miseries endured by the damned." I believe that such articles may be useful in calling attention to the hideous features of the doctrine of eternal torment; but I would suggest that if such quotations were always accompanied by a reference to the book, section, chapter or page from which they were taken, they would be much more useful, as well as more satisfactory to the reader.

In the article referred to, the quotations from Dr. Watts, Jonathan Edwards, Richard Benson, President Edwards, and C. H. Spurgeon, were unaccompanied by any references to show from what work they were taken. So terrible and inhuman are the sentiments in these passages, that not a few are ready to say, "I cannot believe these great and good men could ever utter such abominable language." "Why did not the writer tell us where they may be found?" Of the quotations given by "J. M. T.," I have the reference to only one that he did not give. The passage from Spurgeon is taken from "Sermons, Second Series," pp. 277–8. It does appear almost incredible that such men as Dr. Watts, Edwards and Benson, should ever utter the language attributed to them in these quotations. If "J. M. T." would give the references to these passages, he would confer a favor that would be appreciated by many readers of the Crisis.

S. S. Brewer, in his interesting tract on "The Immortal Soul," gives several quotations without references. This I consider an important omission. People of the "orthodox persuasion," when they cannot meet these hateful assertions with their approval, are very apt to deny their authenticity. If we can show them the original, or cite them to it, we gain the point. A certain minister was very curious to know where these quotations given by "J. M. T." could be verified? and I was only sorry, when he asked me, that I was unable to satisfy his curiosity.

"WHAT TREE SHALL BE ROOTED UP?"

Jesus says,—"Every tree which my heavenly Father hath not planted shall be rooted up." Then if our heavenly Father did plant the tree of "Speculative Free-Masonry," the inference is a fair one that Free-Masonry, as an institution, shall not be rooted up; and the "Brethren of the Mystic Tie" need fear nothing from the recent inquiry into the merits of the Order.

I was glad to see the editorial notice of "Secret Societies" in a late Crisis, and also the article showing the manner in which the Wisconsin brethren view the matter. Was pleased also with the mild nature of their proposed discipline to be adopted in reference to such of their associates as have been ensnared in the meshes of this pretended "handmaid of religion." I am confident very few young men could be drawn into the snare, were they duly informed beforehand; and those already entrapped may be rescued by the Christian means proposed. Shall our young men be informed of the nature of the oaths and obligations to be imposed on them in the "Lodges," "Chapters," and "Encampments"? Say nothing now of the flummery practiced in secret; are not the unwary entitled to a knowledge of the wicked oaths to be imposed, in season to escape them? You may say they are not binding. So Herod might have said, and have saved the life of John the Baptist. But the Fraternity teach the binding nature of their oaths; and if a strong-minded christian, after taking the oaths, finds they bind him to nothing but to come out like Peter and "weep bitterly" over his profane swearing, will he do it? Yes, I know of hundreds of such; but shall men be drawn into such a sin without previous warning?

I am "posted up" in this matter. Some forty years ago, I gave three years of close study to the investigation and publishing of the facts as then disclosed to the world. Thousands upon thousands of books, pamphlets and papers were then published and sown broadcast over the land; but not one of them is to be found now. I am at no loss to guess where they are secreted; but they can not be found in public or private libraries. I have not seen a copy of any one edition for thirty-five years! All of the most substantial points are, however, indelibly engraven upon a retentive memory; and I can repeat by the hour, from the rising of the sun to the going down of the same.

I do not suppose the Court Records of four counties in N. Y. are all destroyed, where the truth of these disclosures was established by sworn testimony; but such records are not accessible to the readers of the Crisis. If a nook in the columns of that paper is allowed me, I will give a few facts which came under my own observation, and the truth of what I relate shall be substantiated by such men as Judge Merrick, of Mass.; Rev. Moses Thatcher, of North Wrentham; Rev. Dr. Reed, of Reading; and the names of other men as distinguished in the past generation for integrity, veracity and worth, as any that can be cited in the present generation.

I have been astonished late to see so many young men drawn into that institution, which I believe is so soon to be "rooted up." Young ministers, and largely of the Methodist order, have been drawn in. All such go free of charge, and are much flattered with the expectation of an extension of their influence; but let them beware of the snares of the adversary. It behooves especially all such as are "waiting for the coming of our Lord" to stand aloof, and strive to be found without "spot or wrinkle or any such thing." D. C.

REPORT OF EAST CONN. AND R. I. CONFERENCE.

Met at Lafayette, the first Wednesday in October, per adjournment. Conference was called to order Oct. 8th, P. M. Elds. A. Durfee (chairman of conference), E. Bellows, J. J. Northup, E. R. Wood, J. W. Thomas, E. Card, C. Dixon, J. T. Dixon, and Sister E. Crumb were present. Treasurer's report received. But very few churches reported. Westerly reported by letter. They are still striving, against opposition and persecution, to maintain the standard of truth. Have two prayer-meetings a week, preaching every Sunday by Brn. Durfee, Northup, Dixon, Champlin, Noka, and Sr. Crumb. Prayer-meetings very interesting. Three have been baptized since last conference, and one united with the church. Membership sixteen. E. Slocum, Clerk.

Lafayette church. Orally reported by N. A. Ennis. Preaching two Sundays a month, one weekly prayer-meeting, and on Sunday when there is no preaching. But very little interest. No Sunday School. Some trying to serve the Lord.

North Scituate church reported by R. R. Knight. Attendance very good; but the injunction, "Speak often one to another," is sadly unheeded. Have preaching nearly every Sunday. Sunday School continues, but with less interest on the part of many. R. R. Knight and J. V. Perkins delegates.

Exeter church reported by E. R. Wood. He preaches there once a month. Looks more encouraging.

Rocky Brook church. Two weekly prayer-meetings. Interest increasing. Membership forty-two. A Sunday School of seventy members is in working order, and doing much good.

Preachers' reports show that they are pressing forward the gospel of the kingdom. E. Bellows has been with the tent. "Our work is being finished."

The conference earnestly request that every church belonging to the conference will report (by letter greatly preferable), as this is one great object of the conference. This report has been greatly delayed on account of sickness and pressure of business.

TO THE FRIENDS OF THE STAR OF HOPE MISSION.

We have been waiting for some time for an opportunity to write a letter of cheer to our dear Sister Smith, for whom our sympathies were more deeply than ever enlisted, when we saw how her heart was depressed, and her hands weakened, by the evil surmisings, jealousies, and slanders of those who ought to have been engaged in better business.

We had no fears, however, for the fate of the mission. We had confidence that He who had so abundantly sustained and blessed the Star of Hope Mission in the past, would not now abandon it, and suffer it to sink by the hands of those who were professedly fellow laborers in the great harvest field. We very much doubt if those who have been busy in circulating evil reports designed to undermine confidence in its directors, would be willing themselves to stand at the helm, and labor as untiringly, sacrifice as fully, and suffer as patiently as has our dear sister. They might covet the notoriety, the honor, the love, but not the privations and hardships.

We said in the commencement, that we had been waiting for an opportunity to write words of cheer to Sister Smith; but others have meanwhile stepped in and done far more than we possibly could, and now she needs no word from us to her. God bless our beloved Sister Hastings for her truly encouraging, cheering letter; and then, best of all, there comes forward one who not only says the encouraging words, but puts her own shoulder to the wheel, and lifts the burden too heavy for the weary, discouraged one, while with a glorious pen she writes words that have the ring of the true metal, and thrills hearts all over the Union. God bless Sister L. S. M.

And now to our object in writing this. We sometimes take liberties with private letters their writers never intended, but thus far when we have done so, it has worked for the good of the cause we designed thereby to aid.

A letter from L. S. M. is before us, borrowed of the sister to whom it was written, who kindly loaned it for our present purpose. We draw upon these personal letters sometimes, written for no other eye than the one addressed, because in them revelations are made such as they would not make to the public from feelings of delicacy, and also for fear of having their motives impugned. Now just look in upon this Mission home, where "a grand piano, purchased with mission funds," sends forth its melodious notes to entertain missionaries (who profess to be doing the Lord's work), and solicit favor to carry it forward, while "costly furniture" adorns the mission rooms, and "nice houses are purchased and rented"—if so be "Madame Rumor," with her busy tongue, speaks truly. (Whether the board table, manufactured by Sister Smith's own hands, is included in this inventory, we know not.) But to the letter. Sr. M. says:

"Let me tell you how we felt that are at home. Well, sister, we laughed and we cried at the sight of what you enclosed, and you will not wonder at it when I tell you what our circumstances were.

"Sister S. has been gone a month, and I suppose has found money unusually hard to collect. . . . She got enough within ten dollars for this month's rent, and sent it to us, to make up the balance, thinking that donations came in as usual, which they have not. However, the rent was raised, some coal was bought, and when a few more bills were paid, and our table kept a few more days, there was but one dollar left in the treasury. We held on to it just as long as we could; tried every way to do without spending it till we saw another come; but it must go at last, and we said to each other, 'What shall we do?' We resolved to live on one meal a day, if necessary, and do it cheerfully.

"On Wednesday night was our preaching meeting; but I said, no preaching till this thing is laid on the hearts of our people, and they pray about it. Therefore the time was occupied as a prayer-meeting in behalf of the mission.

"Would that you could have listened to these children, and heard them tell Father how it was, and beg him to send us some means. We would not write Sister S., for we knew not how she might be off, and we could not burden her. But we could tell the Lord that night, and resolved to do so again the next day, especially at noon, which was done. O what a trial of our faith; but I had no doubt, after I heard these sable children pray. I supposed we might have to wait a day or two, and some hearts would be moved to send us a dollar each, till our treasury was replenished. But oh, just like the Lord! he moved upon your dear hearts first, and on opening your envelope, out came more than we could have asked or thought to receive. . . I assure you that your money was never better spent than when offered for this people. I should like to tell you of the good results of keeping open such a house as this. The Lord is here indeed. I know you would say so if you were in some of our meetings; and very often when there is none the house is full of glory." . . .

I will not extract any more from this letter. We trust that those who have the means, and live in their comfortable homes, where they have food and raiment in plenty, and are not obliged to run hither and thither in the streets of the city, among the poor and suffering, day and night, till worn down and weary with toil, will contribute to those whom the Lord hath called to this mission work, so that they can have a sufficiency at least to sustain them in their labor of love. If half the hard work expended on this mission was put into secular business to gain property, these toilers might be independent of charity and lay up a treasure for future days.

It is what I cannot understand, why Sister Smith has not a right to the comforts of life, such as all except the extreme poor do have, just as much as any other one; and surely she deserves them far more than the lazy drones who live solely on the labors of others. We do not believe she must go hungry, or half-clothed, because she is a missionary. Certainly she is doing far more to save souls than many pastors who live in stone-front houses, and fare sumptuously every day. But enough; we will say no more. M. D. W.

DREADFUL PRAYER-MEETING.

Some prayer-meetings are spoken of as animated, or interesting, or affecting; but the one now in question must have some stronger name. It has not yet been held; but we know what its character shall be. The account of it may be found in the 6th chapter of Revelations: "And they said to the mountains and rocks, fall on us, and hide us from the face of him that sitteth upon the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb." This is the prayer that will be offered.

There will be a great multitude at that Prayer-Meeting. Many prayer-meetings are thin, very thin; few are present. Not so the one before us. All that have ever treated the Lamb of God unworthily, and persisted in it—all that have neglected the great salvation, will be present. Millions have done this; millions more may do it. They will all be at the meeting!

Distinguished persons will be present. Those who ride upon the high places of the earth usually have little or nothing to do with prayer-meetings. They leave such things for the poor and unlearned. But they will come to this meeting. We have express mention of this: "And the kings of the earth, and the great men, and the rich men, and the mighty men, said, 'Fall on us,'" etc. They may never have been in a meeting where there was prayer before; but they cannot stay away from this.

There will be great emotion in that prayer-meeting. There will be strong crying and tears; there will be weeping and wailing, such as might melt the adamant! It will not be dull, and drowsy, and formal. There will be feeling—the deepest feeling. Those who could not bear the very name of religious excitement once, will then be the most strongly excited of all. Ah! they must have most terrible emotions when they are led to ask the rocks and mountains to fall on them. How dreadful must be the sight of him that sitteth on the throne, and of the Lamb, when the fear of them inspires such a prayer as this.

They will all pray. Some prayer-meetings have but two or three—a few at most—that take any part in them. The mass often take little or no decided interest in the object of the meeting. Not so of this meeting. The record runs, that not only the great men above mentioned shall pray, but "every bondman, and every freeman." And then the nature of the object before them decides that all will pray, viz.: God on his throne of judgment, and the Lamb in his wrath! The whole assembly being inspired with the same terrible emotions of dread, will be constrained to offer the same prayer.

And what a prayer. It is not addressed to God or to the Lamb. They never received any spiritual homage from the multitude present at this meeting. They so ill-treated the blessed God, and carried it to such a desperate length, that they now despair of any mercy. Hence the dreadful prayer before us. They would have any thing but an interview with God. "Hide us from the face of him that sitteth on the throne." They beg to be crushed beneath the mountains, rather than meet the frowning face of God! They choose that the rocks should fall on them and grind them to powder, rather than encounter the wrath of the Lamb!

All who persist in treating Christ unworthily are on their way to this meeting. The multitudes who are now doing so think little of this matter; yet every day spent in sin is hastening them toward it. They refrain from prayer now, but they will pray at this meeting.

Reader, are you on your way to this meeting? You hope not. But it is your manner of life, and not your hope, that determines this. If you have little or nothing to do with prayer in this world—if no domestic or secret altar is fragrant with the incense of your supplications—if you are now averse to draw nigh to God, you are certainly on your way to this meeting. If you do not pray here, you will assuredly pray there.

"Awake, thou that sleepest, and arise from the dead, and Christ will give thee light." The great God commands you to believe on him whom he hath sent, even Jesus. Will you comply at once? Will you do it now?—Christian at Work.

Correspondence.

From Sr. A. E. Smith.

DEAR BRN. AND SRS.:—It is not because I have forgotten my promise to write you through the Crisis, that I have not written; but because I have had many things to which I must attend, many questions to answer, and many to ask, and so my time has been taken up. We had our quarterly meeting here the first Sunday in December, and had a blessed time. The second Sunday we had our quarterly meeting at Hackensack, and the Lord was with us there also. That mission is doing nicely under the charge of Bro. Boynton and wife. They have a fine Sabbath School. The day school is doing well. The church is prospering under their hands. Bro. Boynton is a good preacher, and a consistent christian, and by his daily walk and conversation has won the affection and confidence of his flock, and the Lord is giving him souls for his hire.

The Lord is with us here at the Star-of-Hope Mission. From three to seven have been forward for prayers for several nights in succession, and some converted. Our revival goes on month in and month out. Not only in the mission-rooms, but in the neighborhood, among the sick, there has been quite a number converted on sick beds; some that have been ill a long time, and nothing seemed to do them any good. But as soon as they were converted, they were healed in body, and one of them the next night was brought to the mission, and now comes every night without help, and testifies to the mighty power of God, that he is able to heal both soul and body. Not only is the Lord bringing sinners to the altar for prayers, but he has blessed the whole membership with a deeper work of grace. There is an earnest seeking after holiness of heart.

"Nearer my God to thee; Nearer to thee,"

is the heart-felt prayer of every one; and he does not let his people seek him with all their heart, long before they find him. So in this case quite a number have sought and obtained this best of all blessings, which is to have an abiding witness continually that we are all the Lord's. It is not a mere profession, but their daily walk, thus far, shows they enjoy all they profess. Praise the Lord. How easy it is to work for God, when we are like the branch in the vine; Christ in us, and we in him. What a blessed relationship! O it is blessed to feel that we are just now all the Lord's, entirely given up to him; and then, things that used to hurt and wound our feelings, and annoy and worry us, are all calmed down, and we can feel to rest in God, because he loves us and cares for us. Bless his holy name. O thank the Lord for grace to overcome all things that would overcome us, and to be sanctified through the truth, which makes us wise unto salvation. It is blessed to be in a place where we are willing to be led by the Lord, having no will of our own. Remember, it takes a hot fire sometimes to melt us soft enough for the Lord to mould us, and fashion us, and make us just right; but though the fire is hot, he will let nothing be consumed but the dross. He can do it, bless his name. He can make us just the men and women we ought to be. He can give us grace for all our needs. We can find in him a satisfying portion, a whole Savior. How sweet the name of Jesus sounds to a believer's ear. Well might the poet say,

"Give me a calm and thankful heart,
From every murmur free;
The blessings of thy grace impart,
And make me live to thee.

Let the sweet hope that thou art mine
My life and death attend;
Thy presence through my journey shine.
And crown my journey's end."

Thus the Lord is with us in the Star-of-Hope Mission. Pray that we may continue thus. Yours in the highways and hedges,

ANNA E. SMITH.

New York, Dec. 17th, 1868.

From Sr. A. S. Wheeler.

BRO GRANT:—I have thought it might be well to say a few words in regard to prayer. We all know that prayer is the desire of the heart, expressed to one whom we think can grant it. We are all familiar with the command, and gracious promise, "Ask, and it shall be given you." This is a remembrancer oft quoted, but it is to be feared we often neglect a proper mental training, and do not stand where our prayers can be answered, because we deviate very much from the pattern set by our High Priest, wherein we are taught to say, forgive us as we forgive our debtors; which is virtually saying, forgive us not unless we forgive those that offend us, and forgive us in the same spirit in which we forgive them. We are expressly told, "If ye forgive men their trespasses, your heavenly Father will also forgive you; but if ye forgive not men their trespasses, neither will your Father forgive your trespasses." "Moreover, if thy brother shall trespass against thee, go and tell him his fault between thee and him alone; if he shall hear thee, thou hast gained thy brother." See Matt. 18: 15, 16, 17, etc. We find that Peter understood it, for he came and said "Lord, how oft shall my brother sin against me, and I forgive him, till seven times? Jesus saith unto him, I say not unto thee, until seven times; but, until seventy times seven."

In the course of the instructions given at that time, we are told of a king who reckoned with his servants, and forgave a debt of ten thousand talents to one because he had nothing to pay, and asked to be let off on time; but this same servant went out, and found one of his fellow servants which owed him an hundred pence; on whom he laid violent hands, and cast him into prison till he should pay the debt. Some of those who were cognisant of the fact told their Lord, who, after he had called him, said unto him, "O thou wicked servant, I forgave thee all that debt, because thou desiredst me; shouldest not thou also, have had compassion on thy fellow servant, even as I had pity on thee? and his Lord was wroth, and delivered him to the tormenters, till he should pay all that was due to him; so likewise shall my heavenly Father do also unto you, if ye from your hearts forgive not every one his brother their trespasses." Our teacher says nothing about waiting till our brother sues for forgiveness. It is a dangerous notion of some men, that they must wait till an offender repents, before they can forgive him; this is contrary to common sense. We cannot afford to lose the chance of reconciliation because another looks at it differently, and perhaps thinks there was no cause of offence. It is our privilege and duty to forgive all, and harbor no ill will, if we desire to be forgiven and reinstated in the love of God, and the communion of the Holy Spirit is the only way pointed out in the word of God. Oh that the light of life might illuminate our understanding, making us alive to the hope of eternal life, as exhibited in him who is the resurrection and the life, through whom I hope to be endowed with immortality at the resurrection of the just.

Your sister in Jesus Christ,

ANNE STANDISH WHEELER.

For the World's Crisis.

ROCHESTER.

This has been a very interesting week with us at Rochester. Tuesday night was one of the best meetings we have had; many promised to become servants of the Lord; some found pardon. Thursday we went to the conference in Honeoye, and found Sr. Jennings enjoying the service of Martha, as well as the "good part" chosen by Mary. Here we met Brn. Wendell, Newell, Taylor, Hobbs, Stephens, and others, in good cheer. They have fitted up a new hall, which was well filled with attentive listeners. One who had been a wicked man, who could neither read nor write, told of his joy since the tent-meeting at Baptist Hill. He said, instead of swearing and scolding, it was all praying and rejoicing at home. The wife called it glorification. I asked her if she loved the Lord? She said she had got it just so good as her husband, but she could not make it so good in talking.

We deemed it necessary to return to Rochester to the Friday evening meeting. We met one at the depot who had fallen. He said he had no comfort by day, and dreadful dreams terrified him by night. Why will men choose darkness and sorrow, rather than light and gladness? We found a good gathering at the hall, but did not have as free a time as the meeting before; still some new ones broke from the enemy's ranks to come to Jesus. Sunday, we labored under a severe pressure of the brain, caused by a jar which we received in being thrown from an open sleigh, and striking upon our shoulders. In the evening two new ones arose requesting prayers, and several more said they would seek the Savior. All seemed solemn and deeply interested.

My brethren, God is doing up his work of mercy for this world. We have no time to find fault with others, but should keep at work. "Work while the day lasts, for the night cometh when no man can work." It cometh! Its shades are upon us. The drying up of the Euphrates, to prepare the way of the kings of the east; the shaking of earth and sea; the fearful looking for of things that are coming on the earth; the swearing, the lying, the killing, the stealing, and committing of adultery, invite the controversy of God, and are imminent harbingers of his coming who shall reign in righteousness. Yours waiting,

H. PRATT.

TO THE CHURCHES IN MASS.

DEAR BRN.:—As our next conference is to be at Springfield, Jan. 13th, I wish to urge all to manifest an interest in it. It is the only way that we can work effectually together. The cause is bleeding. Let us take hold and help one another bear their burdens, and so fulfill the law of Christ. Wolves are not all dead yet. Come, Brn., let us hear from you, either by delegate or by letter. Let us know your wants and desires.

Dear Brn. in the ministry, be in earnest about the matter. Let us strive together, not for the mastery, but for the good of the church. Come one, come all. There is business of importance to be done, in which the church at large is more or less interested. Thy Bro.,

GEO. A. STREETER.

P. S.—Elder Ira Wyman, whose whereabouts is not known, is requested to be there and answer for himself. G. A. S.

The Young Pilgrim for Jan. 1st.

The number for Jan. 1st is full of choice and excellent reading for the young:—A beautiful piece of poetry—The King in his Beauty: the Pilgrim's Vision of the New Jerusalem. The Young Confessor; a very interesting story of a young christian teacher, and her trials and triumphs for Jesus. Two little stories of a boy and a girl tract distributor, and the good they did. Skating scene in Holland (with a cut.) The wonderful Star-Shower in Georgia—a fall of millions of meteors. The Vintage (with a cut.) Love for mother and Jesus. Winter. Stories for the Wee Ones—Little Dot and her Doll; The Child's Gospel. A happy New Year. A Snakery, or the evils of liquor selling. Answer to "How many ways to spell Chicago," etc., etc.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

Cable News.

LONDON, Dec. 22. The following dispatch, dated Constantinople, yesterday, is just received, and embraces the latest news from that quarter.

Dispatches from the East say many Russians are volunteering for the Greek service.

Dec. 23. The Morning Telegraph to-day prints a telegram from Berlin announcing that Prussia has called a conference of the great powers of Europe to settle peaceably the questions at issue between Turkey and Greece.

The report of the proposed conference on the eastern question is fully confirmed. The Vienna Press (government organ) says semi-officially that the plan originated with Russia, backed by Prussia, and that the scheme is favored by Austria and Italy. The effort to settle the question without bloodshed will undoubtedly be successful.

VIENNA, Dec. 28. The Grecians are fleeing from Turkey on account of the threatened war. Several families of fugitives have been received by the people of the province of Roumania. They have been warned, however, that they must preserve absolute neutrality in case of war on pain of expulsion.

PARIS, Dec. 28. The Paris Constitutionnel of this city, a semi-official Imperialist organ, publishes a telegram from Vienna to-day, announcing that the Sublime Porte will decline to adhere to the proposed conference if the terms of his ultimatum to Greece in the matter of Crete or internal questions are mooted.

MADRID, Dec. 27, via LONDON, Dec. 28. Emilia Costellar, the well known Republican, says that a Republic has been morally formed already in Spain, as the Republican party carried all the great cities in the country, except Madrid, at the late elections.

New York, Dec. 23. The London News gives the particulars of the recent submarine earthquake in the Atlantic. Capt Christi of the bark Euphrosyne relates that when his vessel was in latitude about 16 deg. 40 m. south, and longitude 4 west, the sky suddenly became overcast with dense black looking clouds, and in all directions was heard a noise resembling distant cannonading, while the sea became tossed and confused. To these signs of agitation another was added of peculiar significance. The compass vibrated largely and almost lost its polarity; a sure sign that a terrestrial disturbance of great extent and violence was in progress. Several large meteors shot out from the heavens; a phenomenon which can hardly be associated with the occurrence of submarine disturbance, unless we suppose that burning matter had been projected from some submarine volcano and that the flying masses were mistaken by Capt. Christi for meteoric bodies. Fish jumped out of the sea and struck against the sides of the ship, and the trembling of the vessel could be distinctly felt as well as heard. Both the last named phenomena point so distinctly to submarine action as to remove all doubt which might be suggested by the appearance of meteors. The intense heat of the matter thrown out in submarine convulsions invariably drives the fish away from the neighborhood, killing large quantities of those which happen to be near the outlet from which the burning matter is being erupted. Capt. Christi relates that the volcanic action of the sea continued during the night until sunrise, when the weather became clear and settled.—Herald.

St. Louis, Dec. 27. Rev. John Black of the Red River Relief Committee, reports that there are 484 families, comprising 2342 persons, who are in absolute want, and must receive assistance or starve. In addition there are several hundred others who will need assistance before spring. The buffalo hunters are returning empty handed, the fishing is a failure, and of rabbits, usually very plentiful in winter, not one is to be seen. He asks for 4000 barrels of flour and other supplies, to preserve the lives of these unfortunate people.

Passing Events.

The train from Montreal due at Portland at two o'clock Friday, the 18th, was detained ten hours by snow in South Paris. The snow is said to be three feet deep.

There were 1297 disasters to shipping on the northwestern lakes and rivers during the last season, and 322 deaths from explosions, wrecks, and accidents—a much larger number than any season before.

In Marion county, Texas, no less than twenty-seven murders were committed by the rebels during a recent week, and not one of the perpetrators was arrested.

A church fair in Augusta, Georgia, was enlivened by a knife and pistol fight between the friends of two lady candidates for the prize piano.

A woman in Binghamton, N. Y., has asked the authorities to give her a permanent berth in the jail, so that she cannot obtain liquor.

☞ A lady has recently died in Bristol, England, who, during a life of eighty-four years, had never tasted animal food, and enjoyed good health all the time.

The pews in Rev. Dr. Ellis's new church on Berkeley street, Boston, are valued at $150,000. Thirty of them, sold Tuesday night, brought $3300 in premiums.

Greece will adopt the system of decimal coinage on the first of January. The franc will be the unit.

It is stated, on unquestionable authority, that Mr. Gladstone contemplates the creation of some fifty peers, in case of his accession to the Premiership, to enable him to carry through the House of Lords the measures required to make the subversion of the church in Ireland.

The office of General, especially created for Gen Grant, is to be abolished this session of Congress, to take effect the 4th of March next. This will leave Gen. Sherman in command of the army, with the rank of Lieutenant General.

Notice.

The church in Worcester, Mass., if the Lord will, purpose to hold a protracted meeting, commencing Wednesday evening, Dec. 30th, and continuing day and evening through the week, and over the following Sunday. The object of the meeting is the diffusion of gospel light, and the salvation of our fellow men. A cordial invitation is extended to preachers, and all others who feel that God would have them come to this meeting, and labor with us in the cause of truth. Eld. J. Couch will be present, and A. A. Phelps is expected.

Mass. A. C. Conference.

To the churches in Mass., looking for the consummation of "our hope," greeting: Whereas, the time for holding the next quarterly session of our State conference is at hand; and whereas, the Bethel church in Springfield have requested said session to be holden with them, commencing Wednesday, Jan. 13th, to continue over the following Lord's day; therefore, an invitation is hereby extended to all the Advent churches in the State to send delegates to said session of the conference; also to preachers in this and adjacent States to join with us in one more effort for God. And may God add his blessing.

Per order, E. OWEN, Clerk.

Ministerial Conf. at Richmond, Me.

The sixth Ministerial Advent Conference will meet at Richmond, (Reed meeting-house), Tuesday, Jan. 12th, 1869, at half past six o'clock P. M. Preaching at a quarter past seven o'clock. Our preaching brethren are earnestly requested to report themselves, either in person, or by letter, and all preachers in the State, in fellowship with the conference, wishing to become members, are invited to signify their desire by writing to the Secretary before the meeting. Come with hearts filled with love, that we may advance the gospel of the kingdom, and work together for the salvation of the perishing.

N. G. REED, President.
L. F. COLE, Secretary.

Notice.

The Conn. A. C. Conference, which was noticed in the Crisis to be held in New Haven, Wednesday, Jan. 6th, 1869, is postponed until Jan. 27th, 1869. The church in New Haven are building a chapel, and it will not be finished until the 27th, and ready for the reception of the conference, at which time their hearts will be open to receive us with cordial welcome. We have some very important business to attend to at this conference, and we hope that every church in the State will send one or more delegates, and all the ministering brethren will be present. Let all pray that God will crown our efforts with everlasting good.

B. HITCHCOCK, President.

Maine Central Quar. Conference.

The next session of this conference will be held in the Academy, in West Gardiner, commencing Thursday, Jan. 7th, 1869, at seven o'clock P. M., and continue over Sunday. Come, brethren and sisters, let us go up to this meeting prepared to work for the Lord. Ministering brethren are invited. Those coming from abroad will inquire for James Spears, who will direct to places of entertainment.

W. A. KNIGHT, Secretary.

Notice.

The annual meeting of the Missouri Advent Christian Conference will be held at the Advent Christian Hall, corner of 5th and Biddle Streets, St. Louis, commencing Saturday morning, Jan. 2d, at 10 A. M., to continue over the Sabbath. A general attendance is requested, as the election of officers for the ensuing year, and other matters of importance, will come before the meeting. Brethren from abroad are cordially invited to be present at this meeting. In behalf of the Board,

HIRAM BEADLE, Secretary.

Notice.

The Lord willing, the adjourned meeting of believers in the speedy coming of the Lord, held at Bristol, Conn., on Nov. 5th, will meet in New Market Hall (junction of Broad and High streets), Providence, R. I., on Thursday, Jan. 7th, at seven o'clock P. M., and continue over the following Sunday. Brn. George W. Brown of Orrington, Me., William, N. Pile of Newark, N. J., and others, are expected to preach the word of life.

For the brethren, CALEB THOMPSON.

Notice.

There will be a protracted meeting and quarterly conference in West Gardiner, Me., on the evening of Jan. 7th, and continue over the Sabbath, and longer if thought best. Come, brethren and sisters in the Lord, to labor for the salvation of sinners. Call on James Spear. H. B. SEVEY.

R. I. and E. Ct.

This conference will hold its annual session at Bristol, R. I., commencing Wednesday, 2 o'clock P. M., Jan. 6th, 1869. I intend to be there this time. Come and see. H. F. CARPENTER, Clerk.

Notice.

The Lord willing, there will be a meeting in the Armory Hall, in Collinsville, Ct., commencing Jan. 5th, and continuing over Sunday and longer if thought best. Bro. B. Hitchcock and others are expected to be present to preach the word. For the church, J. L. WOOD.

New Hampshire State Conference.

The second quarterly session of the New Hampshire State Conference will be held at Melvin Village, N. H., commencing Thursday, Feb. 4th, and hold over the following Sunday. Let this meeting be made a special subject of prayer that God's blessing may be on his people, and that good may be accomplished. A. W. SIBLEY, Sec.

The third quarterly session of the State Conference will be held in Keene, N. H., commencing Feb. 25th, and hold over the following Sunday. Eld. J. Couch and others will be present to preach the word. In the meantime let prayer go up to God for Keene. A. W. SIBLEY, Sec. of Conf.

For the World's Crisis.

MY GOD.

When sickness mars this living soul,
 And grief corrodes my heart,
'Tis thou alone canst make me whole,
 My life, my health, thou art.

When anguish weighs my spirit down,
 And hope seems far removed,
I think of a most glorious crown,
 Bought by thy well-beloved.

When friends grow cold and fortunes change,
 Thou art unchangeable;
Though all men's plans are disarranged,
 Thine are immutable.

Though heaven and earth will pass away,
 Thy word will still endure;
Though all created things decay,
 Thy promises are sure.

O give me faith to cling to thee,
 For thou art all my hope;
O let me thy salvation see,
 For thou canst raise me up.

For the World's Crisis.

DRESS.

BY T. J. WHITECAR.

The Apostle Paul, in his letter to Timothy, presents to him the condition of the world in the last days. Read 2 Tim. 3: 1–6.

"For men shall be lovers of their own selves, covetous, boasters, proud, blasphemers, disobedient to parents, unthankful, unholy, without natural affection, truce breakers, false accusers; incontinent, fierce, despisers of those that are good; traitors, heady, highminded, lovers of pleasures more than lovers of God; having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof."

Dear reader, how plainly the apostle has marked out our days. Surely we cannot deny but that all these predictions exist in our days. If so, then these days must be the last days; but how few there are who take any notice of these things, but say that all things are as they were from the beginning. The last day is rolling on; wickedness is increasing on every hand; seducers are waxing worse and worse, deceiving, and being deceived. Still the cry is, There is no change, from professors of religion as well as the world.

The apostle, in speaking of the perils of the last day, says one of them is "pride." It exists not only among the ungodly, but with church people of all denominations. Professors of religion are following the fashions of the day; adorning themselves with gold and other trash; still they call themselves the followers of the meek and lowly Savior. May the Lord help those who have not yet fallen into this snare, to remain in the old path. Read John Wesley's sermon on "Pride." Text, 1 Pet. 3: 3, 4. "Whose adorning let it not be that outward adorning of wearing of gold, or of putting on of apparel; but let it be the hidden man of the heart, in that which is not corruptible, even the ornament of a meek and quiet spirit, which is in the sight of God of great price."

St. Paul exhorts all those who desire to "be transformed by the renewal of their minds," and to "prove what is that good, and acceptable, and perfect will of God," not to be "conformed to this world." Indeed, this exhortation relates more directly to the wisdom of the world, which is totally opposite to his "good, and acceptable, and perfect will." But it likewise has a reference even to the manners and customs of the world, which naturally flow from its wisdom and spirit, and are exactly suitable thereto. And it was not beneath the wisdom of God to give us special directions in this respect also. Some of these, particularly that in the text, descend even to the apparel of christians. And both this text, and the parallel one of St. Paul, are as express as possible. St. Paul's words are (1 Tim. 2: 9–13): "I will, that women adorn themselves in modest apparel: not . . . with gold, or pearls, or costly array; but (which becometh women professing godliness) with good works." "But is it not strange," say some, "that the All-wise Spirit of God should condescend to take notice of such trifles as these?" Things of so little moment; or rather of none at all. For what does it signify, provided we take care of the soul, what the body is covered with? Whether with silk or sackcloth? What harm can there be in the wearing of gold, or silver, or precious stones; or any other of those beautiful things with which God has so amply provided us? May we not apply to this what St. Paul has observed on another occasion, that "every creature of God is good, and nothing to be rejected?"

It is certain that many who sincerely fear God have cordially embraced this opinion. And their practice is suitable thereto; they make no scruple of conformity to the world by putting on, as often as occasion offers, either gold, or pearls, or costly apparel. And indeed they are not well pleased with those that think it their duty to reject them; the using of which they apprehend to be one branch of christian liberty. Yea, some have gone considerably further; even so far as to make it a point to bring those who had refrained from them for some time, to make use of them again; assuring them that it was mere superstition to think there was any harm in them. Nay, further still; a very respectable person has said in express terms, "I do not desire that any who dress plain should be in our society." It is, therefore, certainly worth our while to consider this matter thoroughly; and seriously to inquire, whether there is any harm in the putting on of gold, or jewels, or costly apparel?

But before we enter on the subject, let it be observed, that slovenliness is no part of religion; that neither this, nor any text of Scripture, condemns neatness of apparel. Certainly this is a duty; not a sin. "Cleanliness is, indeed, next to godliness." Agreeably to this, good Mr. Herbert advises every one that fears God:

"Let thy mind's sweetness have its operation
 Upon thy person, clothes, and habitation."

And surely every one should attend to this, if he would not have the good that is in him evil spoken of.

Another mistake with regard to apparel has been common in the religious world. It has been supposed by some that there ought to be no difference at all in the apparel of christians; but neither these texts, nor any other in the book of God teach any such thing, or direct that the dress of the master or the mistress should be nothing different from that of their servants. There may, undoubtedly, be a moderate difference of apparel between persons of different stations. And where the eye is single, this will easily be adjusted by the rules of christian prudence. Yet it may be doubted whether any part of Scripture forbids (at least, I know not any) those in any nation that are invested with supreme authority to be arrayed in gold and costly apparel; or to adorn their immediate attendants or magistrates, or officers, with the same. It is not improbable that our blessed Lord intended to give countenance to this custom when he said, without the least mark of censure or disapprobation, "Behold, those that wear gorgeous [splendid] apparel are in king's courts." Luke 7: 25.

What is then the meaning of these Scriptures? What is it which they forbid? They manifestly forbid ordinary christians, those in the lower or middle ranks of life, to be adorned with gold, or pearls, or costly apparel. But why? What harm is there herein? This deserves our serious consideration. But it is highly expedient, or rather absolutely necessary, for all who would consider it to any purpose, as far as is possible, to divest themthemselves of all prejudice, and to stand open to conviction. Is it not necessary, likewise, in the highest degree, that they should earnestly beseech the Father of light that, by his holy inspiration, they may think the things that are right, and, by his merciful guidance, perfect the same? Then they will not say, no, not in their hearts (as I fear too many have done,) what the famous Jew said to the christian, "Thou shalt not persuade me, though thou hast persuaded me."

The question is, What harm does it do to adorn ourselves with gold or pearls, or costly array, suppose you can afford it? That is, suppose it does not hurt or impoverish your family? The first harm it does is, it engenders pride; and where it is already, increases it. Whoever narrowly observes what passes in his own heart, will easily discern this. Nothing is more natural than to think ourselves better, because we are dressed in better clothes. And it is scarce possible for a man to wear costly apparel without, in some measure, valuing himself upon it. One of the old heathen was so well apprized of this, that when he had a spite to a poor man, and had a mind to turn his head, he made him a present of a suit of fine clothes.

"Eutrapelus cuicunque nocere volebat,
Vestimenta dabat pretiosa."

He could not then but imagine himself to be as much better, as he was finer than his neighbor. And how many thousands—not only lords and gentlemen in England, but honest tradesmen—argue the same way? Inferring the superior value of their persons from the value of their clothes!

"But may not one man be as proud, though clad in sackcloth, as another is, though clad in cloth of gold?" As this argument meets us at every turn, and is supposed to be unanswerable, it will be worth while to answer it once for all, and to show the utter emptiness of it. "May not, then, one in sackcloth," you ask, "be as proud as he that is clad in cloth of gold?" I answer, certainly he may. I suppose no one doubts it. And what inference can you draw from this? Take a parallel case. One man that drinks a cup of wholesome wine may be as sick as another that drinks poison; but does this prove that the poison has no more tendency to hurt a man than the wine? Or does it excuse any man for taking what has a natural tendency to make him sick? Now to apply this: experience shows that fine clothes have a natural tendency to make a man sick of pride. Plain clothes have not. Although it is true, you may be sick of pride in these also, yet they have no natural tendency either to cause or increase this sickness. Therefore, all that desire to be clothed with humility, abstain from that poison.

Secondly, the wearing of gay or costly apparel, naturally tends to breed and to increase vanity. By vanity, I here mean the love and desire of being admired and praised. Every one of you that is fond of dress, has a witness of this in your own bosom. Whether you will confess it before man or not, you are convinced of this before God. You know in your hearts it is with a view to be admired that you thus adorn yourselves; and that you would not be at the pains, were none to see you but God and his holy angels. Now the more you indulge this foolish desire, the more it grows upon you. You have vanity enough by nature; but by thus indulging it, you increase it a hundred fold. O stop! Aim at pleasing God alone, and all these ornaments will drop off.

Thirdly: the wearing of gay and costly apparel, naturally tends to beget anger, and every turbulent and uneasy passion. And it is on this very account that the apostle places this "outward adorning" in direct opposition to the "ornament of a meek and quiet spirit." How remarkably does he add, "which is in the sight of God of great price:"

"Than gold or pearls more precious far,
 And brighter than the morning star."

None can easily conceive, unless himself were to make the sad experiment, the contrariety there is between the "outward adorning" and this inward "quietness of spirit." You never can thoroughly enjoy this while you are fond of the other. It is only while you sit loose to that "outward adorning," that you can in "patience possess . . . your soul." Then, only when you have cast off your fondness for dress, will the peace of God reign in your hearts.

(To be concluded.)

THE FINAL JUDGMENT.

How grand is the narrative of the judgment, given by the Savior to his disciples as they sat on the Mount of Olives. There is nothing in human literature like it. It is a quiet description of the greatest event which will ever take place in the history of the world. The final judgment! What sublime and terrible ideas are suggested to the mind by this phrase! How have poetry and painting striven to depict the scene! Yet Jesus describes it as calmly as if he were talking about an ordinary occurrence. There is no effort, nor uncertainty. Surely he who could thus calmly discourse about so wonderful an event in the future, must have been what he claimed to be, the Son of God.

The Son of man shall come in his glory. What a contrast there will be between his first and second coming into the world! At his first coming he appears as a helpless babe in a manger, dependent upon the care of a human mother for existence, and surrounded by the beasts of the field. His surroundings were so humble that men did not recognize their Savior. Not thus will he appear when he returns to earth; he shall come in his glory. He will come as the judge of the world. He shall sit upon the throne of his glory.

The holy angels will be his attendants. All the angels. Those holy beings who dwell in the presence of God, and minister to the heirs of salvation. The best of the universe will accompany him. What a grand assemblage it will be! What mind can conceive the scene of the omnipotent Judge on his throne in the midst of the holy angels!—Before him shall be gathered all nations. The human mind cannot grasp the vastness of the multitude. With all our powers of intellect we can go but a little way in reckoning the multitude, until we are lost in confusion. All who have ever lived upon the earth. We cannot conceive how such a gathering can take place.

The gathering will be for the purpose of a final and public decision upon the state of each one. He shall separate them one from another, as a shepherd divideth his sheep from the goats. By an unerring decision the state of each one will be fixed forever. Beyond that point there will be no more offers of pardon; no Savior for the lost. The sheep shall be set on his right hand and the goats on the left; to the one he will say, "Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world;" to the other, "Depart, ye cursed, into everlasting fire, prepared for the devil and his angels."

What deep solemnity the final judgment gives to life. The shadow which the coming judgment casts before settles down upon all things. Men expect to meet the Son of man, and give an account of the deeds done in the body. There is a dread of one day, however much of mirth and carelessness there may be in the lives of men. All things will be made right. The righteous will be rewarded, and the wicked punished.

The public showing of each man's character will turn upon works. The decisive question will be, not what hast thou believed? but what hast thou done for me? How many hungry have you fed? how many naked have you clothed? how many sick and in prison have you visited? Good works will be to an assembled universe the proof of the existence of faith. How important it is for us all to live so that we may be found in peace of him, and hear the wellcome, "Well done, good and faithful servant, enter thou into the joy of thy Lord."—Selected by Chloe Lankton.

For the World's Crisis.

THE LORD IS GOOD.

We know this by experience, brethren and sisters. We know, blessed be his name, that he is good by the love which he has "bestowed upon us, that we should be called the sons of God." How good he has been in calling after us by his Holy Spirit, and bidding us come and live! How good he is in giving us light and truth in his blessed word, and sending forth his Spirit into our hearts, "whereby we cry, Abba, Father"! How good he is to tell us of the time in which we are living, that we may escape from the storm and tempest, and find a place of safety in the eternal Rock of Ages.

O bless his name! I love him to-day, and know that he is my strong tower, my sun and shield, and that he will give me grace and glory, and withhold no good thing from me if I walk uprightly.

He knows how to succor us when we are tempted, and in all our trials and sorrows he knows how to bless each bitter cup. "When the enemy shall come in like a flood, the Spirit of the Lord shall lift up a standard against him."

O let us trust in him, and do good. Then shall our light break forth as the morning; the Lord will keep us as the apple of his eye, guide us continually, satisfy our souls in drought, and we shall be like a watered garden, and like a spring whose waters fail not.

"The Lord is good! O praise his name;
Down from the realms of bliss he came,
To seek and save that which was lost,
Although his precious blood it cost.

I'll praise him now, and when he comes,
I'll praise him with immortal lungs;
Help swell the sound from shore to shore,
King Jesus reigns forevermore."

Sangerville, Me. OLIVA BROWN.

For the World's Crisis.

A WORD TO MINISTERS.

Dear brethren in the ministry, I have a few thoughts to communicate to you, which have frequently occupied my mind, since I entered upon the work of an evangelist. How shall I state them? I will raise your attention by repeating statements of brethren and sisters which have often greeted my ears: "I like to hear Elder —— preach, but I think he feels himself above common people; he never visits us. He always stops at one place and there remains while in town." "I do not go to hear Elder —— as much as I used to, he never comes to see us, he goes to the house that suits him best, I suppose, and stays right there until he leaves town. I think he don't care much about us; he only associates with a fashionable few." "I like to have Elder —— come to preach to us, he is not too big nor too lazy to go round among the people, and be social." "I have no money to give the preachers who can't call on us; but always stop at one place, where they fare best, I suppose. I used to pay them something, but I think they only want our money, and don't care much about us." "I like Elder ——, and love to hear him preach, but he don't visit. More good can be done by visiting than by preaching. Many will not go out now to hear him preach, because, they say, he does not sympathize with the poor, the sick, the wandering and erring. He never calls on them, but when Elder —— comes, he goes all round the neighborhood to see how the people get along. They all like him, and think more of his preaching than of Elder ——'s, although he is not so able."

Well, brethren, the above is a sample of much more. Please ponder and re-read it, then question yourselves whether you give occasion for such remarks. But just here I hear a flood of words in justification of your not visiting. One, or many say, "I only stopped one night in town, and was too weary to do more than preach as appointed, and go on." This reason may be apology enough. Others say, "I only staid two nights and one day and preached three times." Yes, but you could certainly have visited two families and spent a night in each, talked with all the members of the household, and prayed at the family altar, or erected one if there was none. Perhaps double the amount of good would have followed these visits. Some would visit four or five families, and pray with them in that time.

But I hear another say, "I have no gift, or faculty, to visit. I cannot do it." Would it have been so with you if you had borne the cross, sacrificed a little pride, or self-gratification, or indolent feeling, to benefit others? Perhaps a little, or much self-denial, would have brought God's spirit to increase your gift; especially if you had earnestly prayed for help. Others, who were as deeply afflicted for want of a gift as you say, have become very gifted and useful in visiting, by prayer and self-denial.

But I hear another class quote the words of Christ, as an end of argument, "Into whatsoever house ye enter, in the same house remain, go not from house to house." Ah! Then you are on a mission to Jews only. That commission gave liberty to teach only the Jews. You are under orders not to preach to a Gentile or a Samaritan. Please put up with the Jews only! No, no, brethren. The second commission is the one we preach under, and it gives us liberty, rather commands us to "preach the gospel to every creature" of man whom we can reach. The older I grow, the more I see the importance of visiting. Let us visit, visit, visit. Even then the people will find occasion to complain of us.

There are often good reasons why we can not visit as much as we would, which the people do not stop to consider. Often, we are over worked to sustain our families, because we get but a small sum for preaching, and we are too weary to visit or preach as the people need. Often we are for the same cause so stinted for time, that we can stop only long enough to preach and say "good by." Sometimes we become so wearied in preaching that we are unfitted for visiting, after a week's hard labor and a Sunday's toil. These are events and circumstances we can not avoid; but let us not neglect to visit; and to visit the poor, the sick, the wandering, the afflicted, the illiterate, especially, when we can do it. There are many of the ministry who do this kind of evangelizing, and they do a noble work. We write the above to persuade all who can to do likewise.

Affectionately yours for the gospel work,

I. C WELLCOME.

LAY-LABOR.

During a late Christian Convention in New York, one very important topic agitated was this: How can preachers assist the lay-members of the church to arouse from their slumbers, and go to work in the vineyard of the Lord? On this subject, Theodore L. Cuyler has made some excellent remarks in the New York Independent, from which we make the following extract:—

"First of all, work yourselves. A lazy minister has no call from God. Work yourself, for industry is contagious. Work yourself, and then you will gradually draw around you those active spirits who have a mind to work. Preach often to your people on such texts as "neglect not the gift that is in thee," "be not weary in well-doing," "as ye go, preach," and similar trumpet-calls to labor. Preach these personal messages to them from God. Set before them the motives to work, and then point out the hundred methods of personal activity. Put on a good load, and then whip up the horses that can pull; there are weaklings in every church, that will never draw a pound.

Never do anything that it is possible to get a layman to do; and you will, even then, have quite enough of your own on your hand. For instance, a pastor ought not to lead a church prayer-meeting. The elders, or the deacons, or those members who are qualified, should perform this service in rotation. It is the people's meeting, and they are responsible for it. If it thrives, they get the growth; if it fails, they suffer the loss. If we ask more from our people, we shall get more. It is a terrible mistake to do any man's work for him. The leader of a social meeting ought not to allow any one to hide behind a post, if he can spy him and burn him out.

When a new convert joins the church, he should be called out into active service at once, before his limbs have time to stiffen. Nor should any such person who writes, either on profession or by letter, be allowed to leave the church officers or examining committee until he, or she, have promised to undertake some definite duty, either in the Sunday-school, tract-visitation, the temperance-reform, or some kindred line of christian labor. In my own church, I have heard as many as two hundred different voices in public prayer and speaking within a single year. It is better to call out the "weaker brethren," and to bear with their feeble performances, than to let them petrify (or putrefy) in silent inactivity.

Rotation in office is a prime principle in developing the lay-element of a church. Give all a chance for both the honor and the toil. No elder, or deacon, or warden, or any church-officer should be elected for more than two or three years. An excellent officer can be re-elected, and an inefficient one can be quietly dropped. New blood is thus constantly being introduced into the executive department. As I have said once before, in another quarter there is many a Presbyterian church in which it has required but a slight breeze to unseat an installed pastor; but it takes a small earthquake to move an elder or deacon who is elected and installed "for life." Every church should be districted among the lay officers for personal oversight and visitation. And the officers should meet very often for counsel, and for scrutiny into the individual interests, standing, and necessities of the whole congregation. 'If Mr. A—— is the right person to reach Mr. B——, then Mr. A—— should be 'detailed' to call on Mr. B——, and converse and pray with him. A kind, faithful letter, too, has often been blessed to the awakening of a soul. Why cannot every layman who has common sense, and the love of Jesus, be a Harlan Page?

The laity of every church should meet often; not 'for fun' and festivity, but for true devotion, or work, or christian sociality, or for all combined. A mere 'sociable' that has no definite purpose in it soon loses its attractiveness; when church-members work together, they soon grow intimate. In my large congregation we have half-a-dozen meetings of different kinds each week. Those city churches who have cut down their devotional meeting to one a week have committed (in our humble judgment) a capital error. Why should God's people ask for five nights for business, for visiting, for concerts, and other entertainments, and then condense the whole church intercourse at the mercy-seat into a single hour or two? The laity that prays most, works most. The glorious appetite for Christ, for communion, for the conversion of souls, grows by what it feeds on."

OUR REST.

Notwithstanding the word of God declares this to be a state of unrest, and our own experience corroborates the same, yet oh, how prone to make this our rest, forgetting, because it is polluted, it shall destroy us, even with a sore destruction; forgetting Jesus says, "Set your affections on things above, not on things on the earth"; and "Lay not up for yourselves treasures upon earth, . . . but lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven." "Seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness, and all these [necessary things] will be added." O how prone to seek every thing else first. O Lord, forgive us, is the prayer of the less than the least of all saints. It is well for us that our way is hedged up to ruin, that occasionally a wave of sorrow rolls over us, causing us to remember it is written, "Arise ye, and depart; for this is not your rest"; causing us to cling closer to Jesus, crying, "Lord, save, or I perish." TOO TRUE TO MAKE PUBLIC.

Last winter, a son of one of our Advent brethren attended a Sabbath school, conducted by the Congregationalist church. They were about to have a public exhibition or concert, and engaged their scholars to prepare to recite such pieces as they might wish to commit to memory. This son concluded to commit and give in the concert the poems written by Bro. Lombard, on church fairs and levees a snare of Satan, which we published, entitled, "An Admonition."

Preparation day came, when all the school appeared, to give their performances before their teachers and managers, on trial, before appearing in concert. When his turn came, the boy gave the poems in good, clear, undaunted style, in the church which was guilty of the crimes and sins therein set forth in such strong and cutting rhyme. Dismay and chagrin marked the visages of the managers; yet there was no remedy for them on that occasion, and they bore the rebuke with modest silence. But they took care to notify the boy that he need not repeat the performance in public concert. It was therefore chalked off, which gave it a wide-spread notoriety, for all wanted to know the nature of the forbidden piece. I. C. WELLCOME.

HOW MANY WOULD BE LEFT?

A writer in the Church Union asks the following pungent questions:

When the following classes are taken out of our churches, how many will be left?

All who will not pay their just debts?

All who are hypocritical?

All who are deceitful, and talk about others behind their backs?

All who go in debt without a prospect of paying the same?

All who are proud and scornful, holding themselves above their fellow-men, and shunning those less fortunate than themselves?

All who worship money more than they do their Creator?

All who speculate off of the ignorance of others?

All who are tattlers?

All who sell intoxicating liquors to make money?

All who think more of a wicked rich man than they do of a pious poor one?

All who oppress the poor?

All who make long prayers for the sake of being seen and heard of men?

All who are vain and self-conceited?

When these, and a good many others that could be mentioned, are taken out, the "church" will be left almost without members. The religion of Jesus does not have any of the foregoing effects. It makes the true convert cheerful, hopeful, and charitable, disposed to visit the widow and orphan, and to keep unspotted from the world. It does not make one proud and scornful, but on the contrary, makes one desirous to do good, to be meek and humble, and to be kind to all, as opportunity may offer. Oh! that we had less pretension in our churches, and more genuine christianity!

MASONRY.

The first Grand Lodge in America was holden at Boston, on the 30th of July, A. D., 1733, known by the name of "St. John's Grand Lodge," and descended from the Grand Master of England.

The Massachusetts Grand Lodge (also holden at Boston) was first established on the 27th of Dec., A. D., 1769, and descended from the Grand Master of Scotland.

On the 19th of June, A. D., 1792, a grand Masonic Union was formed by the two Grand Lodges; and all distinctions between ancient and modern Masonry abolished.

SERMON FOR LITTLE FOLKS.

Did you ever see the sun rise? First, the sky looks gray in the east, then pink, and gradually grows lighter and brighter, and the light spreads over the heavens, and we see objects more plainly, until the sun rises and the day dawns. The sun rises higher and higher until noon; then passes slowly down the western sky and sinks out of sight, and the light gently fades away until all is dark again. Did you ever stand upon the seashore and watch the tide come in? Wave after wave rolls along, each a little higher than the last, until the tide is fully in, then they come just as fast but not as high, and the water recedes from the shore and goes back to the ocean, leaving the land dry. Did you ever plant a flower, or a potato, or a kernel of corn, and watch it after it came up? And as the sun shone upon it, and the rain watered it, did you notice how the little leaves came out and grew larger and larger, and then a bud which by and by unfolded and a flower appeared? And after it had budded, and blossomed, and borne fruit, the leaves turned yellow and red, and dropped off, or hung dry and brown upon the black, dead looking stalk; and when summer had passed away, and winter came with cold winds, and ice and snow, the withered stalk fell to the ground and decayed and went back to earth.

And thus it is with you and I, and all mankind. In the beginning of life we are like the first streak of gray in the east, or like the little plant when it first bursts from the earth; but we grow as we receive the blessings of our heavenly Father, and our minds grow lighter and brighter as the waves of life flow on, until we reach the noon of day, when the tide commences to recede, our strength begins to fail, and the night of death closes upon us. You, my child, are now in the morning of life.

When night comes, we know that in a few hours day will again dawn; and when the tide flows back, we know that soon it will return; and when in the autumn the rosebush fades, and drops its leaves, and seems to die, we know that when spring comes, it will live again, and again be covered with leaves and blossoms. And thus it is with us. We die, but by and by the trump of God will call the sleeping millions from their graves, and we shall live again.

The rosebush will live again next spring, but in the autumn it will again die, and then live another spring. But it is not so with us. After we live the second time, we shall either live forever, or die "the second death," and never live again. The sun will shine no brighter on the rose next summer than it did last; but if we rise from the grave to receive eternal life, our life will be much brighter than this life has been.

Sometimes the wind blows so hard that it breaks the branches from the rosebush, and tears the flowers in pieces; and sometimes a worm gnaws its way into the stalk, and eats the life of the rose so that it withers and dies; and sometimes great trouble comes upon folks, and breaks their hearts, and it seems as if it would tear them all to pieces; and sometimes sickness like a worm eats away their lives, and they die before the day of life is over. It may be so with you and I. But after we get immortality, there will be no storms in the garden where we shall dwell, and no clouds to darken our day. We shall live in sunlight throughout all eternity.

Do you want that life? We read in the Bible, "Blessed are they that do his commandments, that they may have right to the tree of life." And if you and I do as God tells us in his Word, we may eat of the tree of life and live forever. AUNT SARAH.

FEEDING THE PIGEONS.

Some years ago a man left some money to the city, directing in his will that at two o'clock every day, in one of the public squares, all the pigeons should be fed. Now, perhaps, you may think that pigeons do not know how to count, and cannot tell the difference between two o'clock and four o'clock, or between a quarter before two and a quarter after two. Well, I do not suppose that they can tell the time by looking at the large clock, or that they can count; but this I know that they can tell when their dinner is ready as well as any of the children who read this paper. A large bell,—and it is a very large one,—strikes the hours, and a smaller one strikes the quarters. Thus the little bell says one, two; then the great bell says one. That means two-quarters after one, or half-past one. By and by the little bell strikes one, two, three, and the big bell strikes one; that means three-quarters after one, or, quarter before two. But pigeons do not mind that at all. In a little while the small bell say one, two, three, four. Then I saw crowds of pigeons coming in all directions, over the houses, through the streets and lanes; and by the time the big bell had struck one, two, a great number had collected, and they kept coming for about a minute. After they had picked up their dinner, they flew away, and paid no more attention to the big bell or the little bell, although they kept on striking the hours and the quarters just as before. No more pigeons came until two o'clock the next day. Can any of the children tell how the pigeons know when the clock strikes two? And are the little readers of this true story as punctual to their duties as these pigeons?—Child at Home.

A LITTLE BOY'S PRAYER.

More than thirty years ago, a godly minister, illustrating the efficacy of prayer, related the case of a little boy with a sore hand which had become so bad, that the physician decided it must be amputated to save the boy's life. The day was fixed for the operation. On hearing this, the boy went to a retired spot in the garden, fell on his knees, and begged God for Jesus' sake, to save his poor hand. The next day the physician came and examined the hand, when, to the astonishment of all, it was found to be so much better, that amputation was unnecessary. The hand got quite well again, the little boy grew up to be a man, "and," continued the minister, holding up his right hand, "this hand can now be shown to you as a proof that God does indeed answer prayer."

THE ECHO.

Stephen had never heard anything of the echo, and accordingly one day when he was out in the meadow, he cried out, "Hurrah, hurrah!" Immediately, in the nearest woods, he heard a voice sound out "Hurrah, hurrah!" He was very much astonished. At last he shouted, "Where are you?" The voice cried, "Where are you?" He answered back, "You are a foolish boy!" "Foolish boy!" echoed back from the woods.

Now little Stephen became very angry, and still harder he began to shout nicknames into the wood, all of which were echoed very faithfully back again. Then he ran into the wood, and sought all through it for the supposed boy, but he could find nobody. Stephen ran home, and complained to his mother how a bad boy had concealed himself in the wood, and had called him names.

The mother answered, "This time, my dear little boy, you have betrayed yourself, for it is yourself whom you accused as the 'bad boy;' you have heard nothing but your own words, for as you have often before seen your face in the water, so now you have heard your voice in the wood. Had you spoken in friendly words, then, my little Stephen, friendly words would have echoed back to you again."

So it is always; what we suppose wrong in the conduct of another is mostly only the echo of our own. If we treat every one kindly, we will be treated kindly; but if we are rude and uncivil, we are entitled to expect no better in return.

CHRISTMAS HYMN.

Children, on this Christmas morn
 Let us tell the story
How the Christ on earth was born,—
 Christ, the King of glory;
How an angel rent the skies,
 Down the bright way winging,
'Mid the shepherds' wild surprise
 Joyous tidings bringing;

How they left their flocks at night,
 On to Bethlehem speeding,
There to see a wondrous sight,
 Grandest thought exceeding,—
See the Lord of worlds on high
 Cradled in a manger,
'Neath a human mother's eye:
 E'er was vision stranger?

Bow, O shepherds! bow and sing;
 Praise him, wise men, kneeling;
Chant, O angels! on the wing,
 Happy chorus pealing;
Round the earth enslaved by sin,
 Round the broad creation,
Shout the tidings,—Christ has come,
 Come for man's salvation.

Children, let us hail the dawn,
 Join our hearts and voices;
On this hallowed Christmas morn,
 Heaven with earth rejoices:
To each other, o'er and o'er,
 Tell the oft-told story,
How the Christ on earth was born,—
 Christ, the King of glory.

THE LITTLE DRAWER.

"Where did you get your orderly habits?" I asked of a lady who never had to waste a moment in looking for things out of their place.

"When I was four years old," she answered, "mother gave me a little drawer to put my clothes in. 'Make it your business, my dear child,' she said, 'to keep that drawer neat and tidy. Let me never find it in disorder.'

"Once she sent for me to come home from a party of little girls, in order to put away a pair of stockings carelessly left on the floor. And I used sometimes to think mother was hard on me; but now I see I owe my good habits to the care I was made to take of that little drawer when I was four years old."

You see how early habits are formed. It is never too soon to begin a good one.—The Child's Paper.

ENOUGH FOR BOTH.—A little sparrow lighted upon a trough where a horse was taking his feed. "Horsie," said the little sparrow, timidly, "let me pick a little, only a grain or two, and you will still have enough."

"Help yourself," said the horse to the sparrow, "help yourself; there's enough for both you and me."

And so they ate together, and neither the one nor the other suffered from hunger; and when the warm sunshine came, and swarms of flies began buzzing around, the sparrow killed them by hundreds, and so the horse was well paid.

POLITENESS.—"How are you, my dear?" said a minister to a little girl where he called in. How do you think she behaved? Did she put her finger in her mouth, and hold down her head without saying a word? No, indeed! She looked up cheerfully, and said in a sweet voice, "I am well, I thank you." And when she retired, observing that the minister looked toward her, she very neatly bade him good evening, and slipped off to her room. That little girl was less than seven years old. How do you act when any one speaks to you?

LAZY BOYS.—A lazy boy makes a lazy man, just as sure as a crooked sapling makes a crooked tree. Who ever saw a boy grow up in idleness that did not make a shiftless vagabond when he became a man, unless he had a fortune left him to keep up appearances? The great mass of thieves, criminals, and paupers come to what they are, by being brought up in idleness. Those who constitute the business part of the community—those who make our great and useful men, were taught in their boyhood to be industrious.

BE TIDY.—"Now, my son," said a kind mother to her boy, "be tidy, fold up your night gown again: I must have it done neatly." That little boy has grown up to be a man. A friend said to him one day—

"How is it you get through so much work as you do?"

"Method, method," was the reply. "I am now reaping the fruits of my mother's lesson—'Be tidy!'"

RULES FOR READING.—Better to read one good book carefully, than to read ten carelessly. Be slow to begin to read a book, if it is likely you will not have time to finish it. Be careful how you spend time in reading books which are not worth reading. You had better throw away money than time, for time is worth more than money.
